Dumfries.—The annual Exhibition and Dinner of the Royal Highland and Agricultural Society took place in this town on Tuesday week. The DUKE of MONTROSE presided at the meeting, and was supported by about 1000 gentlemen, including the Duke of Buccleuch, the Earl of Selkirk, the Marquis of Queensberry, the Earl of Traquair, &c. After the usual loyal and complimentary toasts, Mr. HOPE JOHNSTONE, M.P., proposed the "Royal Agricultural Society," to which Mr. ROBERT NEILSON responded. He said that in all societies of this manufacturing country it was found that their prosperity was promoted by a system of co-operation; and agriculture was an art to which that system might be most profitably applied. He alluded to that partnership between landlord and tenant, in which the capital of the one and the practical skill and enterprise of the other might advance the productiveness and capabilities of the soil, and go far to render this kingdom independent of other countries for the production of its grain. That partnership embraced two parties—the capitalist, who might be called the sleeping partner, and the practical man, who might be called the active partner, and he conceived that to both these parties a scale of duties was equally applicable. The duty of the landlord combined all the permanent improvements of the farm, and these included draining, suitable buildings, and good roads. As to the former, that of draining, they had already heard at a former meeting, an experienced gentleman, who detailed his views, guided as they were by sound judgment; and no one could doubt that it was the means of permanently increasing the productiveness and value of the land. As to the expense, the opinion was gaining ground in England, that it was decidedly and solely the work of the landlord. It was the opinion in England, he repeated, that draining was the work of the landlord; but it was equally true that the landlord ought to be paid for it.—Mr. BEAMISH, of Cork, returned thanks for the Royal Agricultural Society of Ireland.—The DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH returned thanks for the "Successful Candidates."—The CHAIRMAN then called upon Mr. Smith, of Deanston, to give the toast next on the list—"Agriculture, Manufactures, and Commerce."—Mr. SMITH said that the relation of this great community might be fitly divided into three heads—the political, social, and business relations. As regards the first, it was a strict rule of this society that no political matters should be introduced; and he was, therefore, saved the trouble of dilating upon it. He might, however, utter this sentiment, that it was the duty of the political government of the country to study to divide their favours between both classes of the community equally, so that the benefits might be shared by both classes. In our social relations there were great changes going on, which, he believed, would confer important benefits. At one time the manufacturers of this country had a position in the social scale of too little importance; but by their enterprise and industry they had improved their station. The landed interest was now beginning to see the benefits which they derived from the enterprise and energy of the merchants and manufacturers; and now wherever they went they were met with a more kindly feeling, and had more civility and attention paid to them than formerly. He looked forward to great changes being effected by the introduction of the railway system, which would facilitate intercourse, and tend to make the inhabitants of the country become, more and more, one great family. Railways would facilitate the transport of the food raised by the agriculturist to the consumer, and assist the farmer in bringing foreign manures to aid his cultivation. In their business relations great changes were going on; every day, indeed, brought them forth: but he had a strong impression that neither great interest could prosper without the prosperity of the other: and by that mutual prosperity alone could they arrive at the great height, which he was convinced this country was rapidly approaching. Some excellent remarks had been made by Mr. Neilson on the relations betwixt landlord and tenant. It was necessary that they should act together for the improvement of the soil; and for their own mutual benefit. Manufacturers had of late years made very rapid progress; and he could give details of their success in increasing production, and in cheapening the cost of that production, which would astonish them. He could content himself with giving a single example of what had been done by manufacturing enterprise and a liberal expenditure of capital. Thirty years ago, the price of one yard of cotton shirting in the Manchester market was from 8*s.* to 3*s.* 6*d.*; since that period, by the application of improvements in machinery, and a better arrangement of their business system, an equal quantity of cloth could be produced for 6*d.* They would see from this what could be done by the application of skill and industry to cheapen production; and the effect had been chiefly attained by increasing the quantity of produce, and being enabled to employ fewer persons in the production of that greater quantity. This was an example for the agriculturists to follow and attain the same results. They had certainly done a great deal in improving the cultivation of the soil, and in producing a larger quantity of grain from the same ground; but they would require to do a vast deal more before they could come up to the condition in which the manufacturing interests of this country now were. He must tell the agriculturists that they were not so open in their expenditure for the purpose of producing a given end as they ought to be. They were too prone to look to the cheapness with which they could get an operation performed. It was better to attend to its efficiency in the first place. For instance, in draining their land, they were too apt to search for the cheapest method of doing this. Economy was all very well, but it ought to be a secondary consideration compared to getting the drainage efficiently and properly done. That was the first thing to be considered, and then get it done as cheap as possible; but there was no economy in looking to cheapness alone. Looking forward to the improvements which were yet to be made in agriculture, he would earnestly impress upon those engaged in that pursuit the propriety of testing the novel schemes which were brought forward. They should not be so blinded as to throw cold water upon them, but give everything a fair trial before they pronounced it useless. It should ever be recollected that many of the most important inventions had at first been neglected and kept out of sight.—Mr. MAITLAND, M.P., proposed the toast of "The Tenantry of Scotland." That man was very ignorant indeed of the social history of his country who did not know how much the national character of Scotland depended upon its tenantry. He was far from intending to undervalue the influence of science upon agriculture; but he claimed for the tenantry a valuable character, which furnished material for the operation of modern scientific improvements.—Mr. ELLIOT, of Hardgrave, briefly returned thanks in name of the tenants, for the honour which had been done them.—Calls from all parts of the house then arose for Mr. AITCHINSON, of Menzion, who was received with great applause. He said he would have been guilty of discourtesy had he not obeyed the summons; but he wished they had listened longer to his friend Mr. Elliot, or some other who had higher claims, or a more local connection than he had. But as he had often on previous occasions, at meetings of the Highland Society, returned thanks for this toast, he hoped he would be permitted to thank Mr. Maitland sincerely and repectfully for the honour which he had paid not only to themselves but their ancestors, who lived in times when the application of science to agriculture was unknown. Their chairman had observed that although he was no stranger to Scotland, he was a stranger to this part of the country. He (Mr. Aitchinson) would take the liberty of congratulating his grace that he had crossed the Highland border—as his countryman Rob Roy was wont to call it—for the first time, under such favourable auspices. Had he come here three years ago, he would have found the farmers excited by feelings which might have made them remind his Grace, and those of his order, that the day seemed coming when the farmers—unless they were to be superseded—would require to lean upon a more substantial reed than liberal speeches. Happily, however, that day had not arrived; and whatever might be the complaints of the wheat growers in the south, he would not deny that the farmers, in this district, were participating in the general prosperity of the country; and although the harvest had not been altogether such as would satisfy the husbandman, there had been no check to the prosperity of the trading classes, with whom their interests were permanently bound up. Political subjects were very properly, as Mr. Hope Johnstone had observed, kept entirely in abeyance in meetings of this Society, but whatever opinions there might be, he was satisfied that to this complexion they must come at last—that prosperity in Lancashire was prosperity in Dumfries-shire. They were all now agreed, or must come to agree, whatever were their political opinions, that it was in vain for them to fatten their stock if they could not send them when fattened to remunerating markets. And these markets were only to be had where the trading classes were congregated together. The consuming power of the masses to take of the food which the farmers could send them depended upon their wages; and the rate of these wages again depended upon the prosperity of the manufacturers who employed them. While he, as a Scotch farmer, conceded these things, he hoped it would not be denied that the prosperity of the country was equally indebted to the agricultural interests, flowing from the abundance of our home produce, arising, no doubt, from the late favourable seasons in part; but, he contended, still more from the wonderful stride which science, applied to all departments of rural economy, had made, and which, as Mr. Smith had well said, has not only tended to fertilise the soil, but also to improve the climate; and where, in many instances, the patriot's claim had been established, to make three grains grow where only one grew formerly; or rather, he might say, making grain grow where nothing grew before available to the interests of man.—The Marquis of Queensbury then proposed "A good Show at Inverness in 1846."—Mr. Trotter, sheriff-substitute of Dumfriesshire, then proposed "The Peasantry of Scotland," and was loudly cheered.—Sir W. Jardine, Bart., of Applegarth, proposed "Prosperity to the Agricultural Chemistry Association."—The Chairman then gave the last toast of the evening, which was well known to all, viz., "Horn, Corn, Wool, and Yarn."

Sporting.

NEWMARKET SECOND OCTOBER MEETING.

Monday.—Handicap Sweep, of 20 sovs each, 5 ft, &c., for 3 yr olds and upwards. 9 subs. Mr Phillimore's Skeleton, 4 yrs, 7st 7lb, beat Mr Worley's Example, 4 yrs, 8st 10lb, Mr Payne's Sir Francis, 3 yrs, 7st 7lb, and 3 others. Won by half a length.—Match, 100, h ft. Lord Miltown's Duc an Durras, 7st 11lb, beat Duke of Bedford's Captain Phebus, 8st 7lb, by a neck.—First Class. £50 for 2 yr olds; colts, 8st 7lb; and fillies, 8st 5lb. Sir J. Hawley's Fugitive beat Lord W. Powlett's c by Montreal, dam by Dr Syntax, Duke of Rutland's f Alexa, by Cæsar, and 5 others. Won by a length.—Second Class. £50 for 2 yr old colts, 8st 7lb, fillies 8st 5lb. Mr John Day's The Hero beat Lord G. Bentinck's b c Terrier, Mr Payne's f Repeal, and 5 others. Won by half a length.—Sweeps of 10 sovs each, 2 yr olds, 6st 7lb; three, 8st 4lb; four, 8st 12lb; five and upwards, 9st 2lb. Lord Exeter's f by Beiram, out of Manto, 4 yrs, beat Lord Oxford's bl c by Clearwell, out of Fidelity, 2 yrs, Sir J. Hawley's Alamode, 4 yrs, Lord Albemarle's Nell Cook, 2 yrs, Lord G. Bentinck's Nereus, 3 yrs, and Mr W. Etwall's Spanish Ox, 5 yrs. Won by a length.—Match, 200, h ft. Duke of Bedford's Minotaur, 8st 10lb, beat Mr Gully's St Lawrence, 9st 1lb, by half a length.—Post Match, 300. Duke of Bedford's c Prologue, 8st 7lb, beat Lord Glasgow's f by Bay Middleton out of Impertinence, 7st 12lb, by three lengths. £50 for 3 yr olds, 7st 7lb; four, 8st 7lb; five, six, and aged, 8st 12lb. Mr Cooper's Event, 3 yrs, beat Lord Verulam's Maynooth, 3 yrs, Mr. Death's Misdeal, 6 yrs, Lord Chesterfield's Stitch, 3 yrs, Lord G. Bentinck's Longitude, 3 yrs, Mr. Way's b g Sir Harry, 3 yrs, (h b), and Mr Francis's Alexandrina, 3 yrs. Won by a length.—Match, 500. Mr Clifton's Nottingham, 12st 8lb, beat Captain Campbell's Crœsus, 10st 8lb, by a length.—Post Match, 500, h ft, 8st 7lb each. Lord Chesterfield received from Lord Exeter.—Match, 100, h ft, 8st 2lb each. Lord Stradbroke's Idas received from Captain Daintree's c by Liverpool.—Match, 500, h ft. Mr. Greville's Alarm, 8st 9lb, received from Mr. Gully's Old England, 8st 4lb.—Match, 200, h ft, 8st 7lb each. Duke of Bedford's Black Cat received from Lord Exeter's f (dead) by Beiram.—In consequence of an accident, Discord could not run at these races. He was, with other horses, at the Shoreditch station of the Eastern Counties Railway, and considerable time was occupied in bringing up the trucks; the horses, meanwhile, had to walk up and down the slip of a yard used as a cabstand, and Discord, unfortunately stepping over an old and imperfectly filled-up drain, the ground gave way, and his hind legs fell in up to the hocks. Both limbs were dreadfully lacerated, and he was found to be so lame that it was impossible to send him to Newmarket.

Tuesday.—Royal Stakes of 200 sovs each, 120 ft, and 25 only if declared, for 3-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 2lb. Mr. Phillimore's f Lady Anna beat Duke of Bedford's c Leopard, and Duke of Portland's c by Bay Middleton. Won by a head.—The Cesarewitch Stakes of 25 sovs each, 15 ft, with 300 added by the Grand Duke Cesarewitch. Mr. Watts's Baron, 3 yrs, 7st 9lb, beat Lord Exeter's Wee Pet, 5 yrs, 6st 13 lb, Mr. Drinkald's Vol-au-Vent, 4 yrs, 7st 7lb, and 26 others who were not placed. Won very easily by a length; Wee Pet following him home, and obtaining the second place; Vol-au-Vent struggled on to the end, and was placed third; the mare beating him cleverly; Plantaganet was fourth, Intrepid, Boarding-school Miss, and Ruff next, wide, but tolerably well up. The pace very good all the way.—Match.—200, h ft. Duke of Bedford's Oakley, 8st 10lb, beat Sir J. Hawley's Bishop of Romford's Cob, 7st 10lb, by a length.—Clearwell Stakes of 30 sovs each, 20 ft, for 2-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 5lb. 31 subs. Lord E. Russell's b c Sting, beat Lord G. Bentinck's Princess Alice, Lord Lonsdale's b c, by Bay Middleton, and four others. Won by two lengths.—Match, 500, h ft.—Mr. W. Scott's b h Cataract, 8st 7lb, beat Mr. Osbaldeston's ch f Sorella, 9st, by three lengths.—Match, 100, h ft, 8st 7lb each.—Mr. Treen's b f Astonishment, 2 yrs, received from Mr. Clifton's b g, Minus, 4 yrs.—Match, 200, h ft.—Mr. Greville's Sir Francis, 8st 7lb, received from Lord Eglinton's Britannia, 8st 5lb.

VENTILATION.—"A most ingenious, simple, and effective plan." Mr. Reid's Lecture on Ventilation, delivered June 7, 1845, before the Mechanics' Institute, Liverpool.—BAILLIE'S PATENT TRANSPARENT VENTILATOR ventilates rooms or public buildings without causing unpleasant draughts of air—may be fixed as easily as a pane of glass, whose place it supplies—does not derange blinds, shutters, or other fixtures belonging to windows—most useful to public places of every description, especially smoking and coffee-rooms, and, moreover, a simple remedy for smoky chimneys. This article may be obtained from all respectable glass dealers in London; Messrs. Stock and Sharp, and Mr. Samuel Beals, Birmingham; Messrs. John Hall and Sons, and Messrs. Dixie and Williams, Bristol; Messrs. Thos. and Will. Stock, Liverpool; Messrs. Davidson and Armstrong, Manchester; Mr. James Bell, Glasgow, &c.; who have models to explain its action, and will be glad to give any further information; also to be seen in use at Mr. Fred. Smith's, the Albion, 259, Blackfriars-road; Mr. Edward Baillie's, 12 B, Cumberland-market, Regent's-park; Mr. Seaton's, Dublin Castle, Park-street, Camden Town; 2, Coleman-street-buildings, Moorgate-street, and at the Office of this Paper.

THE CORN TRADE.—The probability of a deficien harvest, and the consequently serious effects upon ou commercial and monetary affairs are beginning to excite grea apprehension. Under such circumstances, correct information as to the probable produce of the harvest at home and abroad, and as to the stock of grain on hand on the Continent and in the western world is of the highest importance. No trouble or expense is spared to furnish such information in the MARK LANE EXPRESS AND AGRICULTURAL JOURNAL, which has been for many years the authority in the Corn Trade in England and in foreign countries. May be had by order of all Booksellers and Newsmen. Office 24, Norfolk-street, Strand.

ROWLAND'S UNIQUE PREPARATIONS.—(Under the Patronage of the several Sovereigns and Courts of Europe, and universally preferred.)—ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth, Preservation, and for Beautifying the Human Hair.—Price, 3*s*. 6*d*.—7*s*.; family bottles (equal to four small) 10*s*. 6*d*., and double that size, 21*s*. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for improving and beautifying the Skin and Complexion.—Price, 4*s*. 6*d*. and 8*s*. 6*d*. per bottle, duty included.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, for the Teeth and Gums.—Price, 2*s*. 9*d*. per box, duty included.

CAUTION.—SPURIOUS COMPOUNDS are frequently offered for sale, under the same names, (some under the implied sanction of Royalty,) the Labels, Bills, and Advertisements of the original articles are copied, and either a Fictitious Name, or the word "Genuine," is used in the place of "ROWLAND'S." It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the word "ROWLAND'S" is on the Wrapper of each Article. For the protection of the Public from fraud and imposition, the Hon. Commissioners of Stamps have directed the Proprietors' Signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus—

A. ROWLAND AND SON, 20, HATTON GARDEN.

Which is affixed on the KALYDOR and ODONTO.

Sold by the Proprietors, and by most Chemists and Perfumers.

 All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS!!!

ABERNETHY'S PILL for the NERVES and MUSCLES.—The proprietor of these pills is a medical man. The brother of a patient of his applied to Mr. Abernethy for advice; he gave him a prescription, and those pills are prepared accurately from that prescription. The patient's complaint was a nervous one, and it was utterly impossible for any one to be in a worse condition than he was. Muscular power was also lost in some parts, and his legs fairly tottered under him. He had a box of the pills prepared, and the effects were all but miraculous, for not only did nervousness leave him, but muscular power returned to all parts deficient of it. The proprietor has since tried them on hundreds of his patients, and he can conscientiously state that their effects in restoring nervous energy and muscular power have quite astonished him. The nervous invalid should lose no time in resorting to this truly wonderful medicine. They are so harmless that they may be administered with perfect safety to the most delicate constitutions, as they do not contain a particle of mercury, or any other poisonous ingredient. As before stated, their effects are all but miraculous—one box will prove the truth of this assertion. As regimen and diet are of the utmost consequence in all nervous disorders, the particulars as recommended by the late Mr. Abernethy in such complaints will be enclosed round each box, price 4s. 6d.—Appointed agents for London: C. King, Napier-street, Hoxton New Town; Barclay, Farringdon-street; Edwards, St. Pauls; Sutton, Bow Church-yard; Johnston, 68, Cornhill; Prout, 229, Strand; Hannay, 63, and Sanger, 150, Oxford-street. By sending 58 stamps to Mr. King (as above) a box may be had post free.

THE POPULAR MEDICINE.—Read the following account from Mr. HOLLIER, Bookseller, Dudley:—

Tipton, Staffordshire.

I, Joshua Ball, hereby testify that I had been dreadfully afflicted with Rheumatic Gout for 17 years, so that I have at times kept my bed for months together, and could not get anything to do me good, till I took PARR'S LIFE PILLS, which I am very happy to state have restored me to perfect health.

Joshua Ball.

TO THE PUBLIC.—This famous remedy has been established by undoubted proofs of its efficacy, and by a mass of Evidence and Testimonials which no other medicine ever yet called forth. These facts have had the effect of producing a very large sale—more than 15,000 boxes per week. When this large sale came to the knowledge of some unprincipled persons, who for the sake of gain to themselves, and reckless of the injury it may do to others, are attempting to foist on the incautious various imitations, and in order that purchasers may be able to detect these frauds, care must be taken to look at the Government Stamp pasted round each box, and be sure it has the words "PARR'S LIFE PILLS" in White Letters on a Red Ground engraved therein, and forms part of the Stamp; also that the signature of T. Roberts & Co., Crane-court, is printed with the directions wrapped round each box.

N.B. Ask for PARR'S LIFE PILLS, and inquire for the little book, containing the Life of Old Parr, 32 pages, with engravings, also the numerous testimonials, which may be had gratis, on application, of all agents and respectable vendors throughout the United Kingdom.

Sold in boxes at 1*s*. 1½*d*., 2*s*. 9*d*., and 11*s*., by every respectable medicine vendor.

PATENT PORTABLE SUSPENSION STOVES, of which more than Four Thousand were sold last winter, are admirably adapted for Greenhouses and Conservatories, their principle of Ventilation effectually carrying off all those gases which are injurious to plants. Prospectuses may be obtained, and the Stoves seen in operation, at George & John Deane's, opening to the Monument, 46, King William-street, London-bridge.

HEAL AND SON'S LIST OF BEDDING containing a full description of Weights, Sizes, and Prices, by which purchasers are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to make a good set of Bedding. Sent free by post, on application to their Establishment, the largest in London exclusively for the manufacture and sale of Bedding (no bedsteads or other furniture being kept).—Heal and Son, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, opposite the Chapel, Tottenham-court-road.

WHITE KNIGHTS' PARK, NEAR READING.

THE DIRECTORS of the White Knights' Estate Company are ready to receive Proposals from parties desirous to take SITES or LAND for BUILDING purposes; and they beg to remind the Public that an early selection of ground will be advisable, in order that the approaching season for planting may be rendered available.

Prospectuses of the Company, and Plans of the Estate, may be obtained at the Offices of the Company, 15, Portman-street, Portman-square; of David Mocatta, Esq., Architect, 32, Brunswick-square; of George Godwin, Esq., Architect, 11, Pelham-crescent, Brompton; and of Messrs. Richards and Rogers, Solicitors, Reading. R. W. Roberts, Secretary.

WANTED.—A person well acquainted with the Plant department of a Nursery, to act as WORKING FOREMAN, where a large miscellaneous collection of most valuable Plants would be under his charge. Written applications—stating particulars as to age, experience, and various places where he has lived; whether married or single—may be made by Post only to A. B., 21, Jewry-street, London.—None need apply without being able to produce the most unexceptionable references.

A DANGEROUS CASE OF ERYSIPELAS, ATTENDED WITH SWELLING AND INFLAMMATION, CURED BY HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—Extract of a letter dated East Keal, Spilsby, Lincolnshire, Oct 2, 1845:—"I beg to announce to you a most wonderful cure wrought upon myself by your Ointment and Pills. I had a very severe attack of Erysipelas in my right foot and ancle, with swelling and inflammation to an alarming extent. I was unable to move without the assistance of crutches. I consulted an eminent physician to no purpose; however, in less than two weeks, by the use of your Ointment and Pills, I was cured, to the surprise of all who knew me. Signed, Joseph Gildon, a Farmer," Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's, 244, Strand, London.

WANTED.—A married Man, who must be competent to superintend a Farm requiring improvement, and also to keep a Small Garden in order. His Wife will be required to attend to the Cows, Poultry, &c. He must be accustomed to a clay soil. Wages 50*l*. a year, with a cottage. A good character for trustworthiness and sobriety will be required.—Direct, stating how long the writer has lived in his two last situations, where they were, what was the soil, and what situation he filled, to S., Gardeners' Chronicle Office.

WANTED for an opulent and eminent house in the North of Ireland, a person of acknowledged ability, good address, high character, and who is thoroughly qualified from experience to superintend a very extensive RETAIL SEED TRADE. The situation, as may be inferred, is permanent, and of the highest respectability. Applications, by post, in own hand-writing, with terms (which should commence at a given sum, to increase over a series of years).—Address, and references, may be addressed to B., care of Mr. Lambdan, Tram-road Office, Gloucester.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A young Man who perfectly understands the Management of Pines, Grapes, Early and Late Forcing, Kitchen, Fruit, and Flower-Garden. Can have an excellent character of two years.—Direct to B.J., No. 1, Norfolk-place, Coach and Horses Lane, Newington-green, Middlesex.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 26, who perfectly understands the Management of Hothouse, Greenhouse, Flower, and Kitchen-garden. Can have an unexceptionable character.—Direct to A.B.C., at the Office of this Paper.

AS GARDENER or NURSERY FOREMAN.—A married Man, who has had very extensive practice, and thoroughly understands every department of his business. His Wife is a good plain Cook, or could take charge of the house, &c.—Direct to M. M., 11, Princess-street, Lisson-grove, Paddington.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 30, who understands the cultivation of Pines, Vines, &c., with Greenhouse, Flower, and Kitchen Garden. Can have a 4 years' recommendation from his present employer. His wife is capable of taking charge of the Laundry if required.—Direct to C. Cooper, Vale Lodge Gardens, Leatherhead, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—A single, intelligent young Man, a Scotchman, who is perfect master of his business in every department, and is strictly sober, honest, &c., as will be testified by the gentleman in whose service he has been for the last four years.—Direct to S. A., Messrs. Lee's Nursery, Hammersmith.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 32; has a good practical knowledge of his business in all its various branches. Will be disengaged about the latter end of November, and can produce the most unexceptionable reference; but only for what is strictly Horticultural.—Direct to A.B., care of Mr. Neal, Nurseryman, &c., Wandsworth Common.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 30, without incumbrance, who thoroughly understands his business, and can have an unexceptionable character.—Direct to Y. G., Post-office, Battersea.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 30, without incumbrance, who has a thorough knowledge of his business, and can be highly recommended by his present employer, in whose service he has been these three years and a half.—Direct to H. P., care of Mr. Cowen, Rosslyn Grove, Hampstead, Middlesex.

AS GARDENER, in a Nobleman or Gentleman's family, a respectable married Man, aged 29, without family, who has a thorough knowledge of his business in all its branches; has an excellent character from his last situation.—Direct to A. H., at Messrs. Marnock and Manley's Nursery, Hackney, London.

TO NOBLEMEN AND GENTLEMEN.

AS FARM BAILIFF, in any county in England.—A young Man, who would be able to give respectable references, and produce testimonials as to character and capabilities, &c.—Direct to A. B., Post-office, Otley, Yorkshire.

AS STEWARD OR BAILIFF, with a Nobleman or Gentleman.—A sober, active Man, aged 36; he is practically acquainted with the Kentish system of Agriculture generally, also the Cultivation of Hops, and is a good Accountant; references to several Gentlemen, and to a Nobleman, his last employer.—Direct to W., care of Mr. Smith, Nurseryman, Westerham, Kent.

A FARMER, in the prime of life, about to leave his Farm in one of the best farmed counties in the South of Scotland, owing to his possessing inadequate means to cultivate it, wishes to be employed in the management of another man's property. His character as to integrity and capacity for business may be easily ascertained, as he is well known in the district where he Farms. The Advertiser entertains no objection to a situation in the Colonies, but an inferior one, either at home or abroad, will not be accepted.—Apply for address at the Office of this Paper.

A GENTLEMAN of good family, who is intimately acquainted with the new system of Husbandry, Stall-feeding, the Breeding and Rearing of Cattle, &c., wishes to engage himself as MANAGING STEWARD to any Nobleman or Gentleman. Salary not so much an object as a comfortable residence.—Direct to J. B., Post-office, Dawlish, Devon.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1845.

GREAT BRITAIN MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 14, Waterloo Place, Pall Mall, London.

The Chisholm, Chairman. W. Morley, Esq., Dep. Chairman.

GREAT ADVANTAGES OFFERED TO POLICY-HOLDERS BY THIS INSTITUTION.

A large and immediate accession of Assurances, by the transfer of the Policies of the "Achilles British and Foreign Life Assurance Association."

PROFITS.

The whole of the Profits divided ANNUALLY among the Members, after payment of five Annual Premiums.

An ample guaranteed Capital, in addition to the Fund, continually accumulating from Premiums fully sufficient to afford complete security.

CREDIT.

Credit given to Members for half the amount of the first five Annual Premiums, without security.

Credit allowed to Members for the whole of the first five Annual Premiums, on satisfactory security being given for their payment.

Transfers of Policies effected and registered (without charge) at the Office.

Claims on Policies not subject to be litigated or disputed, except with the sanction, in each case, of a General Meeting of the Members.

An extremely low Rate of Premium, without participation in the Profits, but with the option, at any time within five years, of paying up the difference between the Reduced Rates and the Mutual Assurance Rates; and thus becoming Members of the Society, and entitled to a full participation in the Profits.

Extract from the Reduced Scale of Rates, for an Assurance of 100*l*.

AGE.	ANNUAL PREMIUM. ONE YEAR.	SEVEN YEARS.	WHOLE LIFE.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
20	1 0 9	1 1 6	1 13 11
30	1 2 9	1 3 3	2 2 1
40	1 5 6	1 7 6	2 16 4
50	1 15 9	2 1 6	4 1 11
60	3 3 5	3 17 0	6 8 3

Full particulars are detailed in the Prospectus.

A. R. Ravenscroft, Managing Director.

AUSTRALASIAN, COLONIAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE and ANNUITY COMPANY, No. 126, Bishopsgate-street, corner of Cornhill.

Capital 200,000*l*.—in 2000 Shares.

Directors.

Edw. Barnard, Esq., F.R.S. — Gideon Colquhoun, Esq.
Robert Brookes, Esq. — C. E. Mangles, Esq.
Henry Buckle, Esq. — Richard Onslow, Esq.
John Henry Capper, Esq. — William Walker, Esq.

Solicitors, Messrs. Maples, Pearse, Stevens, & Maples.

Bankers—The Union Bank of London.

Colonial Bankers—The Bank of Australasia (incorporated by Royal Charter, 1835), 8, Austin Friars, London.

Physician—Dr. Fraser, 62, Guildford-street, Russell-square.

Actuary and Secretary—Edward Ryley, Esq.

The following are specimens of the Premiums charged by this Company for the Assurance of 100*l*.

Age	20	30	40	50
Ann. Prem. with Profits	£1 17 1	£2 8 2	£3 4 0	£4 11 8
Without do.	£1 10 3	£2 0 7	£2 15 3	£4 1 8

This Company offers the advantages of the guarantee of an ample subscribed Capital—of permission to retain one-third of the first five Premiums in the hands of the Assured, as a debt against the Policy—of ascending, descending, and other scales of Premiums—of participation in profits, or of as low a scale of Premiums as is consistent with safety to those who choose to forego participation in profits.

AUSTRALASIA.

To Emigrants to the Australasian Colonies, who are assured for the whole term of life, the Company offers the permission to proceed to and reside in any of those Colonies without extra Premium, and to pay their Premiums there. For residence in New Zealand a moderate extra Premium is charged.

THE NORTH AMERICAN COLONIES & CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

No extra Premium is charged for residence in any of these Colonies, nor for one direct voyage out and home.

INDIA, CEYLON, & CHINA.

The Tables of this Company offer great advantages to persons residing in India, in either Military or Civil capacities, and the Premiums are immediately reduced to the English Scale on the return of the Assured Life to England for permanent residence.

Premiums may be paid and claims settled in India.

AGENTS.

Calcutta .. .. .. Messrs. Boyd, Beeby, and Co.
Madras .. .. .. Messrs. Line and Co.
Bombay .. .. .. Messrs. Ritchie, Steuart, and Co.
Ceylon .. .. .. Messrs. Ackland, Boyd, and Co.

ANNUITIES.

Annuitants participate in the profits of the Company, and receive a rate of annuity much more favourable than can be granted by any Company making its investments wholly in England. The Company is enabled securely to grant these favourable terms from the advantage it possesses of investing a portion of its funds at a high rate of interest.

Prospectuses, with Tables, Forms of Proposal for the purchase of an Annuity or for making an Assurance, and every information, may be obtained by application at the Office of the Company, No. 126, Bishopsgate-street, corner of Cornhill, City.

E. Ryley, Actuary & Secretary.

METROPOLITAN SEWAGE MANURE COMPANY.—(Registered Provisionally.)—Capital 1,500,000*l*., in 30,000 shares of 50*l*. each. Deposit, 1*l*. per share.

The object of this Company is to supply, at a quarter of the cost of stable or farm-yard manure, the Sewage Water of the Metropolis to the surrounding country, as Manure, by mechanical means similar to those employed by the Water Companies.

A careful and moderate calculation has been made of the annual outlay and income, from which it can confidently be stated that the undertaking will realise a net profit of at least 15 per cent.

Prospectuses, containing full particulars of the Plan and extracts from the Reports and Authorities upon which the estimates are based, may be had on application at the temporary Office of the Company, 5, Berners-street, or will be forwarded to any address.

Applications for shares to be made in the usual form, addressed to the Provisional Committee of the Metropolitan Sewage Manure Company, at Messrs. Bailey, Shaw, and Smith's, 5, Berners-street.

SILVER TEA-SERVICES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Manufacturing Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank of England, submit the prices of the following SILVER TEA and COFFEE SERVICES. The Cottage Pattern is plain, standing on shell feet, the Tea and Coffee-pot with a flower ornament on the lids. The King's Pattern is richly embossed with flowers and scrolls. The shape of either is new and elegant.

Cottage Pattern.		King's Pattern.
Strong Silver Teapot	£12 0 0	Strong Silver Teapot	£12 0 0
Ditto Sugar Basin .	6 16 0	Ditto Sugar Basin .	7 10 0
Ditto Milk Ewer ..	4 10 0	Ditto Cream Ewer .	5 10 0
Ditto Coffee-pot ..	15 0 0	Ditto Coffee-pot ..	15 0 0
Complete ..	£38 6 0	Complete ..	£40 0 0

A variety of upwards of 50 Tea and Coffee Services may be seen in the show-rooms, where may be selected every article of Silver requisite for the sideboard or plate-chest. Pamphlets of prices, illustrated with sketches of the various articles, gratis, and forwarded, postage free, to all parts of the kingdom.

A. B. Savory and Sons, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank of England.

News of the Week.

The affairs of Algeria continue to be the leading topic of our foreign news. The French Government are availing themselves of the excitement caused by the late reverses to increase the army in Africa, in order to prosecute the war with increasing energy until Abd-el-Kader has been captured or slain—even though this object should be attainable only by a second invasion of Morocco. Marshal Bugeaud, as anticipated in our last, embarked for Algiers without regarding the Ministerial summons to return to Paris. Previously to his departure, however, he addressed two letters to the journals, stating that his famous epistle to the Prefect of the Dordogne was not intended for publication, and that several alterations, materially affecting the sense of different passages, had been made in the transcript which found its way into the papers. It appears to be certain that so far as the Marshal is concerned, the Government will overlook the affront, and that if any official notice be taken of the letter, the Prefect of the Dordogne, through whose means it obtained publicity, will bear the penalty of the indiscretion. During the past week it has been almost officially announced that Marshal Soult, in consequence of increasing infirmities and a natural anxiety to abandon public affairs, had resolved to retire from the Cabinet. This statement has caused a great sensation in political circles, not only on account of the embarrassment which the Marshal's retirement would cause to the Ministry, but also from the extreme difficulty of finding a successor in the War Department, Marshal Bugeaud being the only officer of that rank who is eligible to a seat in the Cabinet. The King appears to have comprehended the difficulties which would follow the Marshal's retirement, and it is now rumoured that His Majesty has succeeded in inducing Marshal Soult to forego his intention for the present. It is still, however, believed in well-informed quarters that he will remain in the Cabinet only as President of the Council and resign the office of Minister of War to younger hands. The affairs of Tahiti supply another topic of angry discussion to the Paris papers. It is rumoured that M. Bruat, the French Governor of Tahiti, has solicited the co-operation of the English Admiral to enforce the submission of Queen Pomare. This news has been received with great indignation by the Opposition papers, which endeavour to show that in no circumstances whatever should there be any approach to a good understanding, and still less to any concert, between the naval forces of England and of France. In connection with this subject we may mention that a letter from Valparaiso of the 21st July, has been received by a mercantile house in Manchester, containing the startling announcement of a report current in Valparaiso, that Her Majesty's steamer Salamander has been sunk by the French frigate, Uranie, at Tahiti; but that they have not been able to trace the report. If this rumour should prove correct, the occurrence which it describes would probably lead to very serious consequences; but, in the absence of any information as to the source of the report or the channel by which it had reached Valparaiso, it is not considered entitled to credit, particularly as a letter of the 28th gives no information on the subject.—From Greece we have the particulars of an extraordinary calumny circulated against the English Government and a Prince of our royal family, by no less a person than the Prime Minister of that unhappy country. This calumny, which appeared in a paper published under the patronage of the Premier, imputed to our Government the infamous design of compassing the assassination of King Otho, for the purpose of placing Prince George of Cambridge on the Greek throne! The Chambers which were sitting at Athens at the time, instantly investigated the affair, and declared unanimously that the Minister had not the shadow of a foundation for his assertions, and he was told in the Senate that his conduct led to the belief that he himself was plotting against the King's life.—From Buenos Ayres we have accounts to the 23rd August. 200 English marines had landed at Montevideo, and several of the Argentine vessels were fitting out under the French and English flags, for the purpose, it was supposed, of making a cruise up the Uruguay. The feeling gained ground that Rosas was so confident in his means of resistance that he would hold out to the last, and Gen. Oribe appeared determined not to evacuate the Montevidean territory, unless compelled by superior force; and the Admirals, though supreme at sea, were very weak on land.

Home News.

Court.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the infant Royal family, continue at Windsor Castle, and are quite well. Her Majesty and the Prince have taken their daily walks during the week, and Prince Albert has made two or three shooting excursions in the neighbourhoods of the Castle. The Queen Dowager arrived on Saturday at the Castle on a visit to the Queen. The Duke of Wellington, the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter, the Prince and Princess Nicolas Esterhazy, the Earl and Countess of Jersey, Lady Clementina Villiers, and the Marquis and Marchioness of Worcester, have been among her Majesty's visitors at the Castle this week. Captain the Hon. Nelson Hood has succeeded Admiral Sir Robert Otway, as the Groom in Waiting, and the Earl of Hardwicke has succeeded the Earl of Morton as the Lord in Waiting to her Majesty. Her Majesty has announced her intention of revisiting Osborne House, at the latter end of this or the beginning of next month, and has issued her commands to have the Fairy, tender, in readiness to convey her from the Clarence-yard to Cowes.

The Ministry.—A rumour has been current for some days that a difference has arisen between Sir Robert Peel and the Duke of Wellington respecting the policy to be pursued in regard to Ireland, which is likely to lead to the Duke's retirement from office. It is also said that the breach between Sir R. Peel and Lord Stanley is becoming so serious as to render the retirement of the latter before Parliament meets, more than probable.

Parliamentary Movements.—The election for Wigan has terminated in favour of the Hon. Capt. Lindsay, the Conservative candidate. The numbers were for Capt. Lindsay, 274; Mr. Thicknesse, 211; majority, 63.—Sir John de Beauvoir, who was a candidate for Windsor, has retired from the contest, and the only candidates now in the field are Mr. Walter, of Beauwood, as an independent Conservative; and Colonel Reid, who comes forward on the Government interest, aided by extensive family connections in the borough.—Lord Alfred Spencer Churchill, son of the Duke of Marlborough, has announced himself a candidate for Woodstock.—Mr. Serjeant Murphy's farewell address to the electors of Cork has at length made its appearance in the local papers. The learned gentleman acknowledges that he has been compelled to yield to the pressure from Conciliation-hall, and that any attempt on his part, entertaining the opinions that he does upon the Repeal question, to re-seek the favour of his constituents, would be worse than fruitless.

The Visit of M. Thiers.—On Sunday and Monday last M. Thiers was on a visit to Lord Ashburton, at the Grange, near Basingstoke. The Marquis of Normanby, Mr. and Lady Harriet Baring, Count Walewski, M. Leroux, Mr. M. Milnes, Mr. F. Byng, and Mr. C. Greville were among the guests invited to meet him. On Tuesday M. Thiers returned to town, and on Wednesday was entertained by Lord Mahon at a déjeuner. His lordship's guests on the occasion included the Marquis of Salisbury, Col. Gurwood, Mr. Milnes, M.P., Mr. Hayward, Mr. Harcourt, M.P., &c. In the afternoon M. Thiers had a long interview with Lord Palmerston, and left town for Brighton on his return to Paris.

The Experimental Squadron.—The experimental squadron, under the command of Rear-Admiral Sir Samuel Pym, entered Plymouth Sound on Friday week, and dropped anchor in the following order:—The Rodney, 92, Captain Collier, off the eastern arm of the breakwater; the flag-ship, St. Vincent, 120, Captain Rowley, next; then the Albion, 92, Captain N. Lockyer; Canopus, 84, Captain Moresby; Queen, 110, Captain Sir Baldwin Walker; Trafalgar, 120, Captain Martin; Vanguard, 80, Captain Willis; and the brig Daring, 12, Commander Matson, which lay off the western arm of the breakwater, towards Mount Edgecumbe. The following is the Admiral's official report to the Secretary of the Admiralty of the performances of the several ships: "Plymouth Sound, Oct. 10. Sir,—I have the honour to forward to you, for the information of my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, the diagrams of the trials of sailing of her Majesty's squadron under my command, and other documents mentioned in the enclosed schedule. In addition to which, a good trial was commenced on the 1st inst. by the Queen, Canopus, Albion, and Vanguard, in chase of the Daring, under all plain sail, and part topmast and topgallant studding-sails; but the fog, which came on three hours after, prevented angles being taken to ascertain the exact result. The Queen, however, gained on her. You will be pleased to acquaint their lordships that we have had some splendid trials with as heavy a press of sail as could well be carried. One beginning with close-reefed topsails and reefed courses, topgallant masts struck; the next under treble-reefed topsails, and another under double-reefed topsails; and all these against a heavy head sea. In the latter on the 7th inst., the day after the heaviest gale, the Rodney beat the whole fleet. Nothing could be more easy in all the trials than the Queen and Albion, who never appeared to strain anything; indeed, all the squadron proved themselves such fine ships as to be incapable of being distressed by press of sail, except the St. Vincent. Being perfectly satisfied with the result of the trials, that the Queen is the best ship, the Albion and Rodney next, Canopus and Vanguard much alike, Trafalgar weatherly, but slow; St. Vincent leewardly and crank; and as the weather appeared to set in fine, and not deeming that any further trial would benefit the service, I therefore bore up on the 9th inst. for this anchorage, which I reached with the squadron under my command this day, at 7 15 p.m. I beg to remark, for their lordships' information, that all the captains deserve the greatest credit for the seamanlike manner in which they made sail, blowing in the way it did, on the abovementioned occasions. I have, &c., S. Pym, Rear-Admiral. A few days after the above was written, the Superb 80, joined the fleet, and the Vanguard sailed for Portsmouth to undergo some alteration in the dockyard. The Admiralty, however, have since determined that the trial cruises of the three-decked ships shall terminate for this year. The St. Vincent has gone to Portsmouth as the flag-ship; the Trafalgar will go to Sheerness to take the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir E. D. King; the Queen remains at Plymouth for the flag of Admiral Sir John West. The two-decked ships, Albion, Rodney, Superb, and Canopus, with the Rattler steamer, have gone to sea for another experimental cruise, under the command of the senior officer, Captain Moresby, of the Canopus; and when the Vanguard has completed her alterations, she is to join them at the appointed rendezvous, and Captain Willes, being senior to Captain Moresby, will try their rates and qualities. After these four trials, under different officers, the Admiralty will probably be able to determine which is the best ship.

Foreign.

France.—The Paris papers during the past week have been engaged in discussing a variety of topics of more or less public interest, and their attention has been transferred from Marshal Bugeaud, Abd-el-Kader, and Algeria, to Oceania, Otaheite, and Queen Pomare. Although England is subjected to a great deal of abuse in the course of this abrupt and distant excursion, it presents very little novelty, except that this hostility to England is expressed by nearly all the papers. Marshal Bugeaud arrived at Marseilles on the 11th, and embarked the same evening on board the Panama for Algiers, where he expected to arrive on the 15th. On his way to Marseilles, the Marshal was made acquainted with the fact of the publication of his letter to the Prefect of the department of the Dordogne; and shortly after his arrival, he addressed the following letter to the editor of the Marseilles Courrier:—

"Sir—I have just read in your journal an article relative to the letter which I wrote the Prefect of Dordogne, and which has been published by several of the Marseilles journals. Your friendly sagacity has led you to conclude that this letter, which was entirely confidential, was not destined to publicity. You were perfectly right. I will add, that not only ought it to have remained secret, but that the indiscreet person who published it has altered the sense of the reflections which accompanied the news respecting the unhappy events which have occurred in Algeria. Receive, sir, the assurance of my distinguished consideration. Marshal Duke of Isly."

A second letter was subsequently addressed by Marshal Bugeaud to the Semaphore de Marseille, which affirms still more strongly than the former one that his first letter was purely confidential, and was never intended for publication. The following is the letter:—

"I have read in your journal a letter purporting to have been addressed by me to the Prefect of Dordogne. It is very true that on hearing of the occurrences in Africa, I wrote to that functionary, who is one of my oldest friends, to request him to send me post-horses to Excideuil; and I communicated to him at the same time the information I had received respecting those sad events. My letter having been written under the impression they were calculated to produce, I cannot exactly recollect the terms I used, but I do not hesitate to declare that my sentiments have been incorrectly conveyed by the person charged with making an extract from that despatch (for a mere extract only has been published), relative to the events of Africa, and who took upon himself to enter into considerations which should never have figured in such a publication. I further affirm that my letter was entirely confidential. It contained the effusions of an old friend to another, and it was not my intention that it should be made public. I am ignorant of the circumstances that led to the publication of a letter the contents of which have been so strangely perverted. I truly deplore it, but I feel fully convinced, that it was done contrary to the intentions and knowledge of the Prefect of the Dordogne, by some indiscreet and malicious individual."

The Paris papers do not appear to attach much credit to the Marshal's disclaimers. They are unanimous in the expression of an opinion that this explanation is a mere trick contrived between the Marshal and the Government, to prevent the necessity of any proceeding on the part of the latter against him; and they infer that as the Marshal is to be forgiven after this equivocal retraction means will next be taken to enable the Prefect of the Dordogne to explain away his share of the affair also. Some of the papers, indeed, think it possible that the Prefect may be nominally made a sacrifice, but that he will be largely indemnified for being made the scapegoat of Marshal Bugeaud. Generally speaking, the journals profess to be so amused by what they call the farce of explanation, that they are more satirical than violent in their way of noticing it. Some of them, indeed, affirm that before Marshal Bugeaud left Marseilles he addressed a note to the Cabinet relative to the disavowal of his letter, which is couched in terms not less haughty than his famous letter to the Prefect.—On the 3d, according to a letter from Oran of the 10th, General Cavaignac had not yet been able to communicate with Djemma-Ghazaouat, which place the Arabs still surrounded. The inhabitants of Nedrome had applied to the French for succour, declaring that although provided with some pieces of ordnance, they must surrender to Abd-el-Kader, unless promptly reinforced. The communications between Oran and the interior were interrupted by the insurgents, and along the coast by the bad weather. The squadron of evolution, commanded by Admiral Parseval Deschenes, sailed on the 10th from Algiers, in a westerly direction. It was thought that it would first proceed to Oran, and thence to the coast of Morocco.—It appears that Marshal Soult has again insisted on retiring from the Cabinet. At a Council held on Saturday, his colleagues in vain urged him to continue at least President of the Council, and to leave the fatiguing War Department to any person he might please to select; the Marshal replied that he considered that he had amply acquitted himself of his duty to his country, and that he had, at length, a right to take some rest and attend to his declining health. Although he expressed his determination repeatedly, and with great firmness, the Cabinet has again succeeded, through the King's intercession, in overcoming his resolution. Marshal Soult's anxiety to resign his situation will, probably, be ascribed to the disgust which he feels at the woful aspect of affairs in Algeria, and especially at the indulgence which Louis-Philippe wishes to be extended to the arrogant conduct of Marshal Bugeaud.—The accounts from Tahiti also supply a theme for much discussion:—

"We publish," says La Flotte, "the substance of a recent letter from the Pacific Ocean which has been communicated to us:—The intrigues of the English continue, and are daily becoming more menacing. Admiral Hamelin has left Otaheite in order to join the English Admiral and negotiate with him. After protracted deliberations it has been agreed that the English and French squadrons shall in future act in concert. The English Admiral will come to Otaheite, and will salute the 'Protectorate flag,' in order to manifest the new and cordial entente of the two nations. A summons will be next addressed, in the name of England and France, to Queen Pomare, with the view of making her immediately submit to the Protectorate. In the event of her resisting it, her deposition will be proclaimed, and France will be at liberty to employ her forces in bringing her to subjection. What new Majesty is, in virtue of this convention, to rule over Otaheite, is not said."

The alleged circumstance of Admiral Hamelin having concerted himself with our Admiral for the purpose of effecting that which the French, alone, have been unable to accomplish, gives very serious offence to the anti-English prints.

"Some months ago," says the Réforme, "the English joined, in the African seas, one of our frigates in an attack against the Hovas, and landed with our seamen on the coast of Madagascar, where the vestiges of our former establishments are yet to be seen. To-day, our accounts from the Pacific Ocean inform us that the commander of the British forces at Tahiti united with our governor in signing a manifesto against that alleged Queen who excited to such a degree the senile sensibility of Marshal Sebastiani—in other words, that at Tahiti, as well as at Madagascar, two French possessions, we are obliged to accept the co-operation of England, and thereby mutilate our own sovereignty. If that system should continue, we shall soon permit the English to join us in Algeria. Why should not M. Guizot and his colleagues concur in such a combination? Their policy evidently tends to bring in the English everywhere."

The Journal des Débats has a long article on the general failure of the Potato crop in Ireland and on the Continent. The object of this article is to prove that the failure of so important an article of consumption as Potatoes will necessitate a large drain of money from the United Kingdom to supply the loss by importations of foreign grain. The Presse follows in the same line, and alludes to the late rise in the rate of discount in the Bank of England, and the extraordinary spirit for railway speculation which at present exists in Great Britain; and infers therefrom that the close of the present year will bring with it a financial crisis, of which it is impossible to foresee the consequences.—Ninety-nine Italian refugees have landed at Marseilles. They were immediately taken prisoners by the police, and a portion of them were lodged in the barracks and others in the town prison. It was said that, in a few days, these refugees would all be sent as prisoners to towns in the interior of France. Nearly all the refugees belong to the working classes, and they are principally young men. About 60 other emigrants were expected by the next steamer from Genoa.—The Baron de Rothschild, and other persons connected with the management of the Great Northern Railroad, proceeded by it from Paris to Clermont (upwards of 20 miles) on Sunday. No doubt was entertained that by April next the entire line from Paris to Amiens would be opened.

Spain.—Our accounts from Madrid are of the 10th inst., on which day Queen Isabella II. completed her 15th year. The occasion was celebrated at court by a besa-manos, which was brilliantly attended. The new plan adopted by the Minister of Finance, of taxing the operations on the Exchange, has failed so completely that it was to be modified forthwith. It is said that the ordinance for the modification is prepared, and merely wants the signature of the Minister of Justice. General Mazzaredo, the Captain-General of Madrid, left for France on the 5th, and was said to be the bearer of full powers from the Madrid and Bilboa Railroad Company to enter into arrangements with the company of Counts de St. Priest and Fezenzac, and other persons who intended to undertake the construction of the Madrid and Bayonne line. The Captain-General had been succeeded temporarily by General Oribe. Messrs. Lopez, Madoz, Cortina, and others, who had been prosecuted a second time for alleged participation in the revolt of Alicante had been honourably acquitted, but M. Valor, Regent of the tribunal which acquitted them, had been superseded in his post by a royal decree of the 7th. The Government have also gone further. Owing to some demonstrations of public feeling during the trial, a circular letter of the Minister of Justice orders the Presidents of the several courts not to suffer counsel to exceed the limits of defence, or the public to be wanting in due respect for the law. The papers mention the unexpected arrest at Madrid of Col. Lorenzo Milano del Bosco. The Conservative and Liberal parties were both actively preparing for the municipal elections, which were to commence at Madrid on the 15th. The latter were certain of success.—Shocks of earthquake continued to be felt throughout Catalonia. The weather was very hot, and the people dreaded some catastrophe.

Germany.—Accounts from Berlin inform us of an incident which proves to what a point men's minds are excited on religious points in that country. Although this incident, having passed in the King's palace, might have been expected to remain a secret, it transpired quickly, and became the subject of general conversation, being nothing less than a manifestation made by the municipal magistrates before the king himself. This manifestation is directed against the Pietists, who form a powerful party by their secret proceedings, perseverance, and by the favour which they enjoy in the King's councils, where they are represented by Messrs. de Thiele and Eichorn. It is to the influence of this party that are attributed all intolerant measures—the rigorous observance of the sabbath, the religious practices imposed by force on the sick, the refusal of the nuptial benediction to persons divorced, and the invasion of the most zealous Pietists into all the places of the consistories. These acts of intolerance have raised the country against the domination of the Pietists, and the magistrates of the city of Berlin have rendered themselves the organs of the public feeling, by addressing to the King a letter, in which they inveigh openly against the Pietist party, and attack personally M. de Thiele and M. Eichorn. It appears that the address of the magistrates, which was sent to the King during his journey to the Rhine, had remained in the hands of the minister, M. de Thiele, who thought he might dispense with transmitting it to the monarch. It was probably supposed that the matter would rest there; but a journal disconcerted this plan, and the secret having been divulged it was necessary to reply and give some explanation. The magistrates of Berlin were ordered in a body to the palace, and they proceeded there in state in 15 carriages. There the King told the magistrates that he had not read their address; that he had not heard of their proceedings but by the journals, and that he could not approve of such conduct. The King expected an apology, but nothing of the kind was given. Far from it, M. de Krauswick, the burgomaster of Berlin, proceeded to read the address to the King; his Majesty being visibly displeased sat down. When the reading was concluded he spoke, and in a long reply, began by demanding from the magistrates by what right they meddled with religious matters; he declared that he could not admit their competence in such matters; in his opinion it was to the King alone that belonged the direction of religious affairs, and it was perhaps the heaviest burden he had to bear. In a moral point of view he could not allow either that the magistrates of Berlin were fit to meddle in such grave matters, for according to his opinion, of all the cities in the kingdom, it was that where the most irreligious spirit had ever reigned. "Under my great-grandfather," said the King, "Berlin reckoned 40,000 inhabitants and 50 preachers. At present the population amounts to 500,000 souls, and you have not even thought of increasing the number of preachers, nor built a single church. Is that showing great zeal for religion? As to the Pietists, those men so wise and faithful to their God and their King, whom others had dared to name a party, it was not for the magistrates of Berlin to attack them; the King did not recognise any such right in the declared partisans of the new Catholics—of those men who had violated all their oaths to their church." The King is declared to have terminated by stating that if the authors of the address were not the representatives of his good city of Berlin, he should not have deigned to reply to them; but he could not forget the proofs of loyalty and fidelity which had cemented the union of the house of Hohenzollern and the city of Berlin. Such is the sense, if not the exact text, of the speech delivered by the King. It is further stated that the municipal council of Berlin has prepared a development of its address, which will be an answer to the reproach made to it by the King.—Accounts from Manheim of the 2d inst. state that a public banquet had been given in that town to M. Ronge, at which he delivered a short address, which he concluded with the following words:—"It is three centuries since the Reformation was effected by the lords of the land. To-day the plebeians have taken the initiative!" Accounts from Frankfort announce the arrival of M. Ronge in that town on the 4th inst., where he was received with great enthusiasm by the people. He had celebrated divine service, and likewise preached in the German Catholic church in that city. He then proceeded to Carlsruhe, and has gone from thence to Constance.—The Leipsig Gazette publishes the official report on the affair at Leipsig in August last. The report states that Prince John did not order the soldiers to fire upon the people, but it does not say by whom the order was given.

Italy.—The latest accounts from Romagna state that tranquillity has been completely restored at Rimini. The insurgents had taken the route to Borgo San-Sepolcro, in order to reach Leghorn, where they hoped to embark. In Tuscany, a party of 100 men were forced to lay down their arms, and they have been sent to Rocca St. Casciano. The Augsburg Gazette says that the Archduke Frederick of Austria, on learning the disturbances at Rimini, sent three ships of war from Trieste to the coast of the Romagna, to prevent the escape of the insurgents. The Austrian troops, of whom a large body is assembled on the banks of the Po, made no movement on the occasion, but they were prepared, it is said, to enter the Roman states, had the insurrection at Rimini not been so promptly put down. The French papers publish a long manifesto issued by the insurgents at Rimini, and addressed to the inhabitants of the Roman states, and to the princes and people of Europe. The document, which is ably drawn up, gives a short account of the many attempts made by the Italians since 1816 to acquire a share of liberty similar to the rest of Europe. It declares that the Liberals in the Roman states wish to respect the authority of the Pope as head of the universal church, but in order that they may respect and obey him as a temporal Sovereign, they demand—1. That a general amnesty be granted for all political offences committed since 1821. 2. That the civil and criminal codes be modified and assimilated to those of the other civilised nations of Europe; that the proceedings in the courts be public; that trial by jury be introduced; and that confiscation and the punishment of death for treason be abolished. 3. That the tribunal of the holy office exercise no authority over the laity, nor over those having jurisdiction in the ecclesiastical courts. 4. That political offences be tried before the ordinary tribunals. 5. That the municipal councils be elected by the citizens, and approved by the Sovereign; that the provincial council be elected by the Sovereign, from a list presented by the municipal council, and the supreme council of persons to be proposed by the provincial council. 6. That the supreme council of state reside at Rome, and have the superintendence of the public debt, and that it have a deliberative vote on all questions respecting the taxes and the expenditure of the state, and be consulted on every other. 7. That all public functionaries, and all civil, military, and judicial functionaries, shall be considered as seculars. 8. That public instruction be under the direction of the bishops and clergy, to whom religious education is reserved. 9. That the restrictions of the censorship on printing be restricted to the prevention of injury to the Divinity, to the Catholic religion, to the sovereign, and the private lives of citizens. 10. That the foreign troops be dismissed. 11. That a civil guard be instituted, to preserve order and enforce obedience to the laws; and, finally, that the Government commence a system of social improvement in the spirit of the age.—The Gazetta Italiana, a print published at Paris, mentions three decrees, which, it alleges, have been recently issued by the Pope. The first prohibits the construction of any description of railroads in the Pontifical dominions; by the second, all the Pope's subjects are prohibited from attending any scientific congress; and the third orders all physicians not to attend such of their patients as, after their third visit, shall not have received the sacraments.—The Paris correspondent of the Times announces, "on excellent authority," that the great Powers were about to insist on the separation of the Legations from the Government of the Pope, and that they would be added to the dominions of the Grand Duke of Tuscany.—Don Carlos, his two sons, the Princess of Beira, and Don Miguel of Portugal, have arrived at Genoa, where the King of Sardinia and his eldest son are also expected, to meet the Emperor and Empress of Russia.

Malta.—We regret to learn, by the Journal des Débats, that "the steamer Mongibello, which arrived at Marseilles from Malta on the 15th, brought intelligence that the yellow fever had broken out on board a merchant vessel which had just entered the port of Malta. Two cases had declared themselves; one of them terminated fatally. The Neapolitan Council of State had met in consequence, and ordered the laws respecting quarantine to be immediately put in force." From another source we learn that very considerable alarm prevailed at Malta respecting the character of a fever which raged in Her Majesty's 42d regiment, in garrison in that island, and which it was frequently asserted was the yellow fever.

Greece.—The news from Greece is somewhat startling. M. Coletti, the prime minister, through a newspaper conducted under his auspices, and avowedly his official organ, has brought forward an accusation against Great Britain, that the object of our Government is to have King Otho assassinated for the purpose of placing Prince George of Cambridge on the throne of Greece; and to compass which, according to M. Coletti, a conspiracy exists under the patronage of England. The editor of this paper is a certain Cleomenes, the bosom friend of M. Coletti, and who, as soon as M. Coletti became prime minister, and in spite of public opinion, was allowed to return to Greece, from whence he had fled some years ago, after having been convicted of a horrible murder near Athens. Apathetic as public spirit unfortunately is in Greece, it was, however, roused by the appearance of this accusation. The journal in question was indignantly denounced in both Chambers of the Legislature at Athens; the author of the charge was examined, viva voce, and failed in showing that there existed the slightest ground for that of which he alleged he possessed "palpable proof." M. Coletti himself was forced to admit his own participation in the libel, to the extent of his having gratuitously distributed the journal that contained it; and his own colleague, the Minister of Justice declared that the slanderer Cleomenes was without the shadow of foundation for the calumny he had circulated. Yet in spite of all this no steps had been taken for the arraignment and punishment of Cleomenes. It is said however that Sir Edmund Lyons will demand ample and speedy reparation for an outrage that is said to be without parallel in the intercourse of civilised nations.

Turkey.—Accounts from Constantinople of the 7th inst. give some further particulars of an extraordinary transaction, in which the French Ambassador at Constantinople is involved with the Turkish Government. It will be remembered that, about three weeks ago, M. de Bourquenay had demanded that a Druse chief, who is accused of being a party to the death of a French priest, who lost his life during the late troubles in the Lebanon, should be put to death without trial, and threatened if this proposition were not at once acceded to, that he should demand his passports. When first announced it appeared so incredible that the representative of a Christian government should act in a manner so totally at variance with the principles of right and justice, that it was thought that the account given of the transaction must be either altogether wrong, or at all events exaggerated. It now appears, however, that the demands of France are likely to be acceded to, as the Ambassador has given notice that he will instantly retire unless this demand, and others of a similar nature, be complied with.

Russia.—The movements of the Emperor are always so rapid as to surprise even his own family. A few days since it was known that he was at Sebastopol, and at this moment he is probably with the Empress in Italy. A letter from Sebastopol, Sept. 26, says, the Emperor arrived in this town by sea, on his way from Nicolaief. In this latter town 11 ships of war were launched in his presence. He afterwards paid a visit to the Rosklaff of 84 guns, which he examined minutely. The following day a frigate called the Kovarna, and a brig of war called the Orpheus, were launched in his presence. In these two days 13 ships of war were thus added to the Russian navy in the Black Sea. The greatest activity is observed in all the arsenals at Sebastopol. The emperor had an interview with Prince Woronzoff before leaving Sebastopol. The Emperor has given up his intended journey to Moscow, and goes from here by Karkof, Kief, and Cracow, to join the Empress in Italy. The Emperor has published an ukase appointing the Hereditary Grand Duke regent in his absence. Count Nesselrode accompanies the Emperor on his journey, and will remain in Italy till the end of the year.—A letter from Vienna of the 13th states that the Emperor had arrived on the previous day in a small village three leagues from Vienna, and proceeded immediately for Inspruck. A letter from Milan of the 14th, says:—"It has been already stated that the Empress of Russia was expected here to-day. We have just learned that she will probably be accompanied by the Emperor himself. This news will, no doubt, astonish you; for, according to the latest advice, His Majesty was on the shores of the Black Sea, where he had ordered Prince Woronzoff to meet him. It appears that the journey of the Emperor has been as rapid as that which he made in his visit to London. He studiously avoided Vienna, and would not, it is said, pass through Prague, the residence of the Archduke Stephen, Governor of Bohemia, who declined, as is well known, the honour of entering the Imperial family, by refusing to marry the Grand Duchess Olga, an alliance which the Emperor ardently desired." To this we may now add that a telegraphic despatch had been received by the French Government, announcing that the Emperor of Russia and the Emperor of Austria arrived at Milan on the 18th inst., where the Empress had arrived a few days previously.

South America.—The brig General Belgrano has arrived from Buenos Ayres, from whence she sailed on the 23d August. The Master reports that the Buenos Ayrean squadron were anchored off Monte Video, and that Admiral Brown, his officers, and crews (except such as are British and French subjects, who were landed at Monte Video), had been sent to Buenos Ayres in British and French steam-ships. The Gorgon steamer was the only vessel of war at Buenos Ayres. A portion of the British and French fleets were blockading Colonia, Maldonado, Buseo, and the other ports occupied by Oribe. A French and a British ship of war had gone up the Uruguay. Oribe remained before Monte Video inactive. All the marines were landed from the British and French squadrons, and notice was sent to Oribe from the plenipotentiaries, that Monte Video was under the protection of their Governments; but he still refused to withdraw.

New Zealand.—On Monday, the Tryphane arrived at Liverpool from New Zealand, bringing advices from that colony to the 17th May last. The news by this arrival is important, as exhibiting the present aspect of affairs in New Zealand. Our last advices were to the 3d May. They stated, generally, the fact of an outbreak of the natives and the capture of Pomare by Her Majesty's forces. The present accounts give details of the further operations, directed principally against a stronghold in the possession of the rebel chief, John Heki, which, however, do not seem to have been successful, although serious loss of life is said to have been the result to Heki's followers, amounting, by one account, to 200 men killed. On our side the loss is stated at 11 killed and 37 wounded. The position of the natives was a very strong one, and obstinately defended. The British force, consisting of troops of the 58th and 96th Regiments, with seamen and marines from the Slains Castle, Velocity, and Aurora, ultimately retired in good order from the scene of contest. It is doubtful, from the accounts, whether the affair will not rather encourage than depress the rebellious followers of Heki, who is still at large, and expected to be very troublesome. Several of the reports are very contradictory. One of them states that, during the absence of the troops, the boats of the Hazard and North Star burnt five villages, and destroyed ten cocoa canoes belonging to John Heki, and sent off four European boats which had been stolen, and, with the canoes, hauled up amongst the bushes. After the action the whole of our men engaged were embarked with the wounded, and returned to Auckland. —The following is an extract of a letter received at Lloyd's, from their agent at Auckland, under date the 24th May:—"The blockade of the port at the Bay of Islands is still in force. Another engagement has taken place between the natives and the soldiers, in which the latter have been partially successful. About 14 soldiers and marines were killed, and the large number of 37 wounded. The natives, on the other hand, have about 100 killed, and a large number wounded. Hostilities have for the present ceased, and the troops are on their way returning to Auckland."

City.

Money Market, Friday.—Consols for Money left off 97¼ to ½; and for the Account, 97½ to ⅝; Bank Stock, 206½ to 207; India Stock, 264; Three per Cent. Reduced, 96⅝ to ⅞; Three-and-Quarter per Cents., 98¾ to ¾; Exchequer Bills, 43*s.* to 45*s.* prem. The following important notice has been issued by the directors of the Bank of England:—"Bank of England, Oct. 16. At a Court of Directors held this day, resolved—"That the minimum rate of interest in London for bills and notes discounted at the Bank of England be 3*l.* per Cent., such bills and notes not having more than 95 days to run." It is supposed by many that the rise in the interest of money will not stop at this point, on the ground that the bank lately limited their period of accommodation to one month, and that this month has not yet expired.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK.

TUESDAY—BANKRUPTS—J. J. Tadwell, Harrow-road, Beer-shopkeeper—W. H. Taylor, Piccadilly, Stave manufacturer—W. G. Bourne, Stepney green, Merchant—E. W. Wyon, Gower-street, Bedford-square, Bronze and Ormolu manufacturer—C. Hawkins, Brick-lane, Spitalfields, Grocer—W. Senior, Sheffield, Hosier—J. Barraclough, Liverpool, Tailor—H. Bleby, Woolton, Lancashire, Licensed Victualler—J. Rawstorne, Manchester, General Agent—D. Smith, King Swinford, Staffordshire, Ironmaster—W. Parfitt, Bristol, Engineer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATION—T. Coulter, Glasgow, Horsedealer.

FRIDAY—BANKRUPTS—W. Farmer, Farringdon-street, City, Licensed Victualler—J. Gurney, Lambeth-walk, Surrey, Brewer—G. Harby, Saint Ives, Huntingdonshire, Innkeeper—A. Featherstonhaugh, Great Bolton, Lancashire, Butcher—F. Gill, Manchester, Hardwareman—A. Jones, Bourne, Gloucestershire, Innkeeper—R. Castle, Twyning, Gloucestershire, Grocer—J. Sykes, Doncaster, Hosier.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Eclair and Growler steam-ships.—The most favourable accounts of the sufferers at Standgate-creek are now daily received. No case of fever has occurred since Saturday week, the day on which Dr. Rogers was attacked. That gentleman, with Mr. Coffey and the other convalescents, are now rapidly progressing to perfect recovery. The officers and men on board the Revenge continue in good health. Everything has been turned out of the Eclair, and she has been washed and whitewashed thoroughly. All the traps and stores have been transferred to a lighter, and the clothes and bedding of all who have died have been burnt, while the effects of the survivors have been washed, and are aired in the Eclair's rigging daily. It is also gratifying to state that the officers and crew of the Growler steam-frigate are now quite well, and there is no restriction whatever on their movements. It was hitherto a general belief amongst the officers and men serving on the coast of Africa, that the fever was not of a contagious nature, but consequent on serving at particular stations, as sea-sickness is consequent on going to sea; but the death of Mr. Saunders, who piloted the Eclair to Standgate creek, has caused a different belief amongst many, who now think the fever is contagious. The crew of the Ardent, which has just returned from the coast of Africa, are in excellent health; but the accounts which she brings from Ascension mention the death of Lieut. Elliot, son of Admiral Elliot, and state that Capt. Mansel, of the Actæon, 26, on the coast, was very ill.

Funeral of Mrs. Fry.—The remains of Mrs. Elizabeth Fry were interred on Monday, in the Friends' burying ground at Barking, in Essex. The funeral was conducted in an unostentatious style, in comformity with the recognised custom of the Society of Friends, and yet such was the respect which Mrs. Fry enjoyed among all classes that the procession extended more than half a mile in length, and included 39 carriages, besides about 60 which were waiting at Barking for the arrival of the body. After the necessary preliminaries were arranged, the body was consigned to the grave, and the death-like silence that prevailed for several minutes, was broken by appropriate addresses from two female Friends, and one from Mr. John Joseph Gurney. The delivery of the addresses occupied more than two hours, and they were listened to with the most intense interest, but from the concourse of persons assembled, many were prevented from hearing. No funeral ever created so great a sensation in that neighbourhood. Mrs. Fry was the daughter of the late Mr. John Gurney, of Earlham-hall, Norfolk, and sister to Mr. Samuel Gurney, of Upton-hall, banker. Few of her sex have been so pre-eminent for their works of philanthropy, and for alleviating the sufferings and promoting the happiness of their fellow-creatures. At the early age of 18, by permission of her father, she converted an apartment in Earlham-hall into a school-room, where she daily gave 24 poor children elementary instruction in reading, writing, and arithmetic. In 1800 she married Mr. Joseph Fry, a member of the Society of Friends, who materially aided her praiseworthy exertions by appropriating a large sum annually to her use, by which Mrs. Fry was enabled to extend the sphere of her usefulness. In 1816, Mrs. Fry succeeded in establishing a ladies' committee for the reformation of the interior of Newgate, and in this laudable undertaking she met with the cordial co-operation of the sheriffs of London, and the governor of the prison. Not more than a year had elapsed before the beneficial effects of Mrs. Fry's committee were exhibited. The prison, which was previously a scene of riot, licentiousness, and filth, was exchanged for order, sobriety, and comparative neatness, in the chambers as well as in the persons of the female prisoners. By these and similar acts Mrs. Fry elicited the encomiums of the English and European press, and her name was associated with every philanthropic object in most of the continental nations. In the slave-trade question her exertions were surpassed by few. Such was her humane and benevolent disposition, that her sympathy extended to the whole human family, without reference to country, clime, or religion. She was looked upon as a physician to body and soul; she fed and comforted the poor, supplied them with clothes, and did everything that would administer to their well-being and happiness. Her readiness to hear the cause of the distressed and destitute, and alleviate their sufferings, won for her the respect of all classes, and raised for her a name which reflects credit on her sex as well as on the Society of Friends, of which she was so distinguished a member.

Equestrian Statue of the Queen.—Mr. James Wyatt, the sculptor, of Dudley-grove, Harrow-road, has just completed in plaster an equestrian statue of Her Majesty, which, considering the difficulties of the undertaking, is said to be a work of considerable excellence. One objection, however, must belong to such subjects, viz., that they can hardly be exhibited in such a dress as becomes the situation. In Mr. Wyatt's figure, Her Majesty has a crown on her head, and wears the collar and George on her bare neck, while her shoulders are also uncovered. At the same time the inconsistency of putting her in a riding-habit was not to be avoided, so that one part of the royal person is strangely habited compared with the other. She sits her horse uncommonly well, and the horse itself is a noble animal, fully caparisoned, and not so large as to make Her Majesty's figure appear too small.

Christ's Hospital.—On Wednesday the Lord Mayor, the Lord Mayor elect, several of the Aldermen, the Common Council, Governors, and city officers, proceeded in their carriages to Christ's Hospital, for the purpose of holding a Court of all the Royal Hospitals, to receive a corrected list of the governors of the hospitals, to be confirmed, according to ancient usage. In consequence of the incorrectness of the lists of governors presented on St. Matthew's-day to the Lord Mayor, his Lorship refused to confirm them, and sent them back to the hospitals for revision. It had been particularly observed that the authority of the Lord Mayor, as the head of Christ's Hospital, upon two recent occasions was altogether denied by the majority of the governors—viz., those governors who do not derive their rights from a city of London corporation parentage. The subject was taken up by the corporation upon the presentation of the Lord Mayor's report of what had occurred on St. Matthew's-day at Christ's Hospital, and a resolution was adopted unanimously, after a high eulogium upon the firm and judicious conduct of the Lord Mayor, that his Lordship should be requested to send round to the several hospitals for corrected lists, and to appoint a day to receive them. It was generally understood that those who had denied the authority of the chief magistrate, as head of the Royal Hospitals, intended to close the doors of Christ's Hospital against him and the other members of the corporation, and much interest was excited by the expectation that a row would take place. The consequence of the non-confirmation of the lists is, that the new governors are for the time disqualified. At about half-past 2 o'clock the governors of the several Royal Hospitals began to assemble, but upon arriving at the grand entrance in Newgate-street they found the doors locked, and they were told that the entrance to the hospital was at Christ Church passage. They proceeded to that entrance, which leads to the court-room, and were in the way met by Mr. Trollope, the clerk of the hospital, who informed them, upon being told that they had been summoned to attend a general court, that he had orders not to admit them. At 3 o'clock the attendance became very numerous. Precisely at that hour the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and members of the Court of Common Council who are governors, arrived at the grand entrance, preceded by the City Marshals in their state dresses. The bell was rung, and admittance was formally demanded for the Lord Mayor. Mr. Trollope then made his appearance and read a paper, which stated, that the Lord Mayor would be allowed free access at all times to the hospital, but that his lordship must not be present at any meeting of governors not summoned by the president. Mr. Firth, the deputy town-clerk, then read a formal demand of admission, which not having been obeyed, the procession retired. The matter is to be immediately referred to a court of law, and will lead to the most important consequences in the opinion of many of the civic politicians.

St. Paul's Cathedral.—For some time past a number of workmen have been employed in gilding the railings of the circular gallery which surmounts the top of the dome. The work having been completed, the gallery now presents a splendid appearance, and greatly improves the exterior view of the magnificent pile, in consequence of its harmonising with the large gilt ball and cross at the top of the cathedral.

The New Hall, Lincoln's-Inn.—It is announced that Her Majesty has promised to grace with her presence the opening of this Hall, and that the Queen has fixed Thursday next for its celebration, being a few days before the commmencement of Michaelmas-term.

The London Bridges.—The daily papers state that they "are informed upon the best authority, that the London Central Railway Terminus Company are in negotiation for (indeed, that terms have been agreed to for leasing) Waterloo-bridge, instead of the bridge of the Hungerford Company." The Globe adds that Hungerford suspension-bridge was sold last week by the proprietors for 226,000*l.*; thus yielding 62*l.* 10*s.* for each share of 25*l.*, and that a deposit of 20,000*l.* is to be paid by the purchasers next week. Another scheme is on foot for making a direct railway over Southwark Bridge from Queen-street, Cheapside, to the Elephant and Castle, under the name of the South Suburban Atmospheric, to radiate thence to the different villages south of London.

Improvements in Piccadilly.—The Commissioners of Woods and Forests have commenced their projected improvements in Piccadilly, which is to be widened to seventy feet, from Park-lane to Bolton-street, by taking in about thirty feet of the Green Park. The workmen have already removed a large portion of the iron railing, and razed the ground, the brick wall, and the lodge.

Baths and Wash-houses for the Poor.—The St. Pancras Society is about forthwith to commence operations, by the erection of a new building on the site given by the New River Company, who intend to furnish an ample supply of fresh spring-water, raised from a depth of 200 feet. The company will liberally supply the water for the first six months gratis, and afterwards at a nominal cost. The site contains about 10,000 square feet, and is situated at the base of the large reservoir belonging to the New River Company in the Hampstead-road. The Society propose to supply plunge or shower cold-baths, with all necessary conveniences, at 1*d.*, and 2*d.* for a warm bath; and the wives and daughters of the working classes will have facilities, at a very cheap rate (1*d.* for the three hours), for washing and drying clothes. It is also contemplated to afford the better classes the opportunity of enjoying cold, warm, vapour, and shampooing baths at very moderate rates; and a hope is held out that after the original cost has been defrayed, the establishment will support itself. The success of a similar experiment in Liverpool, and also on a small scale in the Metropolis, is adduced as evidence that the working classes will avail themselves of the opportunity thus held out.

The New Asylums.—At the last meeting of the Marylebone Board of Guardians, a letter addressed by the Poor-law Commissioners to the vestry-clerk was read, stating that the Commissioners saw no reason to alter their resolution to unite Marylebone with other parishes. As this letter, however, was not addressed officially to the Board, it was unanimously resolved to take no notice of it. A communication was then read from the parish of St. James's, Clerkenwell, containing resolutions recently passed at a public vestry meeting, the inhabitants denouncing the formation of that parish into union as the Central Asylum District, and offering to co-operate with Marylebone. This communication was referred to the vestry, and the board confirmed the resolution of the previous week to defer appointing any managers of the Metropolitan District Asylum. It is understood the joint boards intend to meet the Poor-law Commissioners with passive resistance until a public meeting of the parishioners is convened to decide on a more determined course of opposition.

The Asylum for the Houseless Poor.—The annual report of the committee of management just presented states that the central asylum in Playhouse-yard opened December 7, and finally closed April 21, during which period 7294 persons were allowed 52,758 nightly lodgings, and 122,443 rations of bread, at an expense of 1255*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* The Eastern Asylum has sheltered 5013 persons this season, affording 40,182 nights' lodgings, and 99,917 rations of bread, at an expense of 848*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*; the number of female applicants here has decreased, and the number of agricultural labourers from purely agricultural districts has increased. The Western Asylum admitted 4987 persons, affording 28,683 nights' lodgings, and 68,396 rations of bread. A great number of the inmates were labourers passing through London.

The New German Hospital was formally opened last week by Prince George of Cambridge, in the presence of Chevalier Bunsen, and almost all the German merchants and families resident in London. The Institution was established a few months since under the patronage of the King of Prussia; and the house at Dalston, formerly occupied by the Infant Orphan Asylum, has been adapted to the purposes of the Hospital.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Oct. 18:—West Districts, 109; Northern, 127; Central, 161; Eastern, 170; Southern, 204; Total, 771; males, 314; females, 387. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1310; males, 659; females, 651.

Provincial.

Abergavenny.—The Monmouthshire Merlin publishes a long account of the twelfth anniversary of the Abergavenny Cymreigyddion, which took place with great ceremony last week. A procession of harpers and singers and other members of the society marched along, and a large waggon, containing a printing-press, was in the cavalcade, in which two printers, dressed in Welsh flannel, printed cards of the festival, and distributed them to the crowd as the procession moved on. Sir Benjamin Hall, who presided, delivered a long oration, and among the company assembled in the hall were the Indian Prince, Dwarkanauth Tagore, dressed in the costume of his country; Count Pollon, Sardinian Minister; Count Reventlow, Danish Minister; and many of the highest families of the principality. There was a dinner and a distribution of prizes for lyric odes, with Welsh songs, essays, harpists, and singers. The festival appears to have gone off remarkably well.

Andover.—The new master of the Union, Mr. Price, who was appointed on the recommendation of the Assistant-Commissioner, Mr. Parker, has been dismissed. At a meeting of the guardians, a few days since, the clerk read a letter from the Poor Law Commissioners, in which they stated they were not aware of the previous conduct and character of Price, or they would not have sanctioned his recommendation. They admitted that one of their Assistant-Commissioners, Mr. Austin, was sent down to Oxford some time ago to inquire into the conduct of the master, and that he had forwarded to them an official report which they had not examined until the present time, having understood, at the period of Mr. Austin's inquiry, that as soon as it commenced the master resigned, and that therefore the charges against him were not investigated, and required no further notice. Mr. Parker had written a similar explanation, saying he had heard that Price had resigned because he wished to leave his situation at Oxford, and not because of any charges brought against him connected with his conduct in his situation there. The Commissioners having, consequently, recommended that Price should be dismissed, the guardians agreed to a resolution to that effect, and on Friday last elected Mr. Blyth, of the Isle of Wight, as his successor, out of 36 candidates. Mr. Blyth, it is said, has been chosen because he is an old soldier from the same regiment as M'Dougal. The choice does not appear to have been satisfactory to the inhabitants, who anticipate a renewal of the bone-crushing, as two or three tons of bones are now piled up, ready for breaking. In connection with this topic we may mention, that Mr. Parker, the Assistant-Commissioner, has resigned his office, and that his resignation has been accepted.

Dorchester.—Lord Ashley has addressed the following important letter upon the Corn-laws to his constituents in this county:—

To the Gentry, Clergy, and Freeholders of the County of Dorset.—Gentlemen,—The interval of the recess from public duties affords me leisure to address you on the subject of my conduct as a member of the House of Commons. I have taken the course of addressing you by letter, because it is not likely that I shall have the pleasure, this year, of attending any of your agricultural anniversaries; and if, moreover, the period of a dissolution of Parliament be nigh at hand, you may possibly be summoned to exercise the elective franchise before another such opportunity occur for inquiry or explanation. A requisition has, I understand, been numerously and respectably signed, and circulated throughout the county, to call upon some other gentleman whose principles and whose practice are more in accordance with the views of those who have subscribed it, to offer himself as a candidate at the general election for the honour of representing you. I do not complain of this proceeding on the part of the requisitionists; they have exercised, open and legitimately, a constitutional right, and probably a duty—yet it renders inevitable a declaration on my part of the course I shall pursue, that we may not remain in ignorance of the views of each other, and that I may not have anything to suppress now, and explain away hereafter. But it will be very short, because I cannot promise you any alteration. It would be desirable, I know; for I am fully aware of the incompetent manner in which I have discharged the trust committed to my hand; but that is an imperfection beyond my power to amend; and thus, as I am unable to improve my abilities, and altogether indisposed to change my conduct, I have the pain to find myself at variance, for the first time during the space of 14 years, with many of those who have hitherto honoured me by their countenance and support. I will seize this occasion to touch the subject of the Corn-laws, and the certain result of the present movement against them. It appears to me that their destiny is fixed: and that the leading men of the great parties in the Legislature are by no means disinclined to their eventual abolition. The debates of last session have left no doubt on this head—both the candidates for power, and the occupants of it, approximated so much more closely than at any former period, that most of the hearers were induced to believe that their difference was less a matter of principle than a question of time. If this be so, it is needless to argue the policy or impolicy of such a change; it would rather be wise to consider in what way you can break the force of an inevitable blow. The sudden repeal of these laws would be destructive; the gradual abolition of them would be less injurious. You have, at this moment, the power to offer such terms; there is no certainty that you will retain it much longer—our actual prosperity must come to an end; and then the wide and fearful pressure of commercial distress, with the hostility on the one side, and the indifference on the other, of the great political chiefs, will leave you, in an hour of especial difficulty, altogether without a refuge or resource. And now, gentlemen, with many and sincere thanks for the kindness and confidence you have hitherto bestowed upon me, allow me to subscribe myself, with much respect, your very faithful friend and servant, Ashley, London, Oct. 10.

Ely.—A melancholy accident occurred in Ely cathedral on Thursday week, by which Mr. Basevi, the architect, lost his life. He had ascended part of the western tower, accompanied by the Dean and Mr. Stuart, one of the minor canons, and was inspecting some works executing near the belfry, when, on moving backwards, he fell through a hole in the belfry floor, scarcely large enough for his body to pass through, to the floor of the clock chamber, a distance of 40 feet. On being taken up, he exhibited no sign of life, and he was immediately taken to the deanery, where an inquest has since been held on his body. The Fitzwilliam Museum, at Cambridge, was erected from his designs, as was also the Conservative Club-house in Pall-mall. Mr. Basevi was about 45 years of age, and has left a widow and numerous family.

Gloucester.—The sudden disappearance some weeks ago of Mr. Hill, solicitor and secretary of the Gloucester General Infirmary, produced considerable sensation in this city, his character and standing in society being such as to render it unlikely that he would be guilty of any act of dishonesty and irregularity. The fact, however, soon transpired that, under the pressure of difficulties, he had appropriated about 1200*l.* which belonged to an inmate in St. Bartholomew's Hospital, named Ann Woodward, a widow, and who in her turn had imposed upon the charity trustees by representations of abject poverty, whilst she had at her command the sum mentioned. In 1832 she was admitted into the hospital, where she has received 5*s.* 6*d.* a week, with free lodgings and other advantages. At the time of her election it was whispered that she was possessed of money, but this she solemnly denied. It now appears that, with the view of concealing her money from the knowledge of her husband, she placed it in the stocks in the name of Ann Wood. Some of her relations, however, who had ascertained that she had a hoard, apprehending difficulty in recovering the money at her death, induced the miser to adopt measures for selling the stock and again investing it in her own name. Mr. Hill was applied to to negotiate the sale and the investment; he accomplished the one object but not the other, and applied the money to his own purposes. The old woman wondering why the dividends had been suspended, the truth came out, and Mr. Hill, to avoid consequences, was obliged to abscond suddenly. The affair was thoroughly investigated by a committee, and the facts as above narrated having been fully proved by the admission of the woman herself, and other evidence; the charity trustees last week unanimously ordered her expulsion from the hospital.

Hounslow.—On Saturday Lieut. Kerwan was brought before the magistrates for further investigation on the charge of having stabbed Quartermaster Tarleton on the 28th ult. Mr. Tarleton himself attended the Court and described the occurrence in detail, stating that he should not, of his own accord, take any measures with a view of prosecuting Lieut. Kerwan, should the magistrates not require him to do so. The Chairman said that the bench had given their anxious consideration to all the facts of the case, and although they did not consider it necessary to send Lieut. Kerwan to trial, they felt it their duty to hold Lieut. Kerwan in recognizances to appear at the Central Criminal Court, to answer any indictment that may be preferred against him. The bail that would be required would be Lieut. Kerwan in 500*l.* and two sureties in 250*l.* each. The sureties were at once arranged, and Lieut. Kerwan was discharged.

Leeds.—Some interest has been excited in military circles for some time past by a Court-Martial in the cavalry barracks in this town on Lieut. Hyder of the 10th Hussars, for having, when garrisoned at Ballincollig in Ireland, endeavoured to borrow a horse from a Mr. Silvester Oliver with the intent to deceive Col. Vandeleur, his commanding officer, by passing it off as his own charger. The particulars of the case are very lengthy, and of no particular interest to the public, except as creating an impression that Lieut. Hyder had been harshly treated. After the Court had formed its judgment, the whole of the proceedings were sent up for the perusal of the Judge-Advocate-General, and upon his report to the Queen the judgment of the Court was announced to be an honourable acquittal.

Liverpool.—Mr. Pugin, who is so celebrated for restoring ancient architecture in this country, has, by authority, submitted a plan for a Catholic cathedral, upon a grand scale, to be erected in Liverpool. Its length is to be 460 feet, with two lofty towers, and a steeple of great height. It will stand upon two and a half acres of land. The cost will exceed 100,000*l.* Several subscriptions of 500*l.* to 2,000*l.* each are already spoken of.

Leicester.—It will be recollected that in April last, the cases of Thomas Lakin and Ann Ward, were brought by petition before both Houses of Parliament. It appeared that having been unable to pay a poor-rate, and having no sufficient goods and chattels, they were imprisoned in the county gaol till the rate was paid. It was paid by a charitable gentleman in Leicester. They were then sent to the House of Correction for one month to hard labour, for inability to pay the costs, and for having as before, nothing on which a distress could be levied. Thomas Lakin has now been subjected to another levy, which he is again unable to pay. A distress-warrant has been issued with the same result as before, the man has been committed to the county gaol for an indefinite period, till the rate, amounting to 3*s.* 4*d.*, is paid, with the prospect of another month's hard labour for costs. Lakin is said to be a poor man of excellent character, as attested in writing by his employers and others. His wages for the last 11 weeks (taken from the paymaster's weekly tickets), average 9*s.* 8*d.* per week. The rent of his cottage—the little furniture of which belongs to his landlord—is 1*s.* 6*d.*, leaving 8*s.* to support himself, wife, and 4 children, the eldest 11 years old, and blind, and the youngest barely 12 months. By going to the Ashby-de-la-Zouch bench, when summoned a week or two ago, he incurred a loss of 4*s.*, and the fees then charged and ordered by the magistrates were 5*s.* for the magistrate's clerk, and 1*s.* 6*d.* for the constable, so that, doubtless, when the hand of charity releases him from his imprisonment, he will, as before, be charged some 20*s.* or 30*s.* costs, and sent for a month to the treadmill for inability to pay that amount. On the former occasion, in April last, he was released three days before the expiration of the month by the intervention of Her Majesty, both Sir J. Graham in the House of Commons, and the Lord Chancellor in the House of Lords, admitting the illegality and inhumanity of the course pursued by the magistrates. The committing magistrates on that occasion were Mr. R. G. Cresswell and Mr. W. Wootton Abney. In this instance they are Mr. R. G. Cresswell and the Rev. Sir Nigel Gresley. The commitment is dated from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Oct. 4.—It is rumoured in Leicester that the Roman Catholics are about to purchase the Three Crowns Inn, and in its place to erect a magnificent cathedral, similar to that lately built at Nottingham. They are now erecting a very large college at Ratcliffe, near the Syston station; and on Charnwood Forest is a monastery inhabited by about 30 monks. The latter possess a farm of about 250 acres, which they themselves cultivate, and to the poor of the neighbourhood they are exceedingly charitable.

Oxford.—The long-contemplated withdrawal of several leading members of the Tractarian party from the Established Church has at length taken place, and the following Members of this University have been received into the Roman Catholic Church in the course of the last few days:—The Rev. J. H. Newman, B.D., Fellow of Oriel, and author of the celebrated Tract XC.; the Rev. Mr. Stanton, M.A., of Brasenose; the Rev. Mr. Bowles, M.A., of Exeter Coll.; Rev. Ambrose St. John, Student of Christ Church; Mr. J. D. Dalgairns, M.A., of Exeter Coll.; Mr. Woodmason, of Littlemore; Rev. Mr. Estcourt, of Exeter Coll.; Rev. J. Walker, of Brasenose; Mr. F. Rogers, fellow of Oriel; Mr. L. S. F. Buckingham, Rev. Mr. Copeland, and Mr. Albany Christie, M.A., Fellow of Oriel. It is stated confidently that other clergymen, also Members of this University, are preparing to take a similar step. It is understood that the reception of Mr. Newman into the Roman Catholic Church took place at Littlemore.

Plymouth.—During the stay of the Experimental Squadron in the Sound, a spirit of discontent prevailed on board the ships, in consequence of the restrictions placed on the liberty of the men. The disaffection thus produced was manifested by various acts on board the flag-ship, St. Vincent, Captain R. F. Rowley; Trafalgar, Captain Martin; and the Albion, Captain Lockyer. To give specific particulars on this subject is very difficult, as great secresy has been observed, but it is generally believed that preventing the men going ashore, or receiving their wives aboard, and the suppression of their smoking and other privileges at a period when the duty of the fleet is of a heavy character led to the breach of discipline. Several men, it is said, were put in irons, and are to be tried forthwith by Court-Martial, and in all probability they will be transported.—A Court-Martial was held on board the Caledonia in this port last week on Lieut. Burrell, of the Superb, for being out of his ship not dressed in his proper uniform, i. e. not wearing cocked hat and sword, contrary to orders, and also for sleeping during his watch, being a breach of the 27th article of war. The defence was that Lieut. Burrell was labouring under the effects of a severe physical injury, but it appeared to be not of a nature to produce drowsiness. The Court declared the charges proved, and sentenced the prisoner to be dismissed Her Majesty's service.

Scarborough.—It is said Mr. Hudson has originated a scheme for making a harbour and docks on the north side of this town, to facilitate the communication with the Baltic, and has placed 50,000*l.* at the disposal of the company. A branch will, of course, be made from the station to Peasholme Beck.

Sunderland.—A melancholy accident happened on Wednesday week, near the village of Hendon, two miles south of this town. On that day the pupils of Dr. Cowan, of the Grange, had gone to Hendon to bathe in the sea, when several of them were swept off their feet by the current. The teachers succeeded in saving all but three, who, with one of the teachers, Mr. Robert Speciall, were drowned. Their names are, Robert Baird, aged 17, and Archibald Baird, aged 16, sons of Sir David Baird, Bart., Newbyth, East Lothian, and Robert Lennie, aged 10, son of M'Alpin Lennie, Esq., of Dunswinston, Dumfriesshire. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of accidental death.—On Wednesday evening a public dinner was given in this town to Mr. Hudson, in honour of his return for this borough. Upwards of 350 gentlemen sat down to dinner, J. J. Wright, Esq., in the chair, supported by Lord Adolphus Vane, the Hon. H. T Liddell, M.P.; Alderman Richardson, of York; the Sheriff of York; R. Pemberton, Esq., of the Barnes; and C. Bramwell, Esq. On his left, Lord Seaham; Sir J. H. Lowther, M.P.; Colonel Wood, M.P.; Hodgson Hinde, Esq., M.P.; Matthew Bell, Esq., M.P.; the Rev. Dr. Townsend, prebendary of Durham, &c. The dinner went off with great éclat; and Mr. Hudson, in the course of his speech, said the district which he now has the honour to represent is, "perhaps, one of the most important in the kingdom; and if its resources were fully developed, Sunderland and Newcastle might rival Liverpool and Manchester. But to accomplish this, they must not suffer political feeling to interfere; they must not allow politics to intermix in the management of these affairs, and by avoiding this conduct they would win over many to the principles they professed, and show a bright contrast to those trading politicians who mind everybody's business but their own."

Tamworth.—A Birmingham paper states that Sir Robert Peel arrived on Tuesday week at his seat, Drayton Manor, where he has been surrounded by several scientific and agricultural friends and gentlemen of eminence. Amongst those present were the Earls of Aylesford and Talbot, Drs. Buckland and Playfair, and Mr. Josiah Parkes, consulting engineer of the Royal Agricultural Society. It is currently reported that the Premier is about to set the example to all extensive landed proprietors and tenants, by an entire drainage of all lands requiring it on his own estates, on the new, economical, and effective system recommended in the report of that association.

Windsor.—Lieut. Robert Carter, who succeeded to the Governorship of the Naval Knights of Windsor, on the death of Lieut. Charles Carter, which took place on the 1st inst., died at Exeter, where he had been on a visit to his relatives, on Tuesday last. Lieut. Okes, brother to the Lower Master at Eton, who is the next senior Naval Knight, will be the new Governor.

York.—Mr. Hudson, M.P., has purchased Newby Park, one of the beautiful seats of Earl de Grey. It is bounded by the river Swale, and adjoins the splendid estate of Baldersby, in the North Riding, which Mr. Hudson some time ago purchased of the Duke of Devonshire. As there is no family mansion on the Baldersby estate, this purchase will form a most desirable appanage.

Railways.

Another very serious accident occurred on Monday on the Midland Railway, near Barnsley, which has been attended with very fearful injuries. As the Leeds and London mail train, which is due at Leeds at 5 A. M., was running between the Masborough and Cudworth stations, some part of the engine became out of order, owing to which the train was unable to travel beyond the rate of eight or nine miles an hour. In consequence of this, messengers were sent back to the Masborough station in order to procure another engine to carry the train on to Leeds. In the meantime the train proceeded at a slow pace, with the usual signal lights fixed behind, and when passing near the Leeds side of the Cudworth station, the assistant engine came up behind at a rapid pace, and ran with immense force into the train. The concussion was of course tremendous. The last carriage, which was second-class, was forced up from the rails, and the buffers were driven into the first compartment of a first-class carriage which preceded it. In this compartment were Mr. Boteler, commissioner of the Leeds Bankruptcy Court, Mr. Andrews, of Leeds, Inspector Child, and Sergeant Stubbs, of the Leeds detective police force, two of whom have sustained injuries, the issue of which it is impossible to anticipate. Mr. Boteler, who is a gentleman between 60 and 70 years of age, had one leg shattered close to the knee, and the other severely injured; and Mr. Stubbs received a compound fracture of the left leg, and other material injuries. Mr. Child was much bruised, but not otherwise hurt. All the other passengers in the train were more or less bruised by the violence of the collision, but escaped with a stun and some slight contusions. Sir J. H. Lowther, Bart., M.P. for York, was one of the passengers. Mr. Boteler was taken home to his residence, at Oulton, a few miles from Leeds, where amputation of the leg was performed the same evening. Mr. Stubbs was conveyed to the Leeds Infirmary. The cause of the accident is stated to be that the driver of the assistant engine had anticipated that the train would be considerably further in advance than it was, that he was unaware of being near it until it was too late to slacken his pace and avoid a collision.—The increase within the last 10 days of new railway speculations announced, answers to a capital in round numbers of 50,000,000*l.*, the schemes being about 40 in number. There had previously been advertised about 460 new railway schemes to be brought before the Parliamentary session of 1846, and representing a capital of nearly 500,000,000*l.*, the first calls on which may be estimated at 45,000,000*l.*—The Leeds and Liverpool, it is said, have determined to extend their proposed line from Bury to Parkside. The surveys are completed.—The Sheffield, Wortley, Silkstone, and Wakefield have resolved to make a branch line to unite with the Manchester and Leeds.—The Derby and Crewe have resolved to increase their capital by 500,000*l.*, to carry out branches from Tutbury to Burton-on-Trent, and from Stoke to Norton-bridge.—The Manchester, Buxton, Matlock, and Midland, announce a proposed increase of 600,000*l.* to their capital for carrying out branches and extensions.—Surveyors have been taking a plan of Cleethorpe's, the important bathing place, with the view of carrying a branch from the Louth and Grimsby. The directors of the Bristol and Birmingham have directed Mr. Robert Stephenson to survey a line from the Birmingham and Gloucester, at or near the Barnt Green station, Bromsgrove, through Redditch, to Alcester, and also a line from the Birmingham and Gloucester, near Bromsgrove, to Halesowen, where it will be connected with the projected Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Stour Valley line. The Grand Junction are projecting a line from Stafford, viâ Wrexham to Abergeele.—A line from Salisbury to Lymington is proposed, to connect Salisbury and the South-West.—Upwards of 40 surveyors, traffic takers, and others, landed on the Isle of Wight last week, and commenced the preliminary inquiries.—Negotiations, it is understood, are pending for leasing to the Grand Junction the North Wales and Shrewsbury and Chester lines.—Rumours are afloat at Oakham, that, in consequence of Lord Harborough's determination not to allow the Syston and Peterborough to pass through his park, it has been thought most practicable to change its route, between Oakham and Stamford, for the one by Emperingham.—The works between Gainsborough and Kirton are proceeding vigorously.—It is understood that an arrangement has been effected between the Eastern Counties and the Eastern Union, that the latter shall be allowed, unopposed, to construct the Harwich Railway from Manningtree; and that it shall be leased to the Eastern Counties. The two years for which the Eastern Counties Company were bound to take Braithwaite's Harwich line having expired, and nothing having been done, they consider themselves released from their contract with that concern.—The Thetford, Bury St. Edmunds, and Newmarket, have obtained the assent of the Duke of Rutland, through whose estate the line will pass, for about 4 miles before it enters Newmarket.—An arrangement, it is understood, has been made by the promoters of the Isle of Axholme line with Mr. Hudson and the York and North Midland, whereby the latter takes a large portion of the stock of the former, with a per centage guarantee and half profits.—Mr. Hudson has made an offer to the directors of the Durham and Sunderland for the purchase of the line. Negotiations have been going on for some time, and a special meeting has been called for the 3d Nov., to consider the terms.—The negotiations of the Eastern Counties proprietary and directors with Mr. Hudson have succeeded, and Mr. Hudson assumes the chairmanship. It is rumoured that the Liverpool interest in the directory will retire, and that the result of Mr. Hudson's accession will be an alliance, for certain objects at present in embryo, between the Northern and Eastern Railway schemes. A special meeting of the Eastern Counties shareholders is convened for the 30th inst., to consider various financial arrangements.—It is rumoured that negociations are carrying on between the Great Western and South Western likely to be advantageous to both, and materially to affect the new schemes in their relative districts.—It is stated that the depositors of the London and Manchester (Ashurst's) line have paid up the 10 per cent. without a single exception, amounting to upwards of half a million.—A special meeting of the proprietors of the Bridgewater and Taunton Canal was held on Wednesday week, at Bristol, when resolutions were passed for applying to Parliament in the next session for powers to convert the canal into a railway.—A special meeting of the proprietors of the Chard canal was also held in the same city on the next afternoon, when it was unanimously resolved that powers should be given to the committee of management to take measures for converting the canal into a railroad, or to join any other company for that purpose. In conjunction with the Bridgewater and Taunton canal it is proposed to unite the Bristol and English Channels, by means of a railway.—A grand scheme for converting the Caledonian canal into a railway is also on foot. It has for its object the leasing of the canal, with the improvements now in progress, gathering in the traffic by large vessels from sea to sea, and goods landed in warehouses at Inverness for the west. It will work itself into the Scottish Western half way between the end of the canal at Fort William and Glasgow, and its route will be over an area of some hundred miles. It will be called the great North and West of Scotland, and will open up and consolidate direct communication with all the northern lines projected and in progress, commencing at Inverness, running along the south bank of the Caledonian Canal to Fort William, thence through Argyleshire, Perthshire, and Dumbartonshire, direct to Glasgow, uniting the Murray Frith and German Ocean on the east with the Clyde and Atlantic on the west.—The Duke of Norfolk has allied himself with the Duke of Cleveland in hostility to railways, and has publicly announced his determination "to oppose in every way he may think most likely to be successful, the proposed Dorking and Brighton Atmospheric Line."—Last week numerous meetings of wharfingers and owners of villas and other residences on the banks of the Regent's Canal, were held for the purpose of taking into consideration the sale of the canal for its conversion into a railway, and to adopt such steps as might be deemed expedient for the protection of their several interests. Resolutions condemning the proposed conversion were unanimously adopted, and a committee to watch over the interests of the meeting, to collect information, and if necessary to organize an opposition to the measure was formed.—So great is the demand for assistant-surveyors, to execute the surveys of the almost innumerable projected railways, that salaries varying from a guinea and a half to four guineas a day are freely given to practised hands. Several of the young men engaged in the Ordnance Map-office, at Portsmouth, have accepted engagements, which are almost forced upon them, and many of the privates and non-commissioned officers of the Royal Engineer corps have bought out of the service, in order to take part in the lucrative employment of railway surveying, for which their practice upon the Ordnance survey has well qualified them. Owing to this circumstance, the completion of the great map of Southampton, with the contour levellings, which the Ordnance department here has been engaged for some time in executing for the Improvement commissioners, will be delayed some months. The public service of the department will also be materially interfered with.—It is stated, as a proof of the eagerness of the public to obtain allotments of shares, that the applications for shares in the Direct Western amount to nearly one million and a half.—The following is a strong illustration of the wonders railways will have worked, in the event of threatened invasion: In 1806 it took a body of troops, proceeding by the Paddington Canal for Liverpool, and thence by transports for Dublin, seven days to reach their destination, by canal, relays of fresh horses for the boats being ready at all the stations. Marching to the same spot occupied a detachment only fourteen days. The seven days are now reduced into almost as many hours, an entire battalion being conveyed between Liverpool and London in six or seven hours, reaching head quarters in full vigour, and ready to oppose their concentrated strength to the progress of any foreign armament.

Prices and Traffic, by permission, from the List of Messrs. Hill, Fawcett, & Hill, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

Name of Railway. Those marked thus * are not yet opened.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Week ending between Oct. 14. & Oct. 21.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Corresponding Week. 1844.	6 Mos. Dividend Per Share. † 8 Mos.	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid up.	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock.
	£	£	£ s. d.	£	£	£
Birmingham, Glo'ster		9,739	2 0 0	100	all	124-6
Bristol, Birmingham
Bristol, Exeter			1 8 0	100	70	89-91
Bristol, Glo'ster			1 0 0	50	30	54-6
Chester, Holyhead	*	*	*	50	15	17½-18
Eastern Counties	7,251	4,692	0 3 0†	avr.	14½	20½-1¼
Eastern Union				50	20
Do. Extension				25	1½
Edinburgh, Glasgow	2,316	2,206	1 5 0	50	all	70-5
Grand Junction	15,378	8,551	2 10 0†	100	all
Great North of England			3 0 0	100	all	215-17
Great Western	20,137	17,151	3 4 0	100	80	140-5
Gt. South. & Western (I.)	*	*	*	50	15	22-4
Do. Extension	*	*	*	50	2½	14½-15
Hull, Selby				50	all	101-3
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*	*	50	25	47-9
Liverpool, Manchester		4,943	4 10 0	100	all
London, Birmingham	22,635	16,983	5 0 0	stk.	100	216-19
London, Blackwall	939	812	0 3 0	avr.	16⅔	9-½
London, Brighton	5,686	5,173	1 10 0	50	all	62-5
London, Croydon	1,627		0 8 0	avr.	13⅓	21½-2½
London, Greenwich		445		avr.	12½	10-½
London, South-Western	7,266	6,869	2 0 0	avr.	41½	73-6
Manchester, Birmingham	4,436	3,488	1 0 0	40	40	78-82
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	995	939	2 14 0	123	93
Manchester, Leeds, Hull	7,192		2 16 0	100	73	146-51
Midland	18,271	10,859	2 2 6	stk.	100	155-65
Do. Birmingham, Derby				stk.	100	120-5
Newcastle, Carlisle	1,675	17,731	2 10 0	100	all
Newcastle, Darlington	2,886	2,070	4 0 0	25	all	37-39
North British	*	*	*	25	15	22-3
Northern, Eastern			1 2 6	50	45	68-70
Norwich, Brandon				20	14	20-2
Preston, Wyre	551	222		50	all	42½-3½
Sheffield, Manchester	1,196	968	5 p. Cent	100	95
South Devon	*	*	*	50	20	29-31
South-Eastern, Dover	7,707	5,176	0 13 4	avr.	33⅓	37-8
Yarmouth, Norwich			0 10 0	20	all	26-8
York, North Midland	5,512	2,645	2 10 0	50	all	103-11
Do. Scarboro' Branch	*	*	*	25	all	53-6
Do. Selby			0 12 8	50	20	77-80
French Railways.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*	*	20	8	11-½
Orleans, Vierzon	*	*	*	20	10	18-19
Orleans, Bordeaux	*	*	*	20	4	10⅝-11½
Paris, Orleans	7,097	6,280	1 0 2½	20	all	46⅞-7½
Paris, Rouen	6,340	5,567	0 19 2	20	all	39½-40½
Rouen, Havre				20	14	29⅞ 30½

Ireland.

Dublin.—It is announced that Thomas Lloyd, Esq., of Beechmount, D.L. and J.P., who recently declared himself a convert to Repeal, has received a supersedeas from the Lord Chancellor, from the commission of the peace; and the Lord Lieutenant has since deprived him of his deputy lieutenancy. In the recent cases of the Orange magistrates who were deputy lieutenants, the Lord Lieutenant made the first move by removing them from the latter office, and the Chancellor followed in regard to the commission of the peace. In the case of Mr. Lloyd, however, the order of proceeding has been reversed.—The leaders of the Orange party, recently re-organised, have published a lengthy address to the Protestants of the British empire. It appears that this document was unanimously adopted at a meeting at Belfast on the 17th inst., the Earl of Roden in the chair. It was moved by the Earl of Erne, seconded by the Hon. Somerset Maxwell, and signed by Lord Roden in the name of the meeting, and on behalf of the Marquis of Downshire, the Earl of Enniskillen, Viscount O'Neil, and other noblemen and gentlemen, who signified their approval by letter. The substance of this address is to the following effect:—It sets out by calling on the Protestants of Great Britain to give the case of their Irish brethren a calm and unprejudiced hearing, as they believe that their fall would be the signal for the fall of Protestantism throughout Christendom. It then refers to the strenuous support the Irish Protestants gave to the present Government on their accession to office, notwithstanding the misgivings of others whose foresight has now fully justified the course they have adopted; still they disclaim any indisposition to co-operate with Ministers in a conciliatory policy towards the Roman Catholics, but it must be on terms of equality with both parties; that the advancement of the church of Rome is not to proceed pari passu with the depression of Protestantism; they object to the endowment of Maynooth, contrary to the remonstrances of a million of British Protestants, while a peremptory refusal was given to the reasonable petition of the Irish Protestants for some slight aid towards the instruction of their children in a manner which they conceive to be conformable to their faith; they are therefore driven to the startling conclusion that it is the design of the Minister to govern Ireland through the medium of the Roman Catholic party, whose influence is to be purchased at any hazard or by any concession. Under such circumstances they are led to suppose that the next step will be the project of endowing the Roman Catholic Clergy—one which, they hesitate not to say, would strike at the maintenance of the Established Church, and thus shake one of the fundamental articles of the Act of Union. Reference is then made to the general state of this country—the murders, the conspiracies, the immunity enjoyed by the perpetrators of the foulest deeds, and the comparative innocuousness of the power of the law. To meet these evils, they propose to associate with their English brethren in the spirit of men who can appreciate the value of religion, confident in that veneration for constitutional liberty which makes an Englishman jealous of any encroachment of his right of free expression of political opinions. The recent dismissals of magistrates are then instanced as acts both harsh and arbitrary, and as an attempt to establish a principle that to unite for any purpose, however legal, may expose the parties to the same penalties as if their objects had been unlawful. To carry this principle out, any Government so inclined might convert the Irish magistracy into a body of political partisans, and all confidence in them by the people would be at an end. The appeal concludes by calling on the Protestants of the kingdom to strain every energy to secure a faithful representation in the House of Commons, and no longer to neglect the registries, if they would not have their political influence wholly paralyzed.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday in Conciliation-hall, and was more crowded than usual, in consequence of the presence of Mr. O'Connell. Mr. J. H. Dunne took the chair. Mr. O'Connell delivered a long speech on the usual topics of the day, in which he made a violent attack on Lord Rosse, and on his lordship's appointment as a visitor to Maynooth. He then passed to the Report of the Royal Commission of the Fine Arts, appointed to inquire what statues it would be proper to place in the new Houses of Parliament. They had recommended, he said, that one should be erected to Stephen Langton, the Catholic primate of England, who said mass for the assembled barons on the morning of the day they compelled King John to sign Magna Charta: but they refused one to the Archbishop of Dublin. And why? Because his see was not in England [laughter]. They also refused one to Thomas à Becket, the man who protected the liberties of England from the tyranny of the second Henry, and at whose shrine 100,000 Englishmen had assembled in homage, because they regarded him as the advocate of their liberty. He regarded Thomas à Becket as one of the noblest characters in history, and he died a martyr as he lived a saint. But they had resolved on giving statues to Cromwell and General Monk; why they might as well erect a statue to Judas Iscariot as to Monk! Indeed, they only wanted a third to make the two complete, and they therefore should have added the Devil, and then the group would be perfect by the presence of their master. He (Mr. O'Connell) considered they might have spared Ireland the insult of erecting statues to such men; and yet the Morning Chronicle, the organ of the Whigs, had been the chief instigator of this statue to Cromwell, as it was also the supporter of Rosas in Buenos Ayres—Rosas, the greatest monster in existence, except Nicholas of Russia. The Morning Chronicle had, for party purposes, taken that wretch under their patronage, but he was delighted to perceive the Government were against him, and he would feel himself compelled by a sense of duty to go over to London to support them in their attack against that monstrous villain. If they were to have a statue to Cromwell on the other side of the Channel, the Irish would have representations of his deeds on this. They would have paintings representing his deeds of blood at Drogheda, Wexford, and other places. The rent for the week was 377*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.*

Killarney.—The demonstration in favour of a Repeal of the Union, and the first which has taken place in the county of Kerry since the commencement of the agitation, took place on the 6th inst., at which at least 50,000 persons were present. The place selected for the meeting was a field on the borders of the lower lake, commanding a full view of the magnificent scenery of this romantic region. Mr. O'Connell, who stopped in Tralee on the previous day, arrived, accompanied by Mr. S. O'Brien, Mr. J, H. Dunne, jun., and Mr. Primrose, about 3 o'clock, and was accompanied to the place of meeting by the trades of Tralee and Killarney, who formed themselves into a procession, and with bands and banners met him about a mile from the town, whence they proceeded in the same order to the meeting. The procession arrived on the ground about 4 o'clock, immediately after which the chair was taken by Mr. Kean Mahony. A resolution in favour of Repeal having been passed—

Mr. D. Mahony, of Dunloe, J.P., expressed a desire to oppose the resolution, and to declare his reasons for disapproving of the Repeal agitation. He said he came there to pay every respect to the liberator of his country; for, differing as he did from him on the subject of Repeal of the Union, he yet entertained the highest regard for him, and believed he was thoroughly determined to promote the welfare of his country. As he could not concur with him, he felt bound to come forward and oppose the resolution then proposed. There were two modes adopted of putting down the Repeal agitation of which he did not approve—namely, prosecution and persecution; for he believed the only means to put it down was argument, and argument alone. Their object, of course, was to get Repeal; but if that took place there should be a reform in the Irish House of Commons according to the increased population; but more than that was necessary. The Liberator had often said that the golden link of the Crown should be preserved at all times; but he (Mr. Mahony) thought that the complicated relation which existed between both countries required more than that. That golden link would no doubt be preserved by the existence of the King, or Queen, or Regent, a Consul, or an Emperor; but the most important duties of the state were to be discharged by an Irish Parliament, and in doing so he had no doubt but that it would come to blows with the English Legislature. Mr. Pitt had foreseen that, and directed all his energies to bring about the union. In all their political movements it was necessary they should take such steps that it should not be deemed necessary to recede; but in the present instance he thought that such would be the case, and that considerable mischief would be the consequence. He maintained that a Repeal of the Union would bring about a collision between the two countries, until the terms of the compact were previously arranged, and he looked in vain in any of the speeches in Conciliation-hall, or elsewhere, for any plan in which such terms were proposed.—Mr. O'Connell then said that he was always proud of the men of Kerry, but he was that day doubly proud of them. It had been said—and what he would not be said?—that at those tumultuous meetings of the people which took place in so many parts of Ireland, no one who differed in opinion with them had any chance of being heard. That was scattered on the press; but, oh! what a contradiction to that falsehood was given that day! He would say to haughty England, and all those who opposed the legislative rights of Ireland, that they were liars when they asserted that the people would not listen to the arguments of those opposed to them with patience and courtesy, who spoke sentiments directly at variance with their own. They had contradicted that falsehood most nobly that day, in the case of Mr. Mahony. There was not certainly a more respectable gentleman in the county than he was, he belonged to a most respectable and ancient family, he was independent in fortune, and therefore entitled to be heard anywhere; and yet, although he promised to resist the question of repeal by argument, what argument did he use? The first thing he said was, that a collision would take place between the English Parliament and the Irish Parliament—that a collision did take place formerly on the question of the Regency; but then he admitted that the Repealers were right in the opinion they entertained on the subject. What argument was that against repeal? He said they admitted the right of whatever Sovereign or Regent, Consul or Emperor, reigned in England, to claim sovereignty in Ireland. He (Mr. O'Connell) objected to Consuls or Emperors, for they would have no one but a king, or a sovereign like their beloved Queen, God bless her! His excellent friend Mr. Mahony had no other argument to urge against Repeal but the question of the Regency; but then he said that a great many other questions remained to be settled. Why that was an excellent reason for Repeal, for, as matters then stood, England had all the settlements to herself, lock, stock, and barrel; and in order to have their share of the bargain it was necessary to have the control of their affairs. If a man went to the market with a cow to sell, he would not intrust her for sale to the butcher who wished to buy her for his own use; yet that was the argument of his excellent friend. Now he (Mr. O'Connell) contended that that was an argument for a Repeal of the Union, and he most respectfully solicited him to join with him in having Ireland for the Irish, as well as Scotland for the Scotch, and England for the English. He appealed to those who heard him if the shadow of an argument had been advanced against Repeal by Mr. Mahony. There was a gentleman who came to argue with them, and like Balaam's ass, instead of cursing the Union, he blessed and prayed for it. It was the greatest triumph they ever had, and he was doubly pleased with the men of Kerry for listening to the argument of an opponent as they did, without the slightest interruption. The hon. and learned gentleman, after impressing on the minds of the people the necessity of preparing for the registries, so as to return two Repealers for the county, concluded by impressing on those who heard him the necessity of registering their votes, in order to give their suffrages for a representative who would represent the Repeal interest in the house of Parliament, or, as it is called here, the British House of Commons. A petition was then read and adopted, after which the meeting separated, and the vast assemblage returned to their own homes without the slightest disturbance.—A dinner took place in the evening, at which about 500 persons were present. The chair was taken by Mr. Denis Shine Lalor, supported by Mr. O'Connell, Mr. Smith O'Brien, Mr. M. O'Connell, Mr. Kelly, M.P. for Limerick; Mr. M. J. O'Connell, the Mayor of Cork, the Mayor of Limerick, &c. The healths of the Queen, &c., having been given, the CHAIRMAN, in a speech of an hour's length at least, proposed "the Health of O'Connell."—Mr. O'CONNELL then said,—How strange and almost fantastical it is that I should begin a reply to so brilliant a speech as that delivered by your chairman, by telling you a simple truth,—that I shall be laughed at. I shall, of course, be sneered at. Yet I speak the words of soberness and truth when I assure you that the great object of my political life is to prevent a separation between Great Britain and Ireland. He was convinced that the connexion with England might be, ought to be, and should be prolonged during his life, because he was thoroughly persuaded it was for the benefit of both countries; but after his death, if he knew anything of the expression of the eye of his countrymen, or the determination of their look, the connection between Great Britain and Ireland would be in exceeding great jeopardy. He was labouring for the continuance of that connection, not as it then was, but for the mutual advantage of both, or the day would arrive when Ireland would endure it no longer. He was glad of the great influence that he possessed; he was proud of the manner in which he was obeyed, for, without the least power to carry his wishes into execution, his commands were obeyed with an alacrity which even surprised himself. He was glad of that, for one of the most powerful throes of his heart was for the connection between both countries, for the good of each. He would submit to that; he would not rebel against it where it was useful to both, and not destructive to either. His object was, as a loyal subject, to make the connection beneficial to both countries, and yet he could not help thinking that he had the strongest wish to be beneficial to Ireland. He who differed with him, and he should not have to go far to find him, had no hesitation in arraigning him as a separatist and a traitor to England and Ireland. They might, no doubt, treat the multitude with contempt, they might object to their going between the wind and their nobility, but he for one could not, and would not look on them as good Irishmen—as good subjects—if they did not assist him in placing the connection on such a basis as would make the throne of their beloved Sovereign secure, and her authority extended throughout the entire of her dominions. Mr. O'Connell concluded thus:—I utter the language of perfect impartiality; we must look for repeal peaceably, tranquilly, within the bounds of the law and the spirit of the constitution. I have often considered that a short cut might be taken in the achievement of our object, if England were in distress; but I now utterly disclaim all that, as we must obtain it by Act of Parliament. But perhaps you will say they will not pass such an act; they shall pass it, and then they can rely on us to make them secure against the united world. Why am I so sanguine? Cast your eyes back on the last four years—a short period indeed—and contrast the conduct of the administration at present with what it was when they came into power. A majority of over a hundred pledged to do nothing for Ireland—pledged against Popery, the religion of Ireland. Sir James Graham in the pride of his Northumberland chivalry, declared that "conciliation had reached its limits:" that is only four years since, yet at present they will give us everything but Repeal. They will bribe the priests to their hearts' content. They will do everything we choose to ask of them, and if any person questioned Sir Thomas Fremantle on the matter, he would whisper to him in reply—"we will do everything for Ireland save the one thing;" but the one thing is what I want, and it is commonly called the Repeal. I defy any man to look back for the last four years and not see the alterations that have taken place—Ireland at one moment trampled upon, and in the next promised, if peaceable, sweet cake and sugar-plum. It is a ludicrous term, but nevertheless true in effect and substance. And what do we owe it all to? I am sorry you, men of Kerry, had not had your share in the contest. I tell you we owe it to Conciliation-hall, and we will owe more to the exertions of Kerry for freedom; for at this moment the local aristocracy are powerless. I am not afraid of exaggerating beyond the strict line of duty the men of Kerry. I announce to them the fact, that they shall not sleep in tranquillity if two Repealers be not returned for Kerry, and none others. I am not preaching a sermon on politics: I am assuring you of the certainty of important facts. I tell you to determine that none but two Repealers shall represent you. Cork and Tipperary have Repealers—will you fall into the background? (Cries of "Never, never.") No, men of Kerry, the man who fascinated the Repealers of other places is your brother Kerryman. (Here the company rose simultaneously and poured forth the most deafening bursts of cheering, amidst the storm of which the concluding words of the sentence were completely drowned.) Yes, I am one of yourselves, but I will not call myself a Kerryman if you will not give me two Repealers. (Tremendous cries of "We will," and great cheering.) A French general officer (though an Irishman) on one occasion inquired in what part of Kerry was Ireland? Now, I can tell you that Kerry produced more general officers for France than did any other part of the kingdom; England could have them, but she would not promote them, and therefore they were unwilling exiles. But better days have come; therefore rouse with me loyalty to the Queen, peace, tranquillity, religion, and a domestic legislature for Old Ireland. Mr. O'Connell resumed his seat amidst the loudest acclamations.

Scotland.

Edinburgh.—The Botanical Chair.—The election of the Professor of Botany in the University of Edinburgh, which is vested in the Town Council, took place on the 7th inst. The interest excited by this election, and the extraordinary discussion which took place on the relative merits of the candidates, induce us to give a detailed account of the proceedings. The business was opened by reading letters from Dr. Howieson, Dr. Dickie, and Dr. Seller, withdrawing their names as candidates.

The LORD PROVOST then rose and said, that he had to discharge the most painful duty that had fallen to him since he had the honour to occupy that chair. There were now only two candidates for their consideration. One of them, Dr. Balfour, had been from boyhood his personal friend, but notwithstanding this, he would never allow friendly considerations to interfere with what he felt to be his duty in such an appointment as a chair in the University, which he regarded as a most sacred trust. It was therefore from a conscientious examination of the qualifications of the two candidates that he proposed for their suffrages Dr. Joseph Hooker, whom he never knew or saw till a few days previously. Their object was to support the reputation and usefulness of the University, and if they had not themselves such a knowledge of botany as would enable them to inquire correctly and satisfactorily into the qualifications of the different candidates, they must, like a jury, call before them witnesses regarding the qualifications of these different individuals, and, according to the testimony produced, give a true verdict on the merits laid before them. Looking at it, said his lordship, in this point of view, I have gone over the testimonials of both candidates with the greatest possible care, and I have, with the greatest anxiety, endeavoured to find out who it is that has the suffrages of the men of science in that walk for which we are now to appoint: and I must say, if ever I saw evidence which was strong, uncompromising, and most decided, it is that in favour of Dr. Hooker. The evidence before us, under all circumstances, compels me to say that this is the man who stands highest in reputation among the scientific men of Great Britain, and of the world. Looking at the other testimonials for this chair, I have no hesitation in saying, that if they were all put into one scale, those for Dr. Hooker into another, the latter would have the preponderance. Why, what is that we have? In the one case we have testimonials from literary and clerical men; but in the case of Dr. Hooker we have testimonials from nearly all the professors in the Universities of Europe. It may be said that these have been given in consequence of attachment to the father, and not from acquaintance with the qualifications of the son. This may be the case in regard to some of them, but I scarcely think it can be so with such eminent individuals as the following:—Dr. Lindley, Professor of Botany in the London University; Professor Henslow, of Cambridge; Professor Forbes, of King's College, London; Professor Allman, of the Dublin University; Professor Euremberg, of Berlin; Professor Brongniart, Jardin des Plantes, Paris; Professor Jussieu, ditto; Professor Blume, of Leyden; Professor Miquel, of Rotterdam; Professor Dunal, of Montpellier; Professor De Candolle, of Geneva; and Professor Endlicher, of Vienna. Look to these testimonials, and see the manner in which they are written. They are not given in the usual formal manner—"I know such a one that he is well qualified, and will do honour to your choice." No; we find these men stating that the scientific men of Europe will consider that an honour and an advantage will be done to science if this individual will be placed in our University. They state farther that no man at his time of life has gained such a high status in the walk he has chosen. He has given evidence of being one of the brightest stars and one of the greatest men in that line. No man at his time of life has made such important contributions to science. Although I am not a botanist—yet I am enabled to know from my own trade—from the books on botany which come through my hands—who are the eminent authors on botany; and I know from this who it is that has the testimony of the men whose books are considered standard books on this science. Moreover, since I am talking professionally, allow me to say, if any of these candidates were to bring in a manuscript to either a bookseller in London or Edinburgh, that of Hooker would bring double the money. That was surely an evidence as to who was the best man—[Mr. Russell, "It is only because of his father's name."] It has been stated that the reputation of Dr. Hooker in these testimonials, is in connection with the reputation of his father; but I maintain that there are many of these testimonials given for the son, and for the son himself. If you had looked carefully into them you would have found that this was the case—[His lordship here quoted largely from the testimonials of Dr. Hooker.]—I know it has been stated that Dr. Hooker is a very learned man, but that he is not a good lecturer. Now, I'll be candid enough to say that I believe that Dr. Balfour is a more popular and enthusiastic lecturer. At the same time I must state fairly that I know there is a difference of opinion upon this point. I have made inquiries of other individuals, some of whom preferred Dr. Hooker as a lecturer; but I admit that the general opinion was, that my friend, Dr. Balfour, was a more popular and enthusiastic lecturer. This is the ground, indeed, on which his merits are rested. And if this were the sole qualification we were to require, we would, on the same principle, in electing to the chair of Natural Philosophy for which Sir Isaac Newton and Dr. Lardner should happen to be candidates, reject the former and prefer the latter. [His lordship then quoted passages from the testimonials furnished by Professors Christison and Traill, and Mr. James Wilson, of Edinburgh, and by Mr. J. T. Mackay, of Dublin, to show the high opinion entertained of Dr. Hooker as a lecturer by these gentlemen.] Allow me to say also, that I was not satisfied with mere volunteer testifiers in favour of either one candidate or another; I thought it my duty to ascertain the opinion of men well qualified to judge—men who were botanists themselves, but who had given testimonials to neither, though friendly to both. I do not mean to say that Dr. Hooker is perfect—no man is so; but we must look to his qualifications as a whole. I know that there has been a pressure from without, and that is the danger of the Council. I believe that if you were left to judge for yourselves from the testimonials before you, you would all have come to the same conclusion as I have come. That is my opinion. I know well the effect of repeated and urgent canvassing for such chairs, as if it had been for a seat at this Council Board, which ought not to be. I have also heard it mentioned that Dr. Hooker is defective in the physiological department of botany. I thought it very unlikely that a man who had been held up as the first botanist of his years could be defective in this department, and therefore I looked over his testimonials to see if anything was said on the subject. [His lordship also referred to the united testimony of R. Brown, Decaisne, Lasegue, and Jussieu on this point, and to the opinion of Dr. A. K. Young, of Glasgow.] Some gentlemen have talked as if the flattering testimonials in favour of Dr. Hooker had been owing to the name and reputation of his father. Now I should consider it very hard usage of an eminent and worthy man, if the excellence of the father should be held to bring discredit or suspicion on the son. This I think, would be a perverse use of what is usually reckoned honour in general society. Look to what Sir John Herschell says, speaking on this point, "Dr. Hooker," says he, "has a double reputation to sustain; and this is a consideration which, I trust, ought to weigh with those in whom the appointment vests, and I doubt not will do so." Little did Sir John Herschell think that this would be brought forward as something like suspicion upon the testimonials. Now, looking at all these circumstances—looking especially at the concurring testimony of the most eminent men of science, not in Scotland and England merely, but in Europe—can I come to any other conclusion than that Dr. Hooker ought to be the man of our choice—that, if elected, he would bring the highest credit to our University? The Lord Provost concluded by stating, that so far as the Government was concerned in this matter, they had acted in the highest degree honourable to themselves and handsome to the Council—that they might have appointed a keeper to the gardens, and thus have attempted to coerce us to select the same individual to the professorship: but, instead of that, they applied to the most eminent botanists to ascertain who they thought was the person best entitled to the gardens; and having obtained a unanimous opinion in favour of Dr. Hooker, they had merely made that opinion known, which, he maintained, they had a perfect right to do. But this was no reason why any member of Council should vote for Dr. Hooker, if otherwise disposed; but neither, he hoped, would any member vote against him, from the idea that the Government had acted unhandsomely in the matter. He begged to move that Dr. Hooker be elected Professor of Botany.—BAILIE MACK, W. S., seconded the motion.—Mr. NEIL, W.S., said, in reference to the pressure from without, he had not been applied to for his vote in behalf of either candidate, except by one individual, and he knew that others of his friends in the Council had not made up their minds till within 24 hours of the present time. He begged therefore positively to deny on his own part, and that of his friends, that any such pressure had been exercised.—BAILIE DUNCAN, W. S., said, in the observations which your lordship made with reference to the principle on which this Council should proceed in the present election, I most fully and entirely concur; and I believe that the opinion which your lordship expressed on that point will be concurred in by every member of Council. We do not pretend ourselves to be judges of the qualifications of the gentlemen who have presented themselves for our suffrages, and therefore we are compelled—we are under the necessity to have recourse to the opinions of those qualified to give opinions. I must observe, with reference to what has been said as to a pressure from without, that there may have been a pressure—I believe there never was an election in reference to any chair but what there was more or less a pressure from without: but surely if your lordship has been enabled to resist that pressure, you will concede to the other members of the Council, that they are in the same position. I am exactly in the position in which Mr. Neil stated himself to be with reference to this pressure, for with the exception of a medical gentleman—an old class-fellow of my own—calling on me on the subject, I have not been visited by any individual on the one side or the other. The opinion, therefore, which I have formed on the merits of the two gentlemen, has been formed solely on a consideration of the testimonials they have submitted to the Council. And here, I must say, notwithstanding what your lordship has expressed regarding the learning and botanical attainments of Dr. Hooker, that my judgment leads me to prefer Dr. Balfour. There is no denying many things which your lordship has said in favour of Dr. Hooker. There is no denying that he is one of the most rising botanists of the day, and that he is distinguished in one of the great departments of the science, namely systematic botany. There is no necessity to call any of these things in question, or to detract one iota from the undoubted merits of Dr. Hooker. But in perusing his testimonials, I discover no evidence in regard to his attainments in physiological botany. This is what I desiderate in relation to Dr. Hooker; and the fact that there appears to me no such satisfactory evidence, is one of the grounds upon which I rest my judgment and give my preference to the other candidate. I have perused the testimonials with some little attention, and I do not hesitate to say, that those of Dr. Balfour contain evidence of indisputable excellence in this department of the science; and I lay peculiar stress on this matter, because I perceive, from the testimonials of many eminent gentlemen in the papers before us, that they look upon this as one of the most important branches of the science of botany. On this point I would call your attention to one or two of the testimonials. Dr. Theodor Vogel, botanist to the Niger expedition, and author of the "Synopsis Generis Cassiæ," says, "His zeal in connecting the results of physiological researches with the systematic department of the science, deserves to be particularly noticed, as this may be considered the chief and vital point of the science; and his extensive knowledge of the latter makes it desirable that he may soon find an opportunity of prosecuting it in a more extensive sphere." Dr. Link, Director of the Botanic Garden, Berlin, says, "There is much done for the systematic part of botany in Britain, but it is not so in regard to physiological botany, which is much neglected in Britain; and he was very glad when he saw Dr. Balfour inclined to that study. A combination of a systematical and a physiological professor of botany would be a very good thing for that country." Dr. Klotzsch, Curator of the Royal Prussian Herbarium, and author of several botanical works, says, "Equally well versed in all the branches of botany, he is quite able, in conformity with the present progress of the science, to distinguish himself admirably in physiological botany, and would be an ornament at the head of any botanical establishment." But I will not enlarge farther on this point. It is quite evident, from the testimonials of many eminent men now before us, that both when he, Dr. Balfour, filled the place of a private lecturer in this city, and during the period he has acted as a professor in the University of Glasgow, he combined systematic with physiological botany, and indeed directed more attention to the latter than the former. There is another ground why I prefer Dr. Balfour. I allude to his qualification as a good teacher of science. Your lordship I adduce as a witness as to his popularity as a lecturer. I cannot conceive that a gentleman can fill the chair of botany in this University with efficiency—with benefit to the students—unless he is able to deliver his prelections in a clear, animated, and enthusiastic manner. Now, as an illustration of your answer to this, you state that, if the Council were to have regard to such qualities, they would prefer Dr. Lardner as a candidate for the chair of Natural Philosophy to Sir Isaac Newton. There can be no analogy between the one case and the other. Your lordship has not said a single word in reference to any discovery which Dr. Hooker has made in the science. Dr. Hooker's peculiar merit consists in his being a superior systematic botanist, and solely a systematic botanist. As a discoverer he cannot be regarded, and therefore he is not in that view on a higher level than Dr. Balfour. Now, as to your lordship's illustration, I hardly think it necessary to say, that were Sir Isaac Newton and Dr. Lardner proposed for the chair to which you have referred, no one for a single moment could possibly prefer either a fine diction, or an eloquent lecture, to the profound knowledge which the immortal discoverer would have had it in his power to communicate. In regard to this matter, there is one thing to which I would advert. A gentleman who is well qualified to give an opinion on this point—a gentleman whom your lordship knows very well—I refer to Dr. Greville, author of "Scottish Cryptogamic Flora," and other works—has said that Dr. Balfour's "success as a teacher of botany—now recognised as a subject of essential importance in medical education—has been so marked, as well as the zeal he has infused into the minds of his pupils, that he considers it impossible for the patrons of the chair now vacant in the University of Edinburgh to require more satisfactory proofs than he has afforded of being fully qualified to undertake its duties, and to sustain the credit of the University." I think the Council cannot fail to observe, in addition to these two grounds, how eminently qualified Dr. Balfour is to fill the chair by his extensive and intimate acquaintance with the application of botany to medicine and the arts. There are many testimonials as to this; but I do not trouble you with them. Your lordship will, however, excuse me for reading a testimonial from one whose reputation and name are European—one whose judgment on this point cannot fail to have great influence on the minds of the Council. I refer to the testimonials submitted from Dr. Justus Liebig. That illustrious man thus writes to Dr. Balfour, "It afforded me much pleasure, during my stay in Glasgow, to make your personal acquaintance, and so much the more, as I am aware how sedulously you have exerted yourself to associate together chemistry and botany, and to make the discoveries of the one science to bear upon the other. I have heard from your friends as much in praise of your beneficial exertions and great success in Glasgow, as to leave no doubt that those, combined with your scientific attainments, will make your selection as a professor in Edinburgh, a real acquisition to that celebrated University." Your lordship referred to what Dr. Hooker had done in connection with the Antarctic expedition, and to the very valuable work which he had produced on it. I observe that Dr. Balfour has also given some literary contributions to the cause of botany, and your lordship must be aware of the value of some of these contributions. He revised and translated much of the Natural History portion of Malte Brun's "Geography;" and he assisted the late Mr. Ellis in the article Vegetable Physiology in the "Encyclopædia Britannica." He also acted for some years as one of the editors of the "Annals and Magazine of Natural History," &c. I do not think it necessary to detain the Council at any greater length. I am perfectly convinced, if the Council see right to elect Dr. Balfour to the chair of botany, that he will discharge its duties with the utmost efficiency. I can say, from all I have been able to ascertain of his character, that he will inspire the students with an ardent love of the science which they will study under him; and that he will, in his department, sustain the reputation of our celebrated University. I have no doubt that botanical science, and our school of medicine, will both be advanced by the selection of Dr. Balfour.—Bailie Gray, in seconding the motion, stated that he had made up his opinion in favour of Dr. Balfour upon a calm perusal of the testimonials of both the candidates, who were alike strangers to him. He declared honestly, that the impression on his mind was, while reading the testimonials of Dr. Hooker, that they had been given in compliment to his father, and really some of them were so plain as to say, that the name of Hooker was sufficient to carry the chair. Now, there might be something in a name, but there was certainly not enough to induce him to elect a son because of the qualifications of his father. He believed that his appointment to the Antarctic expedition had been given solely because he was the son of Sir William Hooker. He had no doubt that Dr. Hooker had performed the duty well enough, but it was easy to swim when the head was well up. He was sure if Dr. Balfour had been appointed, he would have performed that duty equally well.—Dean of Guild Dick remarked, that the professor of botany had other duties to perform besides teaching the principles of botany. One very important branch of his duty was the application of botany to medicine; in fact this was the great object in having a chair of botany at all; and he should vote for Dr. Balfour, because he had shown himself a proficient in that important department of the science. — Mr. Macfarlan said, that after what had been stated by the Lord Provost, it would not be considered wonderful that he, too, had been much captivated by Dr. Hooker. He had rarely seen such testimony borné to the merits of any gentleman, which had also been confirmed by private communications. The weight of the testimony would fully justify them in electing him to the chair; but in electing a professor it was necessary to weigh well all the circumstances of the case. The Lord Provost had scarcely put the matter in its proper light. He had contrasted the eminent botanist with the popular and enthusiastic teacher. Now he (Mr. M.) would wish to have the two qualities united. Confessedly they were not united in Dr. Hooker; they were united in Dr. Balfour. This was what the University required, and what they ought to secure for it. They ought to choose a man distinguished for his cultivation of the science, and also for his ability in communicating his knowledge, his zeal, and enthusiasm to others. Dr. Balfour had years ago acquired such fame as to induce the Government of the day to select him as the fittest person to fill the chair at Glasgow; and he had there proved himself not only the scientific botanist, but the able and eloquent teacher. The testimonials of Dr. Hooker contained nothing of importance on this point. [The Lord Provost here said, that some spoke of him as an excellent lecturer.] Mr. M.—None came up to those of Dr. Balfour. It was impossible they could, for Dr. Hooker had not yet been tried. He had read only one course for Dr. Graham, and had not yet had an opportunity of proving his qualifications. He was now what Dr. Balfour had been when he was appointed to the Glasgow chair. He was, indeed, the first, as his lordship had said, of the rising botanists, but Dr. Balfour had already risen. After some further remarks on the importance of the proper teaching of botany, Mr. M. proceeded to notice what had been said of pressure from without. Who were they who thus interested themselves in the result of the election? They were the most distinguished and learned of the profession—the men most deeply concerned in having the chair filled by the best man, and most closely identified with the fame of the University; the mere fact of such men taking an interest in the election proved that he, for whom they did so interest themselves, was no mean or unworthy man. The Council had often been maligned even by distinguished men, and had been characterised in most revolting terms, but he would ask where is the proof? Where the unworthy professor? He might refer not merely to the present Council, but to the doings of the Council ever since it had instituted the University, and ask, what university had ever exhibited so long and so illustrious a line of professors, or been adorned with so much surpassing excellence? Mr. M., at some length, maintained that the Council was by far the safest custodier of patronage, and that no other class of patrons ever had acted, or could act, from purer motives than they had uniformly done in all their elections, nor exercise greater independence in their choice. Let pressure from without be exerted in favour of an unfit or unworthy person, and it would soon be seen how miserably it would fail. Such pressure never yet prevailed in obtaining for any man the support of the Council, unless his own merits were so transcendent as to secure for him the honest and conscientious conviction that he was in truth the best fitted to discharge the duties of the chair and to maintain the reputation of the University.—After a few words from other members, the Council divided, when 23 voted for Dr. Balfour, and 10 for Dr. Hooker. Dr. Balfour was accordingly declared duly elected, and it was remitted to the college committee to intimate the appointment to Government, and to express the hope of the Magistrates and Council that they would be pleased to appoint Dr. Balfour to be keeper of the Botanic Gardens.

Glasgow.—The local papers state that the Wellington statue at Glasgow has been wilfully damaged on more than one occasion by some person or persons unknown. In the first instance the perpetrators of this wanton outrage knocked off and carried away the reins of the horses attached to the figure of the plough, on the western department of the statue. The bas reliefs on the pedestal have since been defaced in a more serious manner. Several of the bayonets on the muskets of the soldiers have been broken off, others have been torn from the sides of the figures, and the scabbard on one of the equestrian figures has also been destroyed, besides other injuries of a like nature. The committee on the statue have offered a reward of 100*l.* for the detection of the guilty party.

Sporting.

NEWMARKET SECOND OCTOBER MEETING.

Wednesday.—Sweeps of 10 sovs each; 2-yrs-old, 7st 3lb; 3, 9st; fillies allowed 3lbs. 5 subs. Mr. Greville's Deer-chase, 2-yrs, beat Mr. Steer's Caroline, 3-yrs, Mr. W. Sadler's The Pretender, 2-yrs, Lord G. Bentinck's b f Malvoisie, 2-yrs, and Mr. Worley's b f Syllabub, 3-yrs. Won by a head.—Match, 200*l.* 50 ft, 8st 7lb each; Lord Exeter's Celia beat Lord W. Powlett's Espoir.—Oatlands Stakes of 30 sovs each, 10 ft. 7 subs, four declared. Lord Exeter's Jet, 3 yrs, 4st 11lb, beat Mr. Meiklam's Trueboy, 5 yrs, 8st 8lb, Lord G. Bentinck's Longitude, 3 yrs. Won by a neck.—Town Plate of 50*l.* for 3-yr-olds, 7st 4lb; four, 8st 4lb; five, 8st 11lb; six and aged, 9st 1lb. Mr. R. J. Shafto's Metal, 3 yrs, beat Mr. Mostyn's bl f Stream, 3 yrs, Lord Verulam's Hawkesbury, 3 yrs, and eight others. Won by a neck.—Sweeps of 200 sovs each, h ft. 3 subs. Duke of Bedford's Prologue, 7st 12lb, beat Lord Eglinton's Vaudeville, 7st 12lb.

Thursday.—Match, 200 h ft; Mr. Greville's Motilla, 8st 7lb, beat Lord Glasgow's f, by Velocipede, out of Miss Whip, 8st 4lb, by a length.—Sweeps of 10 sovs each, for 2-yr-olds, 6st 7lb; three, 8st 3lb; four, 8st 11 lb. 6 subs. Lord Exeter's f, by Beiram, out of Manto, 4 yrs, beat Sir J. Hawley's Comrade, 3 yrs, Mr. Drewitt's Miss Love, 2 yrs, and four others. Won by a head.—Sweeps of 10 sovs each, for 2-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 5lb. Duke of Rutland's b c, by Slane, out of Voluptuary, beat Mr. Shelly's Chandelier, Mr. J. Peck's Tell, Lord Orford's bl c, by Clearwell, out of Fidelity, Mr. Stephenson's b f, by Montreal, out of Balance, and Mr. W. Sadler's Cerberus. Won by a length.—Handicap Plate of 100*l.* for 3-yr-olds and upwards. Mr. A. R. Onslow's Ruff, 3 yrs, 6st 7lb, Mr. Meeson's Fair Charlotte, 4 yrs, 7st 4lb, Lord Stradbroke's Evenus, 5 yrs, 9st, Mr. Osbaldeston's Sorella, 4 yrs, 7st 12lb, and 12 others. Won by half a length.—Bretby Stakes of 100 sovs each, h ft, for 2-yr-old fillies, 8st 7lb. Duke of Richmond's ch f, Cuckoo, beat Mr. Greville's Polka, and Lord G. Bentinck's Ennui. Won by a head.—Match, 50*l.* h ft. Mr. J. Day's Minus, 4 yrs, 9st, beat Mr. W. R. Brown's Moonbeam, 2 yrs, 7st 11 lb, by two lengths.—Match, 500, h ft. Col. Peel's c, by Slane, out of Cobweb, 8st 7lb, received from Lord Glasgow's c, by Bay Middleton.—Match, 100, h ft, Mr. W. R. Brown's ch f, Moonbeam, 2 yrs, 8st, received from Mr. Clifton's b g, Minos, 4 yrs, 8st 7lb.

Friday.—Match, 150*l.*, 50 ft, 8st each; Col. Peel's c by Slane, out of Cobweb, 3 yrs, beat Sir J. Hawley's Comrade, 3 yrs, by a length.—Handicap Sweeps of 20 sovs each, 5 ft if declared, &c., T.Y.C. 5 subs, 2 declared. Lord G. Bentinck's African, 6 yrs, 7st 12lb, beat Mr, Howell's Khorassan, 5 yrs, 7st 12lb: Lord Stradbroke's Evenus, 5 yrs, 8st 12lb; Col. Peel's ch g Caen, 5 yrs, 7st; and Lord Exeter's Adrianople, 3 yrs, 6st. Won by a length.—Handicap Sweeps of 15 sovs each, 10 ft; for 2 and 3-yr-olds. 5 subs. Lord G. Bentinck's Astern, 2 yrs, 5st 7lb, beat Duke of Rutland's Paultons, 3 yrs, 8st 7lb; Mr. Ford's Attorney, 3 yrs, 8st 2lb; Lord G. Bentinck's Nereus, 3 yrs, 9st 7lb; and Mr. Meynell's Alexandrina, 3 yrs, 6st 12lb. Won by a head.—Match, 200 h ft; Duke of Bedford's Prologue, 8st 7lb, beat Mr. Carr's Deodara, 7st, by six lengths.—Prendergast Stakes of 50 sovs each, h ft, for 2-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 5lb. 23 subs. Lord G. Bentinck's b f Princess Alice beat Lord G. Bentinck's b f Ennui, Mr. S. Wreford, jun's b f Wit's-end, Duke of Bedford's Paragon, and Mr. Marson's George the Fourth. Won in a canter by three lengths.—Match, 200, h ft; Duke of Bedford's Oakley, 9st 7lb, beat Mr. Vernon's Hartshorn, 6st.—Sweeps of 10 sovs each, for 2-yr-olds, 6st 7lb; 3, 8st 3lb; 4, 8st 11 lb; 5 and upwards, 9st. The winner to be sold for 80*l.*, if demanded. Col. Peel's ch g Caen, 5 yrs, beat Mr. Greville's Deer Chase, 2 yrs; Lord Exeter's Dr. Hill, 4 yrs; and Lord G. Bentinck's Malvoisie, 2 yrs.—Match, 200*l.* h ft, A. F., Lord G. Bentinck's Miss Elis, 8st 7lb, received from Sir R. W. Bulkeley's Cinizelli, 7st 13lb.

Theatres.

Princess's Theatre.—On Monday week there was a terrific crush to obtain entrance into this theatre to welcome Mr. Macready on his return from America. Long before the doors were opened an eager crowd besieged them, and when the doors were thrown back people had literally to fight their way up the long, narrow passage which forms the common entrance to both boxes and pit from the entrance in Oxford-street. Many took fright, and, despairing of effecting an ingress, turned back, and struggled fantically to retrace their steps, a proceeding which caused the utmost disorder. The whole theatre was crammed by the first rush, and crowds went away disappointed. The play was "Hamlet," the first scene of which was acted nearly in dumb show, for the uneasy crowds in pit and gallery had not yet settled into that density of compression which they were compelled to endure for the remainder of the evening, and the process of shaking down the mass produced a great deal of individual inconvenience. When, however, the scene withdrew, and discovered Mr. Macready, the whole audience rose with one consent to welcome him. The ladies waved bouquets and handkerchiefs, and the men, not content with the usual demonstration of clapping hands, raised repeated fires of those hearty and ringing cheers of welcome which are so inspiriting to hear, and must be so gratifying to the recipient. For several minutes these sounds continued uninterruptedly, and then, after a partial lull had induced the belief that silence and attention were about to assume their sway, renewed thunders told that the audience had only paused to gather strength for a fresh display. To enlarge upon a performance so well known to every playgoer as Mr. Macready's impersonation of the Prince of Denmark, would be a tedious superfluity. We need only state that most of the other characters were respectably filled. Mrs. Ternan played the Queen; Mr. Cooper was the Ghost; Mr. Ryder the King; Mr. C. Fisher, Horatio; Messrs. Compton and Oxberry the Gravediggers; Mr. Granby, Polonius; and Miss Emma Stanley Ophelia. A beautiful scene has been painted by Mr. Beverley, representing the castle and moon-lit sea by Elsinore. Altogether, Mr. Maddox has spared no pains to honour Mr. Macready's return in the best manner possible.

BIRTHS—On the 22d of July, at Neemuch, the lady of Capt. W. H. Rickards, 14th Reg. N. I., Dep.-Judge-Adv.-Gen., of a son and heir—4th inst., at Plasgwyn, Isle of Anglesey, Lady Vivian, of a daughter—9th inst., the lady of the Rev. G. Johnston, head master of the Grammar School, Barnstaple, of a son—9th inst., at Long Sutton, Lincolnshire, the lady of the Rev. Edward Leigh Bennett, of a son.

MARRIAGES—On the 7th of August, at Bangalore Madras, Capt. Lachlan Macqueen, 3d Light Cavalry, Dep.-Judge-Adv.-Gen., to Harriet, daughter of the late J. Greig, Esq., and niece of the Right Hon. Lady Rollo and of Mrs. M. L. of St. Kilda, Inverness-shire—8th inst., at Kingston Chapel, Portsea, Lieut. Charles Horace Lapidge, R.N., to Eliza Caroline, second daughter of Henry Carter, Esq., M.D., Portsea—8th inst., at Hertingfordbury, Herts, the Rev. John Edward Carter, vicar of Bradfield, and rector of Mistley, Essex, to Emma, daughter of W. H. Sutton, Esq., of Hertingfordbury.

DEATHS—On the 3d inst., at his residence in St. Mary Tower, Ipswich, Admiral Benjamin William Page, aged 84—5th inst., at his residence, Verdant Hill, near Dublin, aged 74, the Rev. Joseph Henry Townsend, for many years a magistrate for the counties of Tipperary and Queen's County—6th inst., at Henbury, aged 57, the Rev. Walker Gray, for nearly 30 years curate and lecturer of that parish—7th inst., at Wivenhoe-park, Essex, General Francis Slater Rebow, aged 76—9th inst., at Cople, Beds, the Lady Agnes Byng, wife of the Right Hon. George Stevens Byng, M.P., and daughter of the Marquis of Anglesey—10th inst., the Rev. William Stanley Goddard, D.D., of Andover, formerly Head Master of Winchester College—10th inst., at Brighton, Admiral Sir Charles Rowley, Bart., G.C.B., aged 75—11th inst., at Walworth, Surrey, William Dickinson, Esq., Comptroller-General of Her Majesty's Customs, aged 60.

FEMALE COMPLAINTS AND HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—So extraordinary are the known virtues of Holloway's Pills that a great many titled ladies, and others, are purchasing them in large quantities to distribute to poor families. These Pills act in so wonderful a manner upon the system and constitution of females generally (even on infants at the breast) that whether taken when entering into womanhood, or at the turn of life, or at any other time, a few doses of this fine medicine will always produce the desired effect, and restore health when every other remedy has failed. Sold by all druggists, and at Professor Holloway's Establishment, 244, Strand, London.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS HEAD GARDENER.—A single Man aged 29, a native of Scotland, who thoroughly understands Forcing, the Cultivation of Orchidaceæ, Stove, and Greenhouse Plants; also Kitchen and Flower-Garden, and everything connected with the business. Reference as to character and abilities.—Direct to E.F., Post-office, Kingston, Surrey.

AS HEAD-GARDENER, &c. — A. B. being at present disengaged, would be happy to treat with any Nobleman or Gentleman requiring assistance in executing any alterations or improvements in their gardens and pleasure-grounds during the winter season, or as Head-Gardener, which capacity he has filled in a midland county, from which he can be well recommended; also by several influential gentlemen in the county. Should this meet the eye of any gentleman requiring such a person, letters addressed to A. B., Post-office, Brompton, Middlesex, will receive immediate attention.

AS HEAD-GARDENER.—A single Man, who perfectly understands the management of Pines, Grapes, Greenhouse, Early and Late Forcing, and Kitchen, Fruit, and Flower Garden. Can have an excellent character of two years.—Direct to J. B., 1, Norfolk-place, Coach and Horses-lane, Newington-green, Middlesex.

AS GARDENER, in a Nobleman or Gentleman's family, a respectable married Man, aged 29, without family, who has a thorough knowledge of his business in all its branches, has an excellent character from his last situation.—Direct to A. H., at Marnock and Manley's Nursery, Hackney, London.

AS GARDENER. — A single Man, aged 30, of persevering habits, who has had considerable practice in every branch of the profession at extensive establishments in England and Scotland, from which he can produce ample testimony; has also a good knowledge of Farming, Meadow Land, &c. Single-handed place not accepted.—Direct to A.M., Post-office, Hornsey.

AS GARDENER.—A man, aged 30, without encumbrance, who has a good practical knowledge of his business, including the early forcing of Grapes, Peaches, &c. also the management of Stove and Greenhouse Plants, Flower and Kitchen Garden, and the management of Meadow Land. A single-handed place not objected to; can produce satisfactory testimonials as to character and capabilities.—Direct A. B., Mr. Martin's, Perry Hill, Sydenham, Kent.

AS FARM BAILIFF.—A man, aged 35, who has had most extensive experience in stock and arable farming in the best cultivated districts of Scotland, and who is thoroughly acquainted with the most approved system of rotation cropping, as well as the management and selling of all sorts of stock. The most unexceptionable references will be given as to character and general qualifications. A situation in England will be preferred.—Direct to Adam Young, White Bank Lee, Gallashiels, N. B.

AS FARMING BAILIFF, &c.—By a young Man, 30 years of age, who has been brought up in Farming all his life in Herefordshire. The most respectable references can be given, and security to any amount.—Direct to H. W., at Mr. Cuthill's, Florist, Camberwell, Surrey.

A FARMER, in the prime of life, about to leave his Farm in one of the best farmed counties in the South of Scotland, owing to his possessing inadequate means to cultivate it, wishes to be employed in the management of another man's property. His character as to integrity and capacity for business may be easily ascertained, as he is well known in the district where he Farms. The Advertiser entertains no objection to a situation in the Colonies, but an inferior one, either at home or abroad, will not be accepted.—Apply for address at the Office of this Paper.

LAND AGENCY.

MR. DONALDSON, Professor of Agriculture in the Agricultural College, Hoddesdon, Herts, and author of several Agricultural Works, wishes to be employed in the Management of Landed Property, occasional or permanent. Mr. Donaldson was regularly bred to practical Agriculture with the most eminent farmers and breeders in Britain, and has had a very varied and extensive practice of the art on the estates of Noblemen of the highest rank. Has been much employed in modern Draining and Planting, in the Erection and Repairs of Farm Buildings, in the Letting of Lands and Drawing of Rents, and in the general Management of Landed Property. Mr. Donaldson may be consulted on Agricultural Subjects on easy terms, and permanent services obtained at moderate rate. High references for character and capability will be given if required.—Hoddesdon, Oct. 25.

WANTED.—A Situation in a SEED SHOP by a young man who has just left a similar situation, and who has a good knowledge of Plants. Respectable reference and security can be given.—Direct to S. S., Office of this Paper.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1845.

ANNUITIES.—In the AUSTRALASIAN COLONIAL and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE and ANNUITY COMPANY, Annuitants participate in the Profits of the Company, and receive a rate of ANNUITY much more favourable than can be granted by any Company making its investments wholly in England. The Company is enabled securely to grant these favourable terms from the advantage it possesses of investing a portion of its funds at a high rate of interest.

Subscribed Capital £200,000—in 2,000 Shares.

Directors.

Edward Barnard, Esq., F.R.S.	Gideon Colquhoun, Esq.
Robert Brooks, Esq.	C. E. Mangles, Esq.
Henry Buckle, Esq.	Richard Onslow, Esq.
John Henry Capper, Esq.	William Walker, Esq.

Solicitors—Messrs. Maples, Pearse, Stevens and Co.

Bankers—The Union Bank of London.

Prospectuses, with Tables, Forms of Proposal for the purchase of an Annuity or for making an Assurance, and every information, may be obtained by application at the Office of the Company, No. 126, Bishopsgate-street, corner of Cornhill, City.

E. RYLEY, Actuary and Secretary.

PLATE.—A. B. SAVORY AND SONS, MANUFACTURING SILVERSMITHS, 14, CORNHILL, London, opposite the Bank of England. The best wrought SILVER SPOONS and FORKS, Fiddle Pattern, 7*s.* 2*d.* per oz.; Queen's Pattern, 7*s.* 4*d.* per oz. The following are the weights recommended, but the articles may be had lighter or heavier, at the same price per oz.

Fiddle Pattern.	oz.	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	Queen's Pattern.	oz.	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
12 Table Spoons	30	at 7	2	10	15	0	12 Table Spoons	40	at 7	4	14	13	4
12 Dessert ditto	20	7	2	7	3	4	12 Dessert ditto	26	7	4	9	10	8
12 Table Forks	30	7	2	10	15	0	12 Table Forks	40	7	4	14	13	4
12 Dessert ditto	20	7	2	7	3	4	12 Dessert ditto	28	7	4	10	5	4
2 Gravy Spoons	10	7	2	3	11	8	2 Gravy Spoons	12	7	4	4	8	0
1 Soup Ladle	10	7	2	3	11	8	1 Soup Ladle	12	7	4	4	8	0
4 Sauce ditto	16	7	8	3	16	8	4 Sauce ditto	32	7	10	4	14	8
4 Salt Spoons (gilt strong)				1	0	0	4 Salt Spoons (strong gilt)				2	2	0
1 Fish Slice				2	18	0	1 Fish Slice				3	5	0
12 Tea Spoons	10	7	8	3	16	8	12 Tea Spoons	14	7	10	5	9	8
1 pair Sugar Tongs				0	15	0	1 pair Sugar Tongs				1	5	0

N.B.—A Price Current, stamped as a newspaper, illustrated by drawings, and containing information relative to the purchase of Silver or Sheffield Plate, may be had on application, or will be sent into the country, free of postage, in answer to a paid letter.

News of the Week.

THE Overland Mail from Bombay of the 15th Sept. has arrived this week, and is remarkable as the first of a series of mid-monthly mails, which will henceforth be despatched from that Presidency. The news, though in many respects interesting, adds little to our previous intelligence. The Punjaub continues in a state of complete anarchy, from which, it is said, nothing but British intervention can rescue it. The Governor-General was to quit Calcutta on the 23d Sept., for the north-west provinces, and we shall probably soon receive more stirring news from that quarter, as the Sikh soldiers are anxious to move towards the banks of the Sutlej, as if to come to a conflict with the British.—From China we learn that the French diplomatists are making great efforts to obtain from the Chinese Government a cession of the island of Chusan, which must very shortly be given up in accordance with the terms of the treaty of Nankin. Mr. Martin, however, the treasurer of council at Hong-Kong, has come to England by this packet, for the purpose of urging upon Government the importance of taking immediate steps to retain Chusan as the British Emporium in China, instead of the unhealthy island of Hong-Kong, which has hitherto been most destructive to our troops and colonists.—From New York we have accounts to a recent date. Mexico is still in a very unsettled and precarious condition, although no actual disturbance has taken place. The standard of revolt, however, was daily expected to be raised; and the Government, so far from being able to carry on a war upon the United States, are evidently unable to keep down rebellion in their own capital. The Texas news is not important; troops were still raising for the defence of the frontier, and military preparations were going on, rather to prevent a surprise than with any expectation of immediate hostilities. The intervention of France and England in the River Plate, with the view to put an end to the sanguinary war between Montevideo and Buenos Ayres, and so to open the valuable commerce of those countries to other nations, has caused great excitement in the political circles of New York and Washington. The last accounts from the allied squadron mentioned that the policy of France and England had been objected to by the United States Minister at Buenos Ayres, and the official organ of Mr. Polk now openly protests against it on the ground that the true policy of the United States is hostile to European interference in the affairs of the American Continent.—In France the affairs of Algeria still constitute the chief topic of interest. The last advices from Algeria announce the defection of three more tribes in the province of Oran, so that the whole of that district from the sea to the desert is now in hostility to the French. Marshal Bugeaud however had set out from Algiers to assume the command of 4000 men, who were to commence the campaign to the eastward, and the war will forthwith be resumed with unusual vigour. The Ministerial arrangements rendered necessary by Marshal Soult's wish to retire from office, have been satisfactorily concluded, and the Marshal will continue to act as President of the Council, without salary, but will resign the Ministry of War.

At home a rumour has been gaining ground for some days past, that the Government have determined on a suspension of the corn-laws, as a measure inevitably necessary to avert the dangers threatened by the failure of the Potato-crop. It is said that Sir Robert Peel will in the first place open the ports by an Order in Council, and that Parliament will be summoned for an early day in the present month to give its sanction to the measure.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert came to town on Thursday to be present at the opening of the New Hall in Lincoln's Inn, and after remaining a few hours at Buckingham Palace, returned to Windsor Castle to Dinner. During the week, Her Majesty and the royal family have taken their usual walks and exercises. The Queen Dowager left the Castle on her return to town on Friday. The visitors to the Castle this week have been the Duchess of Gloucester, the Duke and Duchess of Bedford, Earl and Countess of Delawarr, and Lady M. West, the Earl of Mount Edgecumbe, Sir Robert and Lady Peel, the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, and Sir H. Wheatley. The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Countess of Desart to be one of the Ladies of the bed-chamber in ordinary to Her Majesty, in the room of the Countess of Dunmore, resigned. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge arrived at Berlin on the 23d ult., from New Strelitz, and is expected to arrive in London this day.

Cabinet Council.—A Cabinet Council, the first since the close of the last session, was held yesterday, at the private residence of Sir Robert Peel in Whitehall-gardens. The Duke of Wellington and the other Cabinet Ministers in town were present. Sir James Graham had a long interview with the right hon. baronet previous to the ministers assembling.

The Church.—It is announced that Dr. Wilberforce, Dean of Westminster, will be the new Bishop of Oxford; and the Rev. Professor Buckland is mentioned as likely to succeed Dr. Wilberforce in the deanery of Westminster. The Rev. John Peel, brother of Sir Robert Peel, and canon of Canterbury, it is understood, has accepted the deanery of Canterbury, vacant by the relinquishment of Dr. Bagot, now Bishop of Bath and Wells.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The news from Algiers continues to be very important, and is almost the only topic discussed by the Paris papers. A telegraphic despatch reached the government on Saturday, announcing a fresh engagement with Abd-el-Kader. It appears that "General Lamoriciere left Djemmâ-Ghazaouat, at the head of 4,000 infantry and 500 cavalry, for the province of Trara, where he hoped to fall in with Abd-el-Kader. On the 12th he fell in with the Kabyles, with whom he had a very sharp, but apparently indecisive action, for on the 13th the combat was renewed, and the French troops were enabled at length to force the defile occupied by the enemy. Abd-el-Kader was present at the latter action, at the head of 2,000 cavalry; but he took no part in it, and on seeing the defile forced, he retired, at the head of his cavalry, without being either attacked or pursued. The fighting between General Lamoriciere and the Kabyles continued on the 14th and 15th, and a great number of lives were lost on both sides; but at length, a portion of the Kabyles being caught between the French columns and the sea, were forced to lay down their arms. General Lamoriciere acted with great forbearance, for—he states in his despatch, "All these tribes were at my discretion, being between my camp and the sea, from which I was only a league and a half distant. I could have sent into the frightful ravines, into which they had plunged without having the means of escape, some battalions of infantry, which would have taken complete vengeance for this insurrection, but in the then disposition of our troops this vengeance would have been too severe." The route taken by Abd-el-Kader was unknown. General de Bourjolly and Colonel Saint Amand had subsequently effected a junction, and were waiting for reinforcements to act. On the 18th Ben-Maza, with 300 cavalry, attacked a tribe under the walls of Mostaganem. Lieut.-Colonel Mellinet, with the force of the garrison that remained disposable, drove him off. On the night of the 18th three tribes of the sub-division of Oran abandoned the French cause. The 700 men embarked at PortVendres in the Labrador, had arrived at Oran; their arrival had produced the best effect, and would, it was hoped, contribute to keep firm the tribes who have not yet fallen off." The most important portion of this news is the defection of the three native tribes in the neighbourhood of Oran. The whole of that part of the country, from the sea to the desert, is now in arms against the French. The communications by land are entirely cut off, and it is only by sea that any communication can be carried on between the Algerine capital and the provinces. The gravity of the state of affairs in that part of the French possessions is freely admitted, even by the organs of the French Government. The Débats says that the Arabs have been roused everywhere by the agents of Abd-el-Kader, who announced to them that the reign of the infidels was about to end. It says that the French Government, seeing that the present movement is not a partial but a general one, has made up its mind that it can no longer reckon on the fidelity, or even on the neutrality of the native tribes, and it adds, that "the war has to be fought over again, and that the conquest of the country has to be recommenced over one-half of the Algerine territory." This account of the state of the country about Oran hardly appears to be exaggerated, but it does not discourage the French troops, who expect to be able in a short time to restore the country to tranquillity. The Moniteur Algerien of the 20th states that on the 18th the Governor-General, Marshal Bugeaud, attended by his aides-de-camp, left Algiers for Milianah, to place himself at the head of a column of 4000 men collected there for the purpose of acting to the east of Oran. The Marshal had published a proclamation to the Arabs and Kabyles, announcing that he will not leave the smallest corner of the rebellious country unvisited, but will everywhere pursue the revolted tribes, and if they will not return submissive to their territory, that he will for ever banish them from Algeria, and place there other tribes instead of them. The Cabinet have, at length, concluded the arrangements required in consequence of Marshal Soult's resignation. The Marshal positively quits the Department of War, but continues President of the Council, without, however, deriving any emolument from that office. The new Minister of War has not yet been appointed. The Moniteur announces that the Government had received despatches from China, forwarded on the 12th inst. from Alexandria by the Marquis de Ferriere-Levayer, Secretary of the Legation. The ratifications of the treaty of commerce, concluded on the 24th October, 1844, at Whampoa, between the plenipotentiaries of the King of the French and the Emperor of China, were exchanged on the 25th August last at Taipauhui, near the Bogue, in the palace of the Admiral who commands the Chinese forces in the Canton river. At the same time M. Lagrené received an official copy of the decree by which the Emperor revoked the penalties in force against the Chinese who had embraced Christianity, and authorised them to profess their religion publicly. M. Thiers arrived at Paris on Thursday week. The Legitimist print, La France, states, on official authority, that the marriage of the sister of the Duke of Bordeaux with the Prince of Lucca is to take place at Frohsdorf on the 10th inst. The newly-married couple are to spend the winter in Lucca.

SPAIN.—Accounts from Madrid of the 21st ult. state that the Government goes on steadily with its measures against the press. The Espectador, which ventured to make some rather sharp remarks upon some of the late acts of the Government, has been condemned to pay a fine of 20,000 reals, which amounts to 200*l.* sterling. The case was tried of course without a jury, and the chance of justice to the unfortunate editor may be guessed, when the fate of the President of the Court which acquitted Messrs. Cortina, Madoz, and Lopez is recollected. The Gazette of the 18th publishes a list of 25 new senators, chosen principally from among the dignitaries of the church, generals, and ex-ministers. The Queen has presented the Duke d'Aumale with the Collar of the Golden Fleece, and the Madrid papers mention that, in order to make the compliment the greater, the collar sent to his royal highness is the one worn by Charles V. and by the late king, Ferdinand VII. The papers state that commissioners have arrived at Gibraltar, Madrid, and Lisbon, from Morocco, to recruit all the emigrant officers and soldiers in that place, whether Portuguese, Spaniards, Frenchmen, or Poles, for the service of Abd-el-Kader, and add that the commissioners are well supplied with money, which they distribute profusely.

GERMANY.—A Berlin journal, of the 15th ult., publishes the text of a second address presented to the King of Prussia by the corporation of that city. The municipality express themselves in the most respectful manner to his Majesty, declaring that they never presumed to dictate to him the course that he was to pursue in the religious question under consideration, and they place the most perfect reliance on the noble language which he uttered in reply to their first address. They add that their confidence in the paternal solicitude of the King for all classes of his subjects is unbounded. In reference to the regret expressed by his Majesty that more had not been done by the municipality in the erection of places of public worship, and the increase of the number of the clergy, they say that they share with him in this regret, but they respectfully remind his Majesty of the many causes that had taken place to exhaust the city funds. They allude to the drain upon them during the late war, to the heavy expenditure caused by the cholera, and to the numerous institutions that they have established for the relief of the suffering poor. On the 17th, the King received several delegates of the Catholic dissenters of Potsdam, who presented to him a petition, praying that a place might be assigned to them for the celebration of divine worship, their application to the authorities having met with a refusal. The King read the petition, and then said, "Gentlemen, what my authorities were unable to grant you a few days ago, I can now grant. I have purchased, as private property, two large buildings contiguous to each other, with a view of appropriating them to purposes of public utility. You will certainly find room in them for the celebration of religious worship." A letter from Munster, of the 21st, states that, by a royal order, sent by the Prussian Minister of Public Worship to the principal tribunal of Breslau, a criminal prosecution has been instituted against the Abbé Ronge, for offensive observations upon the Catholic religion, in a little work, recently published by him, entitled "Narchruf." The hostility towards the Abbé Ronge and his doctrines is very strong in some parts of Wurtemberg. On the 18th a notice was issued at Eilwangen, that there would be a shooting match on the following day, and that the effigy of Ronge would be set up as the target. The police, however, interfered to prevent this manifestation of religious hatred.—The Opposition in Saxony continues to have the advantage in the discussions of the Diet. It has carried an address to the King, contrary to the wishes of the Ministry. The fourth paragraph of the address implied a sentiment of distrust towards the Government, and alluded to promises formerly made to Germany, and which the Diet of Frankfort has not kept. The Prime Minister opposed this paragraph, which was, notwithstanding, adopted by 55 to 12.—The venerable Archbishop of Cologne, Baron Droshe-Vischering, died on the 19th ult., at Munster, in Westphalia.

ITALY.—The rumour which reached London last week respecting the quarantine imposed by the Neapolitan Government on English ships, is confirmed; but we are happy to say that there was no ground for such an extreme measure. There is no yellow fever at Malta; and as there is no longer any pretence for a quarantine in consequence of the fate of the Eclair, it is believed that our Government will at once protest against the continuance of the ordinance.—The Italian papers contain long accounts of the progress of the Emperor and Empress of Russia, whose arrival at Milan we announced in our last. The statement that the Emperor was accompanied by the Emperor of Austria was, however, inaccurate. After visiting the leading objects of interest at Milan, and attending a review of the troops, the Emperor, the Empress, and the Grand Duchess Olga set out for Genoa, where they arrived on the 19th ult. A suite of 75 persons attended the Imperial party on their journey. The Emperor entered the town in the costume of a Russian General officer, with diamond and gold epaulettes, and a Roman helmet. His handsome figure and face were themes of general admiration. The Empress at his side evinced, by her air of suffering, how much her health needed amendment, although the climate of Italy has already been of some service to her. The Grand Duchess Olga inspired universal admiration and interest. The King of Sardinia received the Imperial party on their arrival at the Durazzo Palace. On the 21st the Imperial Family embarked, accompanied by their suite, for Palermo, on board several Russian Frigates, which were waiting to receive them. The King of Sardinia repaired to the frigate which had the Czar and family on board, to bid them adieu. The artillery of the town and forts kept up an incessant fire during the whole time of leave-taking, which lasted more than half-an hour.

INDIA AND CHINA.—The first of the bi-monthly mails with dates from Bombay of September 15, Calcutta, Sept. 8, and China July 10, has arrived. In future mails will be regularly dispatched in the middle of each month from Bombay, to be conveyed by steam-boat to Aden, whence they will be conveyed with the mail from Calcutta, by steam-boat to Suez. The intelligence, though extending over but a brief space, is of varied interest and importance. The expedition to Kusmore on the Sikh frontier, under Major Corsellis has proved fruitless, and the troops after suffering a good deal from sickness have been recalled to Hyderabad. Sir C. Napier's system of taxation has proved oppressive to the people of the province, and it has been found requisite to abolish the duties on some articles. A letter written by Colonel Outram to Gen. W. Napier, had caused a great sensation at Kurrachee, and Sir Charles at once dispatched an indignant communication to the Governor-General asking for a court-martial either on himself or on the writer. With this request Sir Henry Hardinge refused to comply. The Punjaub is in a condition of great anarchy, owing to the success which has attended the rebellion of Prince Peshora Singh, and the complete impotence of the existing Government. British intervention is now confidently looked forward to, as the only means of restoring the country to tranquillity. From Affghanistan we hear that the anticipated collision with the Kuzzilbashes has been averted. The usual difficulty has been experienced by the Dost in collecting the revenues, and he is without funds to liquidate the arrears of pay due to the troops. It is believed the Governor-General will arrive at Agra about the 20th October, and leave that place early in November, with the Commander-in-Chief, on his way towards the Punjaub. Great damage and distress have been caused this season in Bengal by the inundations of the Hooghly. Mr. Montgomery Martin, the treasurer and member of Council in Hong-kong, has resigned his appointment, and arrived with this mail from Bombay. His object in coming to England is to urge upon Government the error committed by the British Plenipotentiary who made the treaty with China, in having selected the unhealthy and barren rock of Hong-kong, instead of the fertile island of Chusan, as the British emporium in China. Chusan, according to the terms of the treaty of Nankin, will shortly have to be given up, and the French are known to be most desirous of obtaining it, as soon as our forces are withdrawn. It is therefore contended that one of the most experienced British diplomatists ought to be sent without delay to settle with the Chinese Court as to the continued occupation of Chusan. It was feared in India that French intrigues are now directed towards out generaling England in China, and that unless immediate care be taken the germ would be there created of a conflict with that power in the Chinese territory, such as was formerly the case in India. The cholera was decreasing. The monsoon had been hitherto unfavourable for agricultural purposes, and a very serious deficiency of rain was at one time apprehended. Mr. Chapman, the projector of the Great Indian Peninsular railway, had arrived in the Presidency, and was about shortly to commence his investigations. Amongst the miscellaneous items of intelligence, we may mention the establishment of a new bank at Bombay, which is called the Commercial Bank, and the incorporation by an act of the Legislature of the Assam Company for the cultivation of tea.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—The mail-steamer Cambria, Captain Judkins, so proverbial for the rapidity of her passages, arrived at Liverpool on Monday, in 11 days from Boston. The news by this arrival extends over a fortnight. The steam-ship Great Britain reached New York on the morning of the 15th ult., having made the outward passage in 17 days. During the 10 days previous to her arrival she experienced very heavy gales, and on her arrival off Nantucket, she had run short of coals and lost her foremast. She was carried by a pilot into Holmes' Hole, where she arrived the same day, and was supplied with coal. Some of the accounts state that she had run ashore, but they are contradicted by the passengers, and do not appear to be strictly accurate. The accounts from Mexico show that that country is in a very unsettled state, and so far from being able to make war upon her neighbours, is evidently unable to keep down rebellion at home. A letter from Vera Cruz says, that General Paredes, although he had published a proclamation favourable to the Government, was expected to raise the standard of revolt, and that the garrison of the capital was willing to second his effort. Nevertheless, the Mexicans are said to be still preparing for war against the United States. The dispute between the French Minister and the Mexican Government had ended unfavourably, and the Minister received his passport on the 5th Sept. The excitement in Texas, contingent on the rupture with Mexico, had not subsided. Troops continued to be raised for the defence of the frontiers, and the military preparations appeared to be far from terminating. The trials of the Renters in Delaware county had terminated. Two of the men engaged in the shooting of the Sheriff Steel were sentenced to be executed on the 29th of November, and 17 others to various terms of imprisonment. The Mormon troubles had subsided, but not until an effectual demonstration had been made by the local authorities, who were prepared to put them down by force—by the strong arm of the law. Lynch law, according to the papers, had been put into requisition in the case of some Mormons, near St. Louisville. The characteristic energy of the American people is evinced in the fact that the burnt district of the city of New York is again being covered with new and noble buildings. A fire had taken place in the environs of the city of Montreal. About 100 buildings were destroyed, but the calamity does not seem, with the great fire at Quebec before their eyes, to have excited much interest on the part of the Canadians. The American Post-office had advertised for tenders for carrying the mails to Liverpool, Cowes, Havre, Lisbon, and other places, by steam, but only Americans are eligible. The census of New York has just been taken, by which it appears that it contains 366,785 souls. The additional population of Brooklyn, and other suburban towns and villages, will raise the number to 450,000.

City.

Money Market, Friday.—Consols Three per Cents., 97⅛ to 97; New 3¾ do., 98⅛; for the Account, 97¼ to ⅜; Bank Stock, 205½; Exchequer Bills, 37*s.* to 39*s.* prem.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK.

TUESDAY—BANKRUPTS—J. SUMMERS, Cambridge, cabinet maker—G. M. VON DAMMERS, Mincing-lane, City, merchant—G. HOSKINS, late of Old Broad-street, City, but now of Peckham, Surrey, watchmaker—W. BELLAMY, Clarence-place, Middleton-road, Kingsland road, builder—I. BLACKBURN, Minories, and Northumberland-alley, Fenchurch-street, City, engineer—E. LEMAN and T. K. BAYAN, Upper Thames-street, City, wharfingers—H. TUNE, Blackfriars-road, boot and shoe manufacturer—S. SMITH, Garboldisham, Norfolk, grocer—W. BURNS, Rhyl, Flintshire, draper—J. DOCKER, Birkenhead, joiner—R. WARE, Beaminster, Dorsetshire, auctioneer—T. HOWARTH, Rochdale, woollen manufacturer.

FRIDAY—BANKRUPTS—W. COOPER, Lower Shadwell ale brewer—H. FITZGERALD, Bond-street, Commercial-road, Lambeth, coal merchant—W. J. WALKER, Oxford-street, boot and shoe maker—W. H. SHELDRAKE, Ipswich, Suffolk, boot and shoe maker—A. LACK, Stockbridge-terrace, Pimlico, sadler—J. SMITH, Liverpool, victualler—J. THOMAS, Bristol, marble mason—T. OXTON, Liverpool, cart owner—T. LIDDELL, Boldon West Pastures, Durham, corn factor—J. RAMSBOTTOM and J. RAMSBOTTOM the younger, Armley, Leeds, cloth manufacturers.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS—T. FRASER, Inverness, coach maker—R. TAYLOR, Glasgow, manufacturing chemist.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Her Majesty's Visit to Lincoln's Inn.—On Thursday the new Hall, erected by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn, from the designs of Mr. Hardwick, was opened by Her Majesty, in the presence of Prince Albert, the Duke of Wellington, several of the Cabinet Ministers, and Great Officers of State, the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn, including the Lord Chancellor, Lord Brougham, Campbell, &c. The neighbourhood was densely crowded with people anxious to catch a sight of Her Majesty and the Prince, who were loudly cheered. According to the programme of the ceremony, her Majesty and the other distinguished guests, after inspecting the different parts of the building, were entertained at a dejeuner in the grand Hall, but the details have not been published by the daily papers, as no accommodation had been provided for the reporters. An address was presented to her Majesty alluding to the circumstance that two centuries have nearly passed away since the Inns of Court were so honoured by the presence of the reigning Prince, and acknowledging the signal manner in which her Majesty has fostered the independence of the Bar and the purity of the Bench, by distributing the honours of the profession among the members of all parties in the state. This address was read by Mr. Simpkinson, Q.C., who is Treasurer for the present year. Her Majesty was pleased to return the following reply:—"I receive with cordial satisfaction this dutiful address. My beloved Consort and I have accepted, with pleasure, your invitation; for I recognise the services rendered to the Crown, at various periods of our history, by distinguished members of this society; and I gladly testify my respect for the profession of the law, by which I am aided in administering justice, and in maintaining the prerogatives of the Crown and the rights of my people. I congratulate you on the completion of this noble edifice; it is worthy of the memory of your predecessors and of the station which you occupy in connection with the Bar of England. I sincerely hope that learning long may flourish, and that virtue and talent may rise to eminence, within these walls."

The Eclair Steam-ship.—After our report was published last week, intelligence was received from Sheerness that the fever had again made its appearance on board the ill-fated Eclair, dooming her people to still further imprisonment on board their respective hulks, which was the more to be regretted as they were in hopes of being admitted to pratique on Saturday. The disease showed itself in the persons of the boatswains' mates, superintending the Kroomen in clearing out the hold of the Eclair, one after the other having been attacked with the fever, but in a slighter degree than in former cases. One was attacked on Tuesday, the other on Wednesday. We are happy, however, to state that by the last accounts both men are now convalescent. The symptoms, though less aggravated, were exactly those of the disease which committed so many ravages amongst their messmates. The Eclair is in process of being well cleansed and fumigated, when that is completed her people are to be admitted to pratique. The medical officers, Dr. Stewart, surgeon, and Dr. Rogers, assistant-surgeon, who joined the Eclair at Sheerness, and have since had medical charge, have each been promoted a step in their profession, the former to the rank of deputy-inspector of hospitals, and the latter to the rank of surgeon.

New Zealand Company.—A special court of Proprietors of this company was held a few days since, for the purpose of taking into consideration the present affairs of the company, and of adopting such resolutions as the proprietors might think most expedient. The chair was occupied by H. A. Aglionby, Esq., M.P. The secretary read the report, which stated at much length the result of the negotiations with the Government, the main features of which were as follow:—"The suggestions contained in our letter of the 24th July had reference to the two points, the settlement of which was of most immediate importance, namely, the institutions by which New Zealand was to be governed, and the titles to land; and we added, that should our suggestions afford means for a practical solution of these points, there would then be such an opening for the renewal of our colonising operations, that we doubted not the Government would be willing to remove the only obstacle that would remain, by advancing such a loan as would be necessary to enable us to act. Our suggestions have not been complied with in all respects; but arrangements have been assented to, which comprise a provision for the erection of municipalities in the several settlements, with considerable powers of self-government to be extended hereafter; and for the introduction of delegates from those municipalities into the general Legislative Council of the colony. With regard to land, possession is to be given of the lands awarded by the Commissioner, Mr. Spain, wherever those awards have been delivered by him, either in his judicial character, by virtue of his powers under the Land Claims Ordinance, and are duly completed, or in the character of an arbitrator, whose adjudication had been authorised by the representatives of both parties. The pre-emptive right of the Crown is to be granted to the company, throughout the districts on both sides of Cook's Strait, as defined in the agreement of November, 1840; the cordial assistance of the Government is to be exerted in effecting the arrangements necessary for the satisfaction of the company's claims, and the settlement of questions relating to the remainder of its land; and a person duly qualified is to be specially selected, and appointed specifically for the performance of this duty. At Wairarapa, the fertile and extensive valley lying to the north-east of Wellington, which is selected as the site of the intended Church of England settlement announced in our eighth report, and through which must run the main road of communication between Auckland and Port Nicholson, the power of immediate possession, granted by Governor Fitzroy, is extended from 150,000 to 300,000 acres. At Otago, in the Middle Island, the site of the intended settlement of New Edinburgh, the entire quantity purchased from the natives, 400,000 acres, is to be immediately granted to the company, with power to reconvey to the Crown any quantity, above 150,000 acres, which may not be found desirable for its objects. The statement submitted, at the suggestion of the Government, of the company's entire claims to land on account of expenditure up to the present date, has not yet been decided on; but there is every reason to believe that it will obtain a fair and equitable consideration.

The Government have declined to admit the claim which we have preferred, without specifying any amount, on account of the expense and losses, direct and contingent, to which the company has been subjected. A loan has been promised, subject to the sanction of Parliament, to the extent of 100,000*l.* On the strength of the loan thus promised, the company's bankers, Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Smiths, have consented to advance, and have in fact already advanced, a considerable portion, in the most liberal and handsome manner, of the sum which we estimated would be required for the purposes of the company till such time as the Government loan should become available. By those means we have been enabled, not only to meet all current engagements, but also to place at the disposal of your principal agent (by the ship Mary Catherine, which sailed for Port Nicholson on the 12th of September), such a sum of money as we doubt not will suffice to re-establish the credit of the company in the colony, and to effect such measures as are of most immediate and pressing importance. The report concluded by lamenting the death of the late governor of the company, Mr. Somes, and expressing the sympathy of the directors with Mrs. Somes and family." The report having been adopted unanimously, Mr. G. Robins moved a resolution—"That this meeting concurs cordially in the tribute of respect paid by the Court of Directors to the memory of the late governor, and in condolence with his surviving family," which was also unanimously carried.—Mr. Lance moved a resolution—"That the several measures which have been detailed be fully confirmed, and that the cordial thanks of this meeting be presented to the deputy-governor and directors, for their constant and unwearied exertions on behalf of the company and the colony, during a protracted period of exceeding difficulty."—General Briggs seconded the resolution. He considered the report of the board of directors most satisfactory, and he therefore felt much gratification in supporting the motion. There was one thing he should have been glad to see referred to in the report. It was the statement made by the Minister of the Crown that New Zealand ought to have a representative government, it not being a penal settlement. There was another point to which he would refer. He had learned from the latest accounts that the governor of the colony had set aside altogether local council, and carried out certain resolutions by his official authority alone. If the colony was in a fit condition to be represented, he did not think it right that the governor should set aside the opinion of the people in carrying out his arbitrary proceedings. —Sir Henry Webb, Bart., moved "that the gratitude of the company is due to Mr. Charles Buller and the several members on both sides of the House of Commons who so ably advocated the interests of New Zealand, and of the colonies generally, in the late discussions in Parliament, and to the members of Her Majesty's Government for their considerate promise of a loan of 100,000*l.* secured upon the company's lands, and for the expression of confidence in the company which is therein implied."—Major Carphey seconded the resolution.—Mr. G. Robins objected to that portion of the resolution which thanked the Government for the loan of 100,000*l.* Their late governor, Mr. Somes, would have thought nothing of lending that sum himself; and even now three or four of those present, and he would gladly be one, could subscribe that amount. He thought it too bad to thank the Government, after the treatment the company had received at its hands, and he for one would not vote for the resolution. Sir Henry Webb explained that it was not so much a vote of thanks for the loan of money, as for the expression of confidence in the company which that loan implied. The resolution was put, and declared to be carried.—Mr. Macleod moved that the thanks of the meeting be given to the Chairman, for his conduct in the chair, and his unwearied attention to the interests of the company. The motion was seconded by Mr. Marjoribanks, M.P., and carried. The Chairman briefly returned thanks, and stated, that having assisted to rescue the company from its past difficulties, he was prepared to continue his exertions, until their interests were established on a fair and permanent foundation.

Dinner to Sir William Molesworth.—A public dinner was given on Wednesday, at the Bridge-house Hotel, to Sir W. Molesworth, M.P., in celebration of his return in the late contest for Southwark. The room was crowded to excess. Emanuel Cooper, Esq., presided, and was supported by J. Bright, Esq., M.P., W. D. Christie, Esq., M.P., C. Ellis, Esq., W. Wilson, Esq., and about 300 electors. After the usual loyal toasts, the Chairman proposed the health of their own representative, which was cordially responded to, and Sir W. Molesworth, in return, entered into a long statement of his political principles and opinions. The other principal speakers were Mr. Bright and Mr. Christie.

New Branch General Post-office.—Several houses on the south side of Piccadilly, near St. James's Church, have been sold for the purpose of being immediately razed to the ground, on the site of which is to be erected a capacious new Branch General Post-office. The one at Charing-cross, from the increase of business, has been found considerably too small for the transaction of public business, and is therefore to be removed into Piccadilly.

Fortifying the Dock-yard at Woolwich.—The Lords of the Admiralty have at length determined that Woolwich Dock-yard, the first naval and most ancient port in Europe, shall be immediately placed in a state of fortification. A large number of guns will be mounted facing the river, and it is said to be their lordships' intention to erect a similar battery on the Essex side of the Thames.

Sudden Death of the Venezuelan Minister.—We regret to announce the sudden death of M. Fortique, the Venezuelan Minister, who was found dead in his bed on Tuesday morning, at his residence in Wimpole-street. His Excellency, who had just returned from a very fatiguing diplomatic mission to Sweden, had suffered for some time past from a cough and difficulty of breathing, but not to such an extent as to excite alarm. In the opinion of his medical attendant, the immediate cause of death was neglected cold and inflammation of the lungs. M. Fortique was unmarried, about 45 years of age, and much respected in diplomatic circles.

The Parish of Walbrook.—It is reported in the City that the Master's report upon the subject of dispute between Lord Mayor Gibbs and the parishioners of Walbrook, has annulled the Lord Mayor's claim for 1800*l.*, and brought him indebted to the parish 50*l.*

Opening of the Pier at Blackfriars-bridge.—This pier, which has been for a considerable time in progress, was opened to the public last week. There was no ceremony, but the Lord Mayor and members of the Bridge Estate Committee inspected the pier, and expressed their approbation of it. It is a commodious and substantial structure, 140 feet in length, with a dumb lighter placed in a right angle to the river of 130 feet. They have both been so constructed as not to interfere with the navigation or current of the river. Two very commodious waiting-rooms have also been built, which, with the pier itself, will be lighted with gas.

The Wolff Testimonial.—A meeting of the subscribers to the fund for providing a testimonial for the Rev. Dr. Wolff, was held on the 14th ult. at the British Coffee House. In the absence of Lord de Mauley, who was unable to attend, Captain Grover took the chair. A statement of accounts was presented, from which it appeared that about 800*l.* had been collected. A resolution of the committee, recommending that this sum, now standing at the bankers, be transferred to Dr. Wolff's private account, was agreed to.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Oct. 25:—West Districts, 108; Northern, 131; Central, 143; Eastern, 188; Southern, 204; Total, 774; males, 395; females, 379. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1265; males, 639; females, 626.

Provincial.

Birmingham.—On Tuesday, Lord Lyttelton was installed Principal of Queen's College, in the room of Dr. Johnstone, who, from age and infirmities, recently resigned the office. The routine business of the institution was transacted at the college, after which the Professors, students, and officials repaired to the Town-hall, where a large company of the principal inhabitants of Birmingham and the neighbourhood had assembled to witness the presentation of prizes to the students who had been successful during the late examination. Lord Lyttelton, on taking the chair, described at some length the objects and prospects of the Institution. His lordship observed—

That it was most erroneous to view the College as a mere medical institution. It was established for the general education of the pupil as a man, no less than for his professional instruction as a physician and a surgeon. In every degree of life and position of society it was important to keep in view the difference between the particular profession for which a student was educated and the higher and more general education which he required as a man and a Christian. In the military, naval, and legal professions the peculiar education of each was specified and defined, but unless the student was educated in the higher duties of Christian morality and religion, human science was unavailing. What had been said and taught by the philosophers of ancient days was equally applicable to the present time that we ought to be taught to live as becoming members of the great human family. If language such as this was addressed to the inhabitants of the olden days, how much more imperatively did it apply to them as Christians, in days when morality was but another word for religion? The noble lord, after some further remarks, observed, in what he said and intended to say, he should attempt to avoid points which were not admitted on all hands; and he was satisfied that in all the educational movements which of late years had taken place in this country, moral discipline and control had been considered essential to the success of every educational institution. His lordship referred to the particular dangers which surround the path of youthful medical students collected together in large towns without control, and exposed to the most injurious and contaminating associations, and proceeded to show the great advantage which must result from institutions like the Queen's College, established upon the collegiate plan, and affording every opportunity not only for the professional, but the moral and Christian education of the pupils.—Lord DARTMOUTH proposed a vote of thanks to Dr. Johnstone, the late Principal, which was seconded by the Rev. R. Kennedy, and carried unanimously.—The Lord Bishop of WORCESTER, in presenting the successful students with the Warneford medal, said, one-third of the revenues of the diocese of Worcester had been appropriated to the spiritual improvement of towns like Birmingham. He did not complain of this loss of income; he only regretted that, in consequence of the reduction of the income of the diocese, he was unable to contribute as liberally to scientific and charitable institutions as he could otherwise have wished.—The Rev. Dr. BUCKLAND, in rising to present the chemistry prize to Mr. Bale, the successful candidate, after stating that the present was not the first occasion upon which he had addressed a large assembly in that room, proceeded to show the immediate connexion between chemistry and medicine. So strongly was he convinced of this fact, that he had recently sent his eldest son, who was devoted to the practice of medicine and surgery, to study under that eminent professor Liebig, of Giessen. It had been proved by that eminent chemist that the elements of flesh and blood are derived from the vegetable and mineral kingdom; for instance, that the elements of the fibre of the ox and the elements of beans, peas, and corn, are absolutely identical. Again, it had been shown, that the ordinary articles of human food, such as rice, sugar, sago, and potatoes, have for their principal element charcoal, and that they produce only fat, and do not go to sustain the muscular fibre. On the other hand the cereal grains, such as the flour of wheat, barley, oats, rye, and the seeds of peas, beans, and buckwheat, contain the muscular fibre and bone, such as gluten, earthy phosphates, and many other elements of the animal body. Medical practitioners, by the study of chemistry, will be able to apply these facts in practice. Many of the children of the nobility had fallen victims to an ignorance of chemistry on the part of their medical advisers. The pampered child was fed on rice, sago, butter, &c.; he looked sleek and fat, and was apparently in good health, but all the while he was deprived of those elements which were essential to the formation of bone. There was another point. It was notorious that the mass of mankind lived longer now than their fathers did. His grandfather had died at the age of 65; he (Dr. Buckland) was now upwards of 60. The great reason of this he believed to be that they knew more than their predecessors did of the philosophy of human food. There were other topics to which he might allude, but there was one subject which pressed upon his mind with painful and pressing interest, and, therefore, though it was not exactly to the point, they would excuse him saying two or three words upon it. He alluded to the disease in the potato. It was first felt in Belgium—it had extended over France and Italy, and the subject was felt of so much importance that the Government of France had appointed Dr. Pouchet, of Rouen, and Dr. Payen, of Paris, to inquire into the subject; while our own Government had appointed Dr. Playfair, Dr. Lindley, and Dr. Kane, to inquire into the same subject in Ireland. The accounts were most alarming; it seemed as if the plague had broken out, and the scourge of God was uplifted upon them. But the disease was not fatal—the remedy was in their own hands if it was taken ere it was too late. It was remarkable that the disease affected the cellular tissue of the potato, while that which constituted the starch remained unaffected. This was of importance. He had himself for three days successively eaten of food prepared from these potatoes at the table of Lord Ashburton, which his lordship had used in order to show his neighbours that the idea of danger from these potatoes, if prepared with care, was altogether futile. But it ought to be known that there was risk of injury to tender stomachs if they were prepared in the ordinary way. But the remedy was in every peasant's power—it only required cold water and a little care. They had only to cut off the diseased parts, steep those parts which were unaffected for twelve hours in cold water, take off the rind, cut them in two, and then steep them for twelve hours more, and after that dry them in the sun or before the fire, and they would become perfectly wholesome, as all the acrid juices would be absorbed by the water. This was no new disease—it existed last year, and the year before; but he believed it was chiefly caused this year by the extraordinary transitions from heat to cold in the summer, and particularly in the month of August. The same process might be followed with those that were to be preserved in order to be given to cattle. Pare them, put them into a tub with cold water; let them steep for 12 hours; then change the water and let them steep for 12 hours more; and after drying them, they would keep till next summer. The core of the diseased parings, or those potatoes which were perfectly putrid, would answer for making starch. An instrument had been invented in Paris, and was now making in London, by which the starch might be taken from a bushel of potatoes by a healthy boy in 10 minutes. The starch was perfectly good in quality; it was the starch only that in such cases could be preserved. Then what was to be done with the sound potatoes of the peasantry, who, for want of a better place, were obliged to bury them in the ground? They must all be instantly taken out of the ground and packed in a dry place, no matter where—in the bed-room, in the garret, in the store; let the farmer lend his barns; but out of the earth they must come. When packed in a dry place, they should be interlaid with straw or saw-dust, taking care that one did not touch another, for the gangrene was as infectious as any disease that could be named. When packed in this way, let a little quicklime be mixed with the saw-dust, and in this way probably the mischief may be averted. He grieved to state, and they must have seen it in the papers of yesterday, that it was calculated one-third of the potatoes in Ireland had been lost; and these, it was well known, constituted the food of millions of the inhabitants of that country. What then? Not one instant must be lost. Government must interfere—science must interfere—and it was only by science that Government could act. Science must interpose between the dead and the living, and thus by God's mercy the plague might be stayed; and when God's judgments were abroad on the earth, may the inhabitants thereof learn righteousness.—The Rev. VAUGHAN THOMAS then addressed the meeting, and urged the propriety of forming a junior class in the college, so that when called to the higher departments of study, they might be better fitted for its duties than many of the students were now found to be. The other prizes were then awarded.

THE AGRICULTURAL MEETINGS.—We subjoin some account of a few more agricultural dinners which have taken place since our last report:—

Chertsey.—The annual meeting of the Chertsey Agricultural Association took place on Thursday week, R. Edgell, Esq., in the chair, supported by several gentlemen of the neighbourhood, and a very full attendance of the principal farmers of this district. "The healths of the Members for the western division of the county" being proposed, Mr. TROTTER returned thanks, and after regretting that his colleague, Mr. Denison, was prevented from being present by the state of his health, he said that, with regard to agriculture, it would ill become him, in the presence of members of the Royal Society, who were so well able to elucidate the subject, to say anything, but still he would venture to congratulate them that the country had last year produced quite sufficient food for the population without foreign assistance; and, when he took into consideration the great increase in that population, he thought it was a very cheering fact, and he had no doubt that if they continued the same course of skill and exertion which they had hitherto pursued, they should always be able to achieve the same result. He deplored the failure of the Potato crop, but still it was gratifying to see that the grain crops in Ireland were very largely increased; and it appeared that more flour was sent to this country in the past six months of the present year than during the whole of 1844, and it was one-seventh more than was supplied to this country from the whole world during the same period. Mr. Trotter proposed the "Health of the Chairman."—The CHAIRMAN, in returning thanks, said it gave him the greatest pleasure to do all in his power for the interest of agriculture, and he considered it the noblest of all pursuits. He was extremely anxious to improve the condition of the labouring agricultural population, and he was satisfied that giving them small allotments of land mainly tended to effect this object. He had recently allotted 26 acres of very bad land among 62 labourers, and this land had been chiefly cultivated by the spade, and it was wonderful to see what they had done. He was satisfied that if he had laid out 200*l.* he could not have brought the land to the same state, and he had no doubt that, notwithstanding the bad season, all the tenants would be able to pay their rents, and secure a profit from their allotments.—The Chairman then gave, "The Royal Agricultural Society."—Colonel CHALLONER said, as a member of that Association, he would venture to call the attention of the meeting to one or two very important benefits to agriculture which had recently been effected through the instrumentality of the Society. The first was the question of draining. Now, they all knew what an important matter it was for agriculturists; but then came the question as to the expense, and this to a certain extent effectually prevented it from being carried out. An Act of Parliament, however, had recently passed which enabled landlords to assist their tenants in draining, by charging their estates with a certain sum to be expended on that object; and thus, as he considered, the landlord, the tenant, and the labourer, were all benefited. For this enactment they were indebted to the Royal Agricultural Society. The subject was first introduced by the Duke of Richmond at one of the meetings of the Council, and through his instrumentality it eventually became law. Draining might now, therefore, be almost generally carried out, and he must remind them that when it was properly done, it had never been known to fail in improving the land and causing a large increase in its production. He agreed with Mr. Trotter in opinion, that the land was able to produce sufficient food for the population, but it could not be done without great labour, and exertions, and in some counties entirely turning over a new leaf. They should recollect, that although their population was increasing enormously, their quantity of land was still the same, and it was only by increasing its fruitfulness that they could hope to supply food for their population. Some gentlemen talked of bringing poor land into cultivation, but he was of opinion this would never answer, because he knew the expense of doing so, and that it would never pay unless corn was at high prices; which he thought they could not see again in this country unless it were the result of scarcity, which God forbid should ever be the case. He had told them on a former occasion that they must not rely upon what they termed protection; they must rely upon themselves, and they might rely upon it that the time would come when they would have none, and would be compelled to depend upon their own exertions. It might be next year, it might be ten years, but they might depend on it the time would come; and he called upon them, therefore, to be upon their guard, and not be taken by surprise, if they were told some morning that next year there would be no Corn-laws. He had no fear but even then they would be able to cultivate their land profitably if they exerted themselves. He had been recently in Scotland, and he saw land which formerly only produced five sacks of corn per acre, from which five quarters were now thrashed. Supposing, therefore, that the former quantity fetched 60*s*., the farmer would be better off with the increased quantity if it only fetched 40*s*. He therefore repeated that he had no fear that if they were deprived of the benefit of those enactments which they considered a protection, that they should still be able to cultivate the land with sufficient profit to themselves, give good wages to their labourers, and a remunerating rent to their landlord.—Mr. Wells, an extensive tenant farmer, said that a great many observations had been made about improving the condition of the labourer, but he thought the position of the tenant ought also to be taken into consideration. If the tenant had assistance from the owners of the soil he could do much to improve the condition of his labourers; but the bad covenants under which they now held land prevented them from doing so. They had no inducement to improve—they were bound down to a certain course of cropping under all circumstances, and which he must call a most stupid system; and he hoped their landlords would take these matters into their consideration, and render their tenants assistance. They had many grievances to complain of, which acted as a bar to improvement. There was the useless timber, the game—although, happily, they were not much troubled with that in this neighbourhood—and many other things in which the landlords might render their tenants essential assistance; and until this was done they could not expect that tenant farmers would exert themselves.—The Chairman next proposed the health of Mr. Briscoe, who, he said, might be considered almost the father of the association.—Mr. Briscoe, in returning thanks, said, there was no other association in the country where the financial statement was so satisfactory, or where so large an amount of prizes was delivered. Political subjects were very properly excluded from consideration at these meetings; but as some observations had been made with regard to the protection afforded to British agriculture, he might be excused for saying that he rejoiced to hear landlords give their opinions respecting it, for it had always been his opinion that it was more a landlord's than a tenant's question. He held it to be the duty of a landlord to give assistance and support—and that not scantily—to his tenant. He also thought that all those unwise restrictions in leases that had been alluded to by Mr. Wells, and which prevented the tenant farmer from exercising his skill and ability, and from making use of those scientific experiments which were so advisable, ought to be done away with. So far as regarded himself he would inform them that a short time back he had the pleasure of signing a lease for one of his tenants, in which there was not a single condition or restriction, except that the premises should be kept in repair. An old tenant of his had some time ago made to him a similar observation to that of the gallant Colonel, namely, that he expected shortly there would be no protection; and he told him in reply that should such an event occur, he would be happy to give him a lease by which the rent should depend on the prices. He should be ready to do so, and he thought no landlord ought to object; it was perfectly fair to both parties; if corn fell the rent would fall with it, and if it rose the rent would rise also. Under the present system, if he said anything to a tenant about increasing the number of his labourers or the amount of their wages, the answer he received was, "Consider the rent I pay." He was aware of the position of the tenant-farmers; he knew the difficulties they laboured under, and he was sure that, with all their kindly feelings, circumstances beyond their control frequently prevented them from doing what they would wish towards improving the condition of their labourers. With regard to the subject of rent, he would suppose the case of a farm of 100 acres, let at 25*s*. per acre, or 125*l*. per annum. In the ordinary course three labourers would be employed upon this farm; and if the rent was reduced only 15*l*. a-year, it would enable the farmer to give each of his labourers 2*s*. a-week more wages. A good deal was said about manufacturers and agriculturists. He, however, looked upon them all as manufacturers. The agriculturists were manufacturers—they manufactured corn; and they were all bound together, and if one class was protected in his opinion all should be protected.—Mr. Newman, one of the judges for the ploughing-match, in returning thanks upon the healths of himself and colleagues being proposed, said he concurred with Mr. Wells in the opinion that there never could be any permanent improvement unless the landlords came forward and assisted their tenants, and gave them a better tenure of their land. Under the present system a tenant was induced to get all that he could out of his land, during the latter period of his holding it; and it took the new comer-in five years to bring it round again, so that eight years were lost. Under the six months' tenure it was impossible to think that a farmer would make improvement. He might have a good landlord upon whom he could depend, but landlords, like tenants, would die, and fresh ones come in their place; and worse than all fresh agents who would look over the land, and if they found it in a good state, would turn out the tenant at six months' notice, perhaps to his utter ruin, and put a friend of their own in his place. If the farmer had a security for his holding, he would always farm up to the mark, and thus render it better for the landlord, the tenant, and the labourer.

Colchester.—The annual meeting of the East Essex Agricultural Association took place in this town on the 15th ult. At the dinner, in the evening, Mr. W. Fisher Hobbs presided, supported by a numerous party of gentlemen and farmers of the district. After the usual loyal toasts, The Chairman said, that in proposing the chief toast of the evening, he must, in the first place, surmise that all joined in regret at the circumstances which had pressed on the annual meeting; but the labours of the committee, however, had not been relaxed. Unfortunately, however, they had been deprived of three Presidents for the day,—first, Colonel Rebow, who was absent through the death of General Rebow; Mr. Round, M.P., who was of necessity attending to his magisterial duties; and Mr. Thomas White, the president of the Society, through the alarming illness of his lady. In proposing the toast, that of "Prosperity to the Society," he must observe, that though the show of stock was not equal to anticipation, it was not attributable to any want of encouragement on the part of the members of the Society. Agricultural knowledge had now become as generally diffused among landlords as tenants; and it was found that when landlords became practically acquainted with agriculture, they could better appreciate the efforts of the tenant. The Society, he would say, had effected much good by infusing a spirit of enterprise amongst the agriculturists in the locality. He would, therefore, propose "Prosperity to the East Essex Agricultural Association." The toast having been duly honoured, the list of prizes and other proceedings read, the Chairman gave thanks to the judges.—Mr. Baker, in returning thanks for himself and colleagues, said, that if the Society continued to persevere and progress as it has done, it would not fall short of other meetings of a similar kind; but it was a question whether the present method of carrying out these societies was the best. They were endeavouring, through the means of prizes, to carry out facts for the benefit of the country; but such facts should be brought before the country at large from all localities, so that, by comparing them, the greatest general good might be effected. It would be advisable to have one grand general society, in connection with the local societies, to be united through the Royal Agricultural Society. But general improvements in agriculture would never be fully carried out as long as the present law of landlord and tenant existed, for the tenant had no security for the capital he employed, or the capital he invested in the soil; and until that was altered, he never could be placed in that position that in right, justice, and equity, he was fully entitled to. It was the cause he alluded to which kept agriculture back instead of progressing. The alteration should be, that whatever a tenant invests in the soil, he ought to be fairly remunerated; for, when quitting his farm, to this he was fairly entitled. But now the general course was this—a man got a farm for 14 years on lease, on which he carried out every important improvement till the sixth or seventh year of the term; but he did not go on improving. And why not? Because he considered whether it would be for his benefit or that of the tenant who may succeed him; or should he obtain a renewal he thinks he shall probably have to pay, in some way or other, for the very improvements he has made. Instead, therefore, of continuing the improvements as in the first part of the term, he endeavours to take out all those improvements he has previously made, during the last four years of the term.—The healths of the "Lord Lieutenant," and "Members for the County," having been given, the customary courtesies awarded to the Chairman, &c., the company separated.

Farnham.—The Annual meeting of the West Surrey Agricultural Association took place on Thursday week at Farnham. There was a ploughing match in the morning, and the weather being fine, it attracted a great many of the neighbouring gentry, who appeared to take a good deal of interest in the exhibition. The dinner took place at the Bush Inn, Farnham. Crawford Davison, Esq., of Pierrpoint, presided, supported by several gentlemen of the county, and about 80 of the principal farmers of the district. The usual loyal toasts having been responded to, the Chairman proposed "The Lord Lieutenant and Magistracy of the County."—Mr. Nicholson, in returning thanks, said that as the chief object they sought to attain was to increase the produce of the land, he thought it was a very important consideration whether some means might not be devised to bring into cultivation the immense tracts of waste land that existed throughout the country, and he said that, in his opinion, the fame of the man who could achieve this would be far greater than that of any warrior or statesman who ever existed. At present these wastes were a positive evil, and tended very considerably to demoralise the agricultural population, but he had no doubt with proper exertion they might be rendered a blessing and be made available, and increase the quantity of food for their population. He was of opinion that the extension of railways would have a very material effect upon the cultivation of waste land, as by their means they might have manure, which was almost all they required, brought to their doors at a very trifling expense. If they exerted themselves, whether they had any protecting duty or not, he had no doubt that the farmers of England, from their superior energy, would be enabled successfully to compete with foreigners, and that they would be able to produce quite sufficient food for the population of the country.—H. Currie, Esq., then proposed "The healths of the Members for West Surrey," and at the same time said he regretted that Mr. Denison was prevented by illness from being among them on the present occasion. He considered they were under very great obligations to both these hon. gentlemen for their exertions both in the House and out of it.—Mr. Trotter regretted very much that the state of health of his colleague prevented him from being present. With regard to himself he had only a seven years' lease. That lease would expire very shortly, and he was, of course, unable to say whether it would be renewed or not. All he could, however, do, was to tell them that he should be ready to take a new lease, and pay the same rent. With regard to what had been said by his friend Mr. Nicholson about the cultivation of the wastes, he agreed with him that much might be done, and he begged to remind them that the Act relating to draining, which was passed during the last session, was calculated greatly to facilitate the cultivation of waste lands, if parties chose to take advantage of its provisions. He had lately been in Scotland, where, upon the Lammermoor hills, one of the most bleak positions possible to be conceived, he saw turnips growing upon spots where nothing but heath had before grown. He thought much might be done by bringing the large quantities of waste land there were in this country into cultivation. At present he did not offer an opinion how this was best to be effected, but he would only say that they had an Act of Parliament which gave them the power of trying how far it was practicable to bring these wastes into cultivation, if they chose to take advantage of its provisions.—Mr. Trotter, in proposing as a toast, "The Farmers of West Surrey," said he agreed with what had been stated by Mr. Nicholson, that the labouring population ought to have more time afforded to them than they had at present, and that the agricultural labourer should have a holiday occasionally given to him. His wages, however, ought not to be stopped to pay for his holiday, for he would not enjoy it if he found his wages short on the Saturday night. He had never found the labourer ungrateful, and he was sure they would never regret treating him with kindness. With regard to the cultivation of waste lands, he might perhaps be allowed to make a few further observations. It might be very true that the railways would give facility to carry manure, but who was to buy the manure in the first instance? The farmer could not do it, and unless he was assisted by his landlord, the idea of cultivating the marshes would turn out to be a chimera. He heartily wished it could be effected, for it was absolutely necessary that they should go on increasing their produce to keep pace with their largely increasing population. In order to supply that increase of population, they required the produce of 116,000 acres of land, taking it at three-quarters an acre, and they wanted 20,000 beasts, each of 100 stone, and 75,000 sheep at 9 stone; supposing each person to consume 75 lbs. of meat a year; and upon this calculation there would still be a very large deficiency. When they reflected upon this, they would see the necessity of leaving no exertion unspared, and that they need never fear producing too much, and their only fear should be that there would not be sufficient. He had no desire to alarm them, but he felt it his duty to call their attention to so important a matter. Last year they were able to produce sufficient food for their population; and, under the blessing of Providence, he had no doubt they should be able to continue to do so. He believed they would go on with the corn-law they had at present without any alteration; and his opinion was, that the present law should be sustained, and he trusted there would be no alteration in it.—Mr. A. Winkworth, in returning thanks, said he believed the farmers had done all in their power considering the treatment they had received. Their interests had been neglected and their property destroyed by an apostate Minister and the men whom they had sent to Parliament to protect them. ("Hear, hear," and interruption.) He had recently met at Guildford a person connected with mercantile pursuits, who told him that he thought it was a folly to employ men to hoe Wheat, and he hoped, in a short time, to see Wheat at such a price that it would not be worth hoeing. When farmers were told this, and saw how they were treated by men who professed to be their friends, they did not know what to do for the best. Their Government had made a very liberal tariff to benefit foreign nations, and they had been met by adverse tariffs in every direction. He considered that the farmers of England had been imposed upon; and, as there was a talk of a split in the Cabinet, he hoped that they would look after their own interests, and that they would not be turned over as they had been.

Ilminster.—The Ilminster ploughing match took place on Wednesday week. A great number of ploughs were entered for the prizes, and some excellent work was exhibited. At the dinner which took place afterwards, the chair was taken by Mr. Speke, of Jordans. Several gentlemen addressed the company. Among them, Mr. B. Escott, M.P., and Mr. P. V. T. Langworthy. The Chairman having proposed "The Health of the Member for Winchester," Mr. Escott said he had great pleasure in meeting a large body of farmers and others interested in agriculture in Ilminster, because he had not forgotten that here three years ago he had met a like party, and had been allowed by them the opportunity of stating frankly to the public his opinion on certain questions in which they were all deeply interested. The agricultural societies had in some places, and in some other parts of the country, a little fallen into disrepute with farmers; and why was it? Because they had fettered the expression of public opinion on public questions by absurd restrictions, whereas he was sure that every man here might express what each believed to be true, and that all would be best pleased by plainness and freedom of speech. There was, then, a great practical question, in which all men's minds were more or less interested, and which was every day becoming more and more a subject of intent thought and anxious reflection. Of course he meant the question of restriction on imported food—duties for the purpose of keeping up price—the present corn-law. He had that morning read a letter from Lord Ashley to his constituents on this subject. The noble Lord had indeed written what to his mind seemed a curious epistle—he had spoken of his own incompetence and want of ability. He was the only man in the country who would have spoken of that. "No" (proceeded Mr. Escott), "Lord Ashley is an able man, and sees truly what is coming; but then Lord Ashley is tainted with that which is the feeling of so many county members, or if not their feeling, it is the mode in which they speak and write. He writes of the corn-law as given up, but then he describes its loss as a blow, and a blow in another place destructive of the prosperity of his constituents. Why surely if the noble Lord thinks this, then the House of Commons is the place where he and others who think the same should ward off the blow. Lord Ashley is quite right in saying the corn-law is given up; but how can he be right in submitting quietly to allow his constituents to suffer heavy blows? Gentlemen, the truth is, and it had better be spoken plainly, it is the conduct of the special representatives of what they call agricultural opinions which has precipitated the fall of this corn-law. Why, I have sat in the House of Commons and heard a gentleman, a worthy friend of my own—pure in character, high in fortune and station, harangue the representatives of the people by the hour, on the low price of beef, mutton, veal, and lamb, and do this avowedly for the purpose of supporting agriculture, and propping up protection; in other words, arraying the supposed interests of agriculture against the real interests of the people; whereas, I always thought that the only way to maintain any system of protection was to show, if you can, that the interests of the community required it, and that the friends of the farmer are the friends of the consumer. Gentlemen, so soon as I heard that speech and others of a similar, though none of quite so monstrous a tendency, and so indiscreet in its expression, I felt, as Lord Ashley feels, that the game of protection was up. This was an attempt to maintain a contest with the bellies of the people. (Great laughter and cheers.) But I differ with Lord Ashley in one important respect. I dread no blow. I think the change is inevitable, but I do not despond for the result. It is true, things might have been better if we could have foreseen all that has happened. Late last session I gave a notice for the admission of Indian corn (the very best food for stock), free of duty. Oh, if that measure could have been carried last session, what a blessing it would have been for the country! ("Hear," and "No.") I hear some gentlemen dispute that opinion. Now, consider for a moment. We import the fat beast and give the Dutch grazier the profit, and the Dutch farmer the manure. Why on earth should we not import the food which is to fatten our own (hundreds were starving last March and April), and keep to ourselves the profit of the grazier, and nourish our own crops with the increased manure? (Loud cheers, and cries of "That's common sense.") Common sense, says some gentleman; yes, it is, indeed, common sense; and that is what the Secretary of State has said of the wise course in which we are proceeding. Lord Ashley is, indeed, right on one point; when the leading men of all parties are agreed to support common sense, it must be very uncommon nonsense that can prevail against them. (Laughter and cheers.) I have thought it right to speak openly. I have wondered how it is that at so many of these dinners so little or nothing is said of the great question. One recommends better farming, another advises the granting of leases, but both forget the facts that better farming requires capital and security (great cheering), and the other fact, that the security of leases can never be generally obtained while there is uncertainty about these laws of importation. Let us all, then, endeavour to meet the times, not by concealing the truth, but by preparing for its inevitable conclusions; it will be thus that temporary difficulties will be surmounted, as they have been surmounted before, by the kindness and consideration of some, by the energy and unfettered enterprise of others, and for myself, I feel very grateful that you, to whom I owe no public allegiance, and have no concessions to make or votes to regret, have allowed me to express to men whom I respect something of my own convictions on the greatest public question of the day." The whole company then rose and cheered tumultuously for some minutes.

Stockbridge.—The annual meeting of the Stockbridge Labourers' Friend Society was held in this town on the 20th ult. The premiums awarded were 101 in number, and the recipients between 80 and 90, some of them having got more prizes than one, for having voluntarily afforded material aid to relatives—for having made the best provision for age and sickness—for never having done any parish work, or received any parish relief—and for being the oldest men regularly at work, &c. At the dinner in the evening Mr. Baring Wall, M.P., presided. After the usual toasts, the Hon. E. Arundel proposed the health of the Chairman. He was a true country gentleman, a character, he believed, peculiar to England.—Mr. Wall, in returning thanks, said there was no merit due to him for taking care of his own interest, and he believed that in supporting that institution he was pre-eminently doing so. No one could fail being struck with the clean and cheerful appearance of the people at the Town-hall that day. It was evidence that the gentlemen around him took care of those committed to their charge. That they did their duty fully, he did not pretend to say—few did; but still they were on the way, and he hoped each successive year would find them approximating more nearly to it. Since he knew the county of Hants, great improvements had taken place in it, and especially during the last seven years, through the instrumentality of this Society. They were all liable to ride their favourite hobby over much, and though he highly esteemed the value of such an institution, he did not think it would cure all the evils of our present social state. It was merely one of many agencies which must be employed, and in its own way had its use; and it was gratifying to state that it had not only the support of a majority of the landlords, but also of the tenantry of the district, and under their auspices it was doing much good. They might not be able to go at railway speed, but he hoped they were steady and sure. The more happy they made the people, the more they would promote their individual interests. They must give education to improve the mind, and at least they ought to secure to the work-people good full bellies and well clad backs. This would give them a better return than any speculation whatever. It would join them all in bonds of union, rich and poor, and soften down the asperities which were but too apt to grow out of the want of friendly intercourse between the different classes of society. Mr. Wall concluded by proposing "the health of Sir J. B. Mills," as president, and regretted that indisposition prevented his being present on that occasion. The Rev. Mr. TAUNTON proposed "the health of Ralph Etwall, Esq. M.P.," as a steady friend of the poor. He differed from the views of that gentleman on the poor-law. Mr. Etwall thought it had deteriorated the condition of the people: on the contrary, he (Mr. T.) thought it had done much good. From the moment of its introduction in this district, wages were raised from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 2*s.* a day (several gentlemen exclaimed from 8*s.* to 10*s.* a week, which correction Mr. T. adopted, and proceeded). Previous to its introduction the labourers were lazy, spiritless, and indolent, and it had spurred them on. The weak, infirm, and aged had had their condition much improved; they received a comfortable abode, if they liked to go into it, and if not, they had a better, they received assistance there. For these reasons he approved of the law: since it was passed their institution had been established. It greatly contributed to stimulate the labourers to make better work, and restored the bonds of amity between masters and men, which were so lamentably broken in 1830. At that period they had not in their yards a man they could trust—scarcely a servant in their houses in whom they could put confidence. Every man's hand was against every man. That was now changed; they had a peasantry they could trust, with whom they were now living on good terms; and he believed that this change was owing to the new poor-law and the efforts of that association.—Complimentary toasts to the Treasurer, Secretary, committee, the judges, and other officers of the Society having been proposed and responded to, Mr. TWYNAM, tenant farmer, said no one could look upon the interesting sight they had that day witnessed without being affected by it. To see the man worn down by age and toil coming forward to receive the hard-earned prize of his good conduct, gave rise to serious thoughts. It must, however, be gratifying to the tenant farmers to witness so orderly a meeting, and even to those above them, for the labourers were the basis of the landlord's rent, as well as the farmer's profit. Their toil was the foundation of the wealth which they all enjoyed, and he hoped that that truth would not be forgotten after the day was over. He impressed the necessity of treating the labourers generously and kindly, and concluded by proposing their health.—JAMES REEVES, Esq., Vice-president, proposed "The Health of Mr. Busigny," the originator of an inferior, but useful institution, for improving the breed of cattle.—Mr. BUSIGNY said he hoped they would not merely pass personal compliments, but go further. He liked the institution, and believed it did good, but he had hoped that day to have seen the tables in that room crowded, and the labourers dining with them. If their principles were right, it would have been so. Of this he was certain, that prizes, though useful, were inadequate agents for improving the condition of the labourers. They must not only be ameliorated, but raised, and that could never be done until they broke down the barriers which separated them from each other. The labourers had sympathies as well as wants. Treat them, then, as fellow-beings, and that would do more for them than giving prizes or drinking their healths. It was a farce to talk of people being virtuous, without giving them the means to be so; unless they raised the physical condition of the people, they would do no good.—The CHAIRMAN said he would not complain of the somewhat discursive remarks of Mr. Busigny; but he would remind that gentleman that this Society was instituted for a specific object. Controversial subjects, if discussed at its meetings, would only obstruct its efficacy, and not fulfil any other useful purpose. Until they were all agreed that it was for the good of the labourers to bring them to the tables of the rich and the luxurious, and until they had discovered who were to pay for the wine—or until they had made up their minds to dine upon plainer, cheaper, yet substantial fare—to go and partake of the dinner of the labourers, and go without their wine—until, in short, they were all of one mind, and no danger existed of breaking up this Society through dissension, they must continue to follow the course they now took. But if Mr. Busigny would institute a new society, not to subvert this, but to have for its chief purpose, or for one of its purposes, the dining of the gentry and the labourers together, he (Mr. Wall) would give it his support and personal attendance. Whatever the bill of fare might be at such dinners he would cheerfully sit down as one of the guests, and enjoy the social company of his poorer fellow-men; that being the object of such a meeting of rich and poor, none would be called upon to join in it but those who approved of it. The case would be otherwise with the present association. Among the subscribers to it there was a difference of opinion on many subjects, but none on the subject of giving prizes for good conduct and good workmanship, therefore they had laid down a rule to exclude all other topics from discussion. Several other toasts followed, one being, "Manchester and Southampton, may Stockbridge soon see them shake hands." This, being in allusion to the proposed railway, was warmly applauded.

Tring.—On the 14th ult., the fourth annual meeting of the Tring Agricultural Association was held at Pendley, close to the railway station. The dinner took place in a large room newly erected for such purposes. The usual loyal toasts being disposed of, the Chairman proposed "Prosperity to the Tring Association."—Mr. HOUGHTON, in returning thanks for the successful candidates, said there was nothing like competition, and farmers were as much benefited by the spirit of emulation as others. He had often lost on several previous occasions, but his motto had been that "he should live to fight another day." These associations tended to bring together landlords and tenants; and he hoped that these ties would be brought closer together every year. The landlord would see how little he would be without the toil and energy of his tenants, and the farmer how little effect all his efforts would be without the labour of the peasantry. It was their duty to increase the product of the soil, and to furnish food for the increasing population. The groundwork of everything that had been done for agriculture was the man who had actually tilled the soil, reared the stock, and braved the wintry blasts. It was to this man they were indebted for all they possessed as agriculturists. Meetings like the present ought to be encouraged, as they brought together people of different classes, and of different views. Agriculturists should remember that they had to feed the people. He had used his best endeavours to improve the soil, and had taken land which the hand of man had never tilled, and which had never known cultivation. Everything he had was staked upon the cultivation of the land. It was their duty to improve the soil and raise the condition of the agricultural labourer; and the best way of obtaining the latter object was by giving each a small allotment of land, at a very moderate rent. The Judges having been then toasted, Mr. BENNETT said—If he had any claims to be regarded as a farmer at all above mediocrity, it was owing to his having been taken to a ploughing match when but eight years old. His father had made him go to the Bedford ploughing match, where his exertions were so stimulated that he won the eight guinea cup. Young sons of farmers should always endeavour to do their best, and they might be sure their exertions would be successful. There was a difference of opinion among some people as to whether these societies did good. It was argued that in commerce and manufactures nothing of this sort was required, and it was asked why should servants in husbandry be rewarded more than others. If agriculture was in a healthy state, it was argued such inducements would not be required. These arguments however were futile. It was forgotten that the progress and everything connected with agriculture were slow. The profits were small—the inducements to cultivate were small—and some other means were required to stimulate the cultivators of the soil to make efforts to bring out the full powers of the soil. If good cultivation was to be the order of the day, a proper security must be given to the tenant for his outlay of capital, and to induce him to apply to the soil the skill he ought to possess. In the occupancy of a farm, if the least doubt existed as to who should reap the profits, it was most unreasonable to expect the application of either toil, skill, or capital. There was nothing to be got by blinking these questions, either on one side or the other. The landlord would not be justified in giving a lease to a bad farmer; he ought to be satisfied that the tenant had the means, ability, and will to cultivate the soil properly. If the landlord would rather not grant a lease, and give up the possession of his land, then he was bound to insert an improvement clause in his agreement to let from year to year. It was but fair that, in all such agreements, the tenant should have secured to him compensation for the benefits of all the unexhausted improvements he might leave in the soil. Without such a certainty, it was most unreasonable to expect any large outlay, or any important improvements. The landlord might please himself about giving leases; but, if he refused, he was bound to say to his tenant, "Improve your land as fast as you can, and I will take care that you have all the benefit of your toil and outlay." He (Mr. Bennett) should not despair of seeing this country grow a sufficiency of food for a much greater amount of population than at present existed, if a proper understanding could be come to between landlords and tenants on this point. Lord C. Russell had said, at Leighton Buzzard, that these questions should be settled out of doors; but for his (Mr. Bennett's) part he could not see that the discussion would be put in any worse position by bringing public opinion to bear upon it. The farmers were not always in a position to settle matters with their landlords out of doors. He would not bore the landlords on the subject of leases; but this he would say, that if a tenant, by judicious improvements, had so improved his farm as to make it worth more to sell at the close of his tenancy, it was but fair that valuers should be called in, and a fair price given to the tenant for these improvements, so as to give him the whole benefit thereof. If this were always done, much reproach, insult, and misrepresentation would be removed from the agriculturists as a body. The farmers had spirit enough, if properly protected in their occupancy, to farm the land well, and to make England the garden of the world.—Mr. METCALFE gave the health of their chairman, and said he quite concurred in the observations which had just fallen from Mr. Bennett. It was evident and clear that unless the interests of landlords and tenants were made reciprocal in the way which had been pointed out, the soil would never be cultivated as it ought to be.—The Rev. J. GALLOWAY gave "The Vice-President."—Mr. HOUGHTON, in returning thanks, expressed his approbation of the sentiments which had fallen from Mr. Bennett. But he (Mr. Houghton) stood there as one of the largest occupiers in the kingdom; he held land in Ireland and in Scotland, and he would as soon think of attempting to fly as of taking a farm without a lease. This was the plain common sense of the question. He had grown good crops where nothing green had ever grown before. Could he have done this without a lease? It was true some of the best farmers held under insecure tenures. Their landlords had the best of intentions, and were most anxious for the welfare of their tenants and their tenants' families; but life was very uncertain, and who could tell what would become of the property after the death of either landlord or tenant? It was nonsense to expect any one to expend capital on another man's land. He had seen, on some farms, with very small inclosures, timber as thick as it could stand. He would ask which had the best of the land—the landlord, who sold the timber, or the tenant whose corn was injured by the soil being exhausted by the growth of this timber? As to the game, it was not only unfair, but absolutely dishonest, for a landlord to take rent for a farm and then to stock it with game. He had stated this before a committee of the House of Commons, and was ready to avow it upon all occasions. It was most dishonest for landlords to stock farms with vermin. The farmers of that neighbourhood, with their talent and respectability, had nothing to fear. With a railway on their right and a canal on their left, they had every advantage, and everything to hope for. He (Mr. Houghton) had taken 3400 acres of land, the barrenest of the barren, but with a security of tenure he had not been daunted. The beacon points the way. The tithes had been commuted into a rent charge; so that the clergyman could not now come in and participate in the profits and proceeds of their toil and outlay. Unless they drained their land, their land would drain them. It was only by subsoiling and scientific farming that agriculturists could expect to live. The farmers might profit by the example of the commercial world, which showed great readiness to adopt any improvement. If any new method were discovered to make colours stand, or improve the manufacture of silk, the commercial men would ride from one end of the country to the other to discover and compete with it. In this country are sometimes to be seen four horses to a plough, two pulling one way and two the other. Sometimes six horses were seen to a plough, most of them of course a good way from the plough. If they wanted draught they must put the horses close to the plough. In this country too they had one to drive the horses and another to hold the plough; but the horses were seldom much attended to, as the boy had quite enough to do in talking to the man; they might do away with one man and two horses; while the two were talking the horses would do but little. In Scotland they did the work better at a less cost. Farmers must go on with the spirit of improvement; unless they moved on with the times they could not expect to succeed. Plenty of game and hedge-row timber might do for the landlords, but would not do for him. Ploughing with four horses might have done for his father, but it would not do for him. If the aristocracy really needed battues, let them keep their game in a room, and shoot at it through the keyhole.—The health of Mr. Metcalfe was then drunk and acknowledged, after which followed that of the treasurer and secretary. Some further discussion took place on the subject of letting by tender, and Mr. HOUGHTON made some remarks on the improper conduct of those owners of the soil who neither cultivate themselves nor allow others to do so.

Ulverston.—The annual meeting of the North Lonsdale Agricultural Society was held in this town a few days since. The show was good, especially the pigs and horned cattle. About 140 gentlemen sat down to dinner, the Earl of Burlington in the chair. After the routine toasts, the Chairman proposed "Success to the North Lonsdale Agricultural Association." He had always endeavoured, on former occasions, to introduce something practical to the notice of the meeting, and though he could not help feeling his great deficiency in the knowledge necessary for setting such subjects before them, he hoped that he might be the means of drawing from others what would be useful and instructive. He was always happy to meet with difference of opinion. Difference of opinion did not necessarily require that discussion should be conducted with warmth, but it tended to elicit useful information, and he was glad to find that in their Society some valuable discussion had been produced by it. On the last occasion that he addressed them he ventured to express his dissent from an opinion strongly expressed by the inspectors of crops against feeding off turnips with sheep. He had heard this opinion with great surprise, but he was glad that the subject was brought forward, for it gave an opportunity both for those who agreed in that view of the case, and those who differed from it, to state the grounds on which their opinion was founded. They ought, however, to bear in mind that even if a practice was found to be beneficial in one district, or part of the country, it did not follow that it was adapted for other parts. Upon this particular point they must remember that the practice in question was far from being confined to the south. It was also very prevalent in the north, and there was no reason why it should not be adopted here. Since the last winter he had had about 40 acres of Turnips fed off with sheep. The proportion drawn varied from one-half to one-third, according to the state of the land. The land was of different quality. Some of it marsh-land, other moss. In both instances the crop that succeeded had been excellent, both in quantity and quality. The last year was a very dry one going into December, but the winter was not peculiarly favourable. They had much variable weather, with constant alternations of wet and cold, but still the result had been what he stated. Others had tried the experiment, and as far as his information went, with equal success as himself; and for the benefit of the succeeding crop, it was as profitable a way as any of consuming the turnips. He brought this matter forward hoping that others might be induced to state their opinions. The North Lonsdale Association had been many years in existence, and he believed its operations had not been unproductive of good, but he hoped its motto would continue to be "improvement" and that the object of all its members was to render the agriculture of this district equal to that of any other part of the kingdom. There was no reason why it should not be equal to any of the highest character. The turnips grown in many parts of this district it was impossible to excel. It was improper in one, who had so little experience as himself, to cast anything that approached to a reflection; but he must be permitted to state, that he thought there was room for improvement on many farms. The fences were far from being in the state they ought to be, and they were in fact little better than a receptacle for weeds. He would also state, with much deference, that greater attention might be paid to a regular system of farming. The farming on a regular rotation might, he thought, be advantageously introduced.—The CHAIRMAN gave "the Inspectors of Crops." That was a toast that needed no recommendation from him. It was impossible to listen to the report that had been read, and to bear in mind the difficult and arduous nature of their labour, without feeling that they were greatly indebted to those gentlemen. In his own opinion, he had never heard a more useful report on these occasions, and the concluding statement in particular was one in which he heartily concurred, that if the landlords and tenants went hand in hand, it was impossible to calculate the extent of improvement which might be attained in the agriculture of the country. There were other parts of the report which were very admirable. He alluded particularly to what was said respecting the permanently beneficial effects of guano. There was another point of view in which they might look upon this subject. It seemed that the African island, from which the chief supply had been hitherto obtained, was exhausted, and indeed from the nature of the source from which the manure was derived it was impossible to calculate upon a longer continued supply, but there was no doubt it was possible to manufacture an artificial kind, and in many cases it had been found nearly as efficacious as the original article, and it might be procured at a moderate price, he believed at about 9*l.* a ton. He therefore suggested whether it would not be wise in some of the farmers of the district to try this artificial kind. They might rest assured that ultimately they would have to depend upon it. There was one subject alluded to in the report, and great fear was expressed that great distress would ensue during the ensuing winter. He meant the failure of the Potato crop. It was impossible to arrive at any conclusion but that the disease was very widely spread throughout the country. It appeared in the south before it came here; but there were very few who entirely escaped, and many parts of Europe, and he believed America, had suffered in an equal degree. If any one could suggest a remedy, not indeed to check the disease, for that was a thing they dared hardly look for, but if any one could point out how the Potatoes which had been taken up might be prevented from getting worse, it would be highly interesting to listen to his observations. He should be also glad to hear from the inspectors any remarks they might have to offer relative to the farming of the district.—Mr. S. RIGG, Abbey Holme, near Wigton, Cumberland, returned thanks. He stated the pleasure he felt at being called on to act as one of the judges on this occasion, and passed a high encomium on the farming of the district, so far as he had had the opportunity of observing it. It had been often said that large landed proprietors had an advantage over tenants in making improvements, and he had many a time been told, when mention was made of some great improvement that had been so made, "why it is no wonder: the man has a purse without a bottom;" but he was glad to find that the farmers were beginning to act more for themselves, and on the result of their own observations. Still he thought that a change ought to be made in the law. What was that change, he might be asked. Why, it was this: as a farmer was liable for all dilapidations that might have taken place, so he should be allowed to get pay for all the improvements which he effected, and he should have a longer holding of his land. He should have a seven, nine, or fourteen years' lease. If a farmer had such a lease, he put improvement into the land, and he would say to himself, I will have it out, and neither Jack nor Tom, nor any body else, shall take from me the result of my labours. With this feeling he went on improving, and the benefit was not only for himself, but for his landlord, and last, but not least, for his country. He was aware that there were many whom it would not affect, because there were many landlords who never thought of changing their tenants. He was himself the third generation who had occupied his farm; but he was strongly of opinion that a lease, not exceeding 14 years at the utmost, was the fairest, and gave most scope and encouragement to the industrious tenant. With the leave of the chairman he would propose a toast, "Liberal landlords and industrious tenants." Without industry, land could not be cultivated as it ought, and if the landlord was not liberal, that industry would not be brought into play. He trusted that such a toast as that would be drunk with all the enthusiasm they could show.—The CHAIRMAN then gave the "Judges of Stock." He was glad to find that Mr. Rigg was included among them, and from the excellent speech which he had just delivered, he was sure they would agree with him that he well deserved that his health should be drunk a second time.—Mr. RIGG rose again to thank them for the compliment they had paid the judges and himself.—Mr. TOWNLEY expressed the pleasure he felt at again meeting them on that occasion in social good company. He looked upon societies of this kind to be of the greatest benefit, and so long as the members went on benefiting each other by the communication of information in a friendly spirit, they must tend to preserve the prosperity of England. He was sorry to observe a great falling off in attendance at many of the meetings. Excuses were read from county members and from gentlemen connected with the several districts, but with that Society whose anniversary was now holding it was not so. One of their members was present and kindly took upon himself the duty of vice-president, and he had come a very long way to be with them. Their other county member was with them in heart, and was prevented only by illness from fulfilling his intention of being there. But they had with them a noble lord that never deserted them, and so long as he remained with them, he could assure him they would never desert him. He called on them to drink "the health of their noble chairman, Lord Burlington," with all the honours. The CHAIRMAN thanked them most sincerely for the kind way in which his health had been drunk. He felt that it was both his duty and his pleasure to attend on these occasions. The Chairman then said, he had delayed too long in giving the next toast, which he knew they were all anxious to drink—he meant the health of the members of the county. One of them had honoured them with his presence, and had kindly consented to act as vice-chairman. — Mr. CLIFTON, M.P., returned thanks. He said: My hon. colleague would have been present, but for a fit of illness, and he has desired me to assure you that there is not a society in which he takes greater interest than the North Lonsdale Association. In company with him, I have attended many societies of this kind, and I feel that they are calculated to be of the utmost service. The noble lord has said that he hoped the motto of this Society would be "improve, improve." I hope so too; for unless it is so, you can hardly hope to keep pace with the movement that is taking place in every branch. Coming as I do from the southern part of the county, I have had the opportunity of noting the improvement that is taking place in manufactures, and in everything else, and I only regret today that I have seen no implements on the field. I cannot think that the introduction of agricultural implements is calculated to take bread out of the mouth of the labourer. You all know what a dearth of labour exists at this time throughout the country. Never was labour so scarce, and never was it so well paid as in these stirring times. But you must bear in mind that this cannot last, and when an event happens, which some think will happen, that will withdraw from you that support which I think you have a right to claim; your own resources, and your own industry must be your sole dependence. I am the last man to take up your time on such occasions as these. I am no practical agriculturist, and I am not able to communicate to you any information that is likely to be useful. I can only say, that care and observation are more than ever necessary to the farmer. The last year was a particularly dry one, and this has been a particularly wet one, and each season proves alike the impolicy of growing turnips too close together. In one instance the air does not afford sufficient nutriment, and in the other they are completely overpowered.—The Chairman said his next toast was the health of the Successful Candidates. Mr. CARTER, of St. Bees, returned thanks.—The Chairman gave "The health of Mr. Gibson, the treasurer." Mr. GIBSON returned thanks. Although the Society, under the patronage and active support of the noble lord, had done much good, it could not be denied that much remained to be accomplished, and in nothing was the farming so defective as the failing to adopt a regular rotation of cropping; and nothing deserved such strong reprobation as taking two or three white crops in succession. Another thing that wanted to be remedied was, the want of proper economy in the saving the liquid manure. He would just state before he sat down, that the noble chairman had, with great liberality, returned his premiums.—The Chairman then gave, "The Town and Trade of Ulverston."

Worksop.—The annual meeting of the Labourers' Friend Society was held at Worksop on the 21st ult. His Grace the Duke of NEWCASTLE was present at the ploughing matches, and subsequently at the dinner of the Society. The usual loyal toasts having been given, his Grace, who occupied the chair, in proposing "Success to the Works of the Labourers' Friend Society," spoke of its objects, and the duties of employers to their servants. The noble Chairman said, the next toast he had to propose was that which related to the objects they had met to celebrate. That day for the first time he was present to witness the ploughing matches of the Society, and he must say it gave him very great pleasure to observe so industrious a scene, one in which the labourers in husbandry took so much pains, in which they were so anxious to distinguish themselves. Not only were their praiseworthy emulations excited by the distinctions of the Society, they had a pride amongst themselves, and no doubt they exerted themselves for the honour of their masters as well as their own. He hoped that sort of emulation would be persevered in by them, because it not only tended to distinguish themselves as executing their particular offices with adroitness and dexterity, but it also showed to them the great importance in their situation in life of preserving an excellent character. This would help to make them honest and good men. It would be quite unnecessary for him to attempt to enlighten them on the nature of this Society, which they had so kindly and he must say so patriotically contributed to support. He was sorry to learn that the funds were not so good as they might be, but he hoped they would be increased sufficiently to enable them to give not only such premiums as were awarded by the Society at present, but even to increase them, if it should be found necessary. Whatever was useful and desirable for the people, and beneficial to those around them, they would all most willingly, and in a British manner, stand up to maintain. He must say it was his humble opinion that, though it was called a Labourers' Friend Society, he really did think it was capable of being carried much further than merely giving prizes for good workmanship and long service. There were other desirable points to attend to in such a society. He was sure they would go along with him, and feel as he did, that it was very necessary and desirable that we should all adhere to those around us; that we should make common cause with them, and stand in relation to one another as friends and neighbours. We were all of the same flesh and blood—all of the same family. There must be difference of rank and difference of position, but they should never forget that it was their duty, as he was sure it was their anxious desire, to show the utmost kindness and benevolence of feeling to those around them, and gain their hearts and affections as much as possible by the way in which they conducted themselves to them; by studiously inculcating in them all those moral and religious principles which would make them good men and good servants, and by watching over their morals, administering to all their necessities in reason. By these means we should gain their affection, and, with their affection, their hearty and willing exertions. He did not think it necessary to throw out such a hint, but if they coincided with him, he hoped they would turn their attention to what he had said—though he had said it rather loosely—and endeavour as much as possible to elevate the condition of their servants; and, while they endeavoured to make them good workmen, and skilful in the arts of husbandry, they should be anxious about their morality. To the poor man character was of the utmost importance, and the more it was appreciated amongst themselves, the more it would be benefiting society at large, tending as it would to increase the strength of the nation to an extent and in a manner none of us could sufficiently appreciate. He had ventured to throw out these observations, and he hoped they would be taken in good part by them all, and that they would at all times strive to do their best, for there might be times when they would be glad to depend upon each other. He trusted the Society might always flourish, and that though this was his first time of meeting them, it would not be the last.—Sir T. WHITE proposed the health of the Duke of Newcastle.—The noble CHAIRMAN in returning thanks said that Si Thomas White had mentioned one circumstance in connection with his name, and that was with respect to garden allotments to the poor. If there was any merit attached to that it belonged to his friend Mr. Wilmot, who was always forward in the cause of benevolence, and in all those worthy actions which tended to benefit the poor. It was to him that he (the Duke) was indebted for adopting the system of garden allotments, and for a great number of other improvements on his estate; and to him therefore the merit was justly due. The only merit he could claim was, that he subscribed to what had been so kindly and benevolently proposed by Mr. Wilmot. — The health of Sir T. White and several other toasts having been proposed, the noble Chairman rose to propose "the Agricultural Labourers." It had become of late almost the fashion to sympathise with the poor. There could not be a more worthy and excellent fashion, but even that view might be carried too far, and they might by injudicious representations and injudicious acts do more harm than good. If they took a man out of his situation, and made him discontented by telling him poverty was a misfortune, they would be doing considerable mischief, and making his mind uneasy on a point on which he had no occasion to be uneasy at all, because, though his station was inferior to those who employed him, and though he could not possess those comforts which wealth had at command, yet he might be a happy man, and would be, if he were not made discontented. He (the Chairman) had as strong a feeling for the poor man as any one, but he would not do anything that would sacrifice his future peace for the sake of his present hopes; he should not think he was doing his duty by holding out the promise of an object which it was utterly impossible the poor man could obtain. There were high and low, rich and poor in this world, and we should be contented and happy in the situation in which we were placed. There was nothing more deserving of respect than a well-beloved poor man; his conduct always commanded the good feeling of those who witnessed it. He trusted they would all do their best to better the poor man's condition without ever hinting to him that he ought to be what he never could be. The rich man depended upon the labourer for his wealth, and the poor man on him for employment, and thus there was a mutual dependence which it was highly essential to preserve. The noble Duke concluded by speaking in warm terms of the farmers and farm labourers of Nottinghamshire, the latter of whom were as well or better paid than the labourers in any other county.

Railways.

We regret to state that Mr. Boteler, who was so seriously injured in the late accident on the Midland Railway, died on Thursday week at his residence at Oulton near Leeds. He gradually sunk after the amputation of his leg on the previous Tuesday. His condition was so deplorable, that the medical men desisted from performing a similar operation upon his other leg. Mr. Boteler was in his 69th year. He had only occupied the office of Commissioner of Bankruptcy at Leeds about 12 months, having been appointed on the translation of Mr. Bere to Exeter. He was highly respected by those who associated with him in private life, as well as by those who came in contact with him in his judicial capacity. He was not only eminent as a lawyer, but was distinguished by his successful career at Cambridge, where he attained the rank of senior wrangler. On the fatal event taking place an express was sent to the secretary of the Midland Railway, who lost no time in apprising General Pasley of the melancholy fact. Thomas Wheatley, the engine-driver, who had already appeared before the magistrates at Sheffield to answer the charge of negligence, but was discharged on bail, was forthwith brought from Leeds, by a special train to Derby, and underwent a long examination before General Pasley in the board-room, in the presence of some of the directors; the result of the examination has not become known. Notice was immediately given to the Coroner, who directed the inquest to be held on Monday. After sitting for two days and hearing the evidence of numerous witnesses, who proved that the signal lights had been properly exhibited, the jury returned a verdict of "Manslaughter" against Thomas Wheatley. Wheatley had been present during the inquiry, but when the verdict was delivered it was found that he had decamped. Sergeant Stubbs, whose leg was broken in the collision, is going on as favourably as can be expected, under the care of the Infirmary officers.—It is announced that a permanent alliance has taken place between the London and Birmingham and Grand Junction, and that, in unison with the Liverpool and Manchester, and Manchester and Birmingham, one grand concern is to be formed under the title of the Great North Western.—An amalgamation between the two direct London and Manchester companies (Rastrick's and Remington's) has been finally concluded. The two engineers last week met the directors and announced that the survey of the line from London to Manchester was completed, and ready for Parliament.—The directors of the Great Western have entered into a provisional agreement for the purchase of the Bristol and Exeter railway, subject to a fixed rent-charge, for the purpose of promoting the best direct line, on a continuous broad gauge, from the south-western ports of Cornwall and Devonshire, through Exeter, to the metropolis. The directors have also announced that, at a special meeting to be held on the 7th inst., the undertaking and extension of their own line from Hungerford, through the Pewsey Valley, to Westbury, with a branch to Malvern, will be considered. By a change in the direction of the Wilts and Weymouth line, between Westbury and Frome, the main western traffic, direct from London, will reach Yeovil within a distance of 126 miles, of which 91 miles of railway have been either constructed, or already sanctioned by Parliament. A new company will be formed for a line between Yeovil, Bridport, and Exeter, by an association of residents and landowners, with guarantee, and prospective increase of dividend. The surveys are said to be in progress, together with the necessary applications for the coming session. It appears, however, by the reports of meetings held last week at Bristol and Exeter, that the provisional agreement with the Bristol and Exeter Company will be strongly opposed by a large body of proprietors.—The directors of the London and York have issued the usual legal notices of their intention to present a petition to the House of Commons in the next session, for the introduction of a London and York Railway Bill, the same in every respect as the Bill which was read a third time and passed last year. The promoters of the Direct Northern are also, it is said, prepared to go to Parliament, and have altered their line so as to go into Grantham.—At the special meeting of the shareholders of the Eastern Counties Company, held on Thursday, Mr. Hudson in the chair, it was agreed to carry out the project of a York line, in connexion with the Northern and Eastern, the Eastern Counties, and the Cambridge and Lincoln, and to raise a capital for that purpose. It was also resolved, on Mr. Hudson's suggestion, to offer to the London and York Company a large portion of this capital, with the view of inducing them to join these amalgamated companies and abandon their own scheme, which Mr. Hudson described as one which would never pay, but on the contrary, if constructed to-morrow "would be a most severe infliction upon its shareholders." This was Mr. Hudson's first appearance as chairman, and his reception was not only most enthusiastic, but his proposals were met and approved with an unanimity but rarely witnessed at the Eastern Counties' meetings. Mr. Hudson took occasion to condemn the present railway mania in very stringent terms, and severely censured the conduct of "right hon. gentlemen and aldermen" in lending their names to the provisional committees of schemes which were got up only as gambling speculations, which are certain to end in ruin.

PRICES AND TRAFFIC, by permission, from the List of Messrs. HILL, FAWCETT, & HILL, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

NAME OF RAILWAY. Those marked thus * are not yet opened.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Week ending between Oct. 21. & Oct. 28.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Corresponding Week. 1844.	6 Mos. Dividend Per Share. † 5 Mos.	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid.	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock.
	£	£	£ s. d.	£	£	£
Birmingham, Glo'ster		2,130	2 0 0	100	all	134-6
Bristol, Birmingham
Bristol, Exeter			1 5 0	100	70	88-90
Bristol, Glo'ster			1 0 0	50	30	34-6
Chester, Holyhead	*	*		50	15	12-13
Eastern Counties	6,748	4,834	0 3 0†	avr.	14¾	22-½
Eastern Union				50	20
Do. Extension				25	1¼
Edinburgh, Glasgow	3,156	2,582	1 5 0	50	all	67-72
Grand Junction	15,000	8,053	2 10 0†	100	all
Great North of England			3 0 0	100	all	118-18
Great Western	18,982	16,510	3 4 0	100	80	136-40
Gt. South. & Western (I.)	*	*	*	50	15	21-3
Do. Extension	*	*	*	50	2½	13-15
Hull, Selby				50	all	102-4
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*	*	50	25	49-51
Liverpool, Manchester		4,958	4 10 0	100	all
London, Birmingham	21,330	16,048	5 0 0	stk.	100	212-22
London, Blackwall	875	760	0 3 0	avr.	16¾	16-½
London, Brighton	5,591	5,040	1 10 0	50	all	64½-5
London, Croydon	1,752	479	0 8 0	avr.	13½	22-3
London, Greenwich				avr.	15½	9-10
London, South-Western	7,558	6,248	2 0 0	avr.	41½	73-6
Manchester, Birmingham	4,271	3,937	1 0 0	40	40	79-82
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	1,000	926	2 14 0	122	93
Manchester, Leeds, Hull			2 16 0	100	73	141-6
Midland	17,519	10,122	3 2 6	stk.	100	134-8
Do. Birmingham, Derby				stk.	100	116-20
Newcastle, Carlisle	1,613	1,572	2 10 0	100	all
Newcastle, Darlington	2,006	2,041	4 0 0	25	all	60-5
North British	*	*	*	25	15	23½-4
Northern, Eastern			1 2 6	50	45	66-70
Norwich, Brandon				25	14	24-6
Preston, Wyre	514	350		50	all	39-43
Sheffield, Manchester	1,121	661	5 p. Cent	100	95
South Devon	*	*		50	30	28-9
South-Eastern, Dover	7,230	5,033	0 13 4	avr.	33½	37-½
Yarmouth, Norwich			0 10 0	20	all	22-30
York, North Midland	5,169	2,295	1 10 0	50	all	106-11
Do. Scarboro' Branch	*	*		25	all	52-4
Do. Selby			0 12 8	50	30	58-60
FRENCH RAILWAYS.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*	*	20	8	11-½
Orleans, Vierzon	*	*	*	20	10	18½-19½
Orleans, Bordeaux	*	*	*	20	4	11½-12
Paris, Orleans	6,510		1 0 2½	20	all	47-8
Paris, Rouen	6,421	5,025	0 19 2	20	all	38-40
Rouen, Havre				20	14	28½-30

Ireland.

Dublin.—The Marquis of Downshire has addressed a letter to the Earl of Roden in reference to the Protestant address which lately issued from Belfast. The Marquis expresses his full approbation of that document, and adds—"Ours is a cause that must rise with the occasion, and I wish I could look forward to the same caution and discretion on the part of our brethren of the lower classes; but I hope that they will look before they leap, and by laying aside old recollections, trust to older and wiser heads, to be guided out of the whirlpool of treachery on the one side and expediency on the other, which surrounds them. Let them recollect that the present is the beginning of a fresh era in the history of our wrongs, and that on their steadiness depends the fate of our common religion in Ireland, and, perhaps, the union of the two countries. Let them earn the reputation, from the English, of a thinking and steady race, determined to vindicate their rights. We have long enough, I think, winked at the subversion of Protestantism, and if they do not help us to carry out proper views of moderate but effective resistance, we shall be in statu quo, and laughed at for our feebleness. Let ours, then, be the united pull of one b dy."—At the meeting of the Dublin Protestant Association last week, Dr. Hyndman moved the following resolution:—"That a special general meeting of the association be held on the 5th November, to commemorate the deliverance from the gunpowder plot, and the landing of William III. of glorious memory in these realms." He said that he was convinced of the importance of keeping up such commemorations as that of the 5th November. These were not times when it was proper to allow Protestants to become forgetful of those great deliverances which they have experienced in past times, nor those dangers which the unchanged and unchangeable character of Popery rendered still not improbable. He felt assured that the resolution would pass with acclamation, and the 5th of November would be celebrated with genuine Protestant enthusiasm. He trusted that the committee would leave no means untried to render the occasion a triumphant one. The resolution passed unanimously. The Rev. T. D. Gregg then moved a resolution in reference to Lord Roden's address to the Protestants, the purport being to express the opinion of the meeting, that the address in question did not go far enough, and in fact failed to embody the indignant feelings of the Irish Protestants towards the present Government.—The trial of Mr. Duffy, the police magistrate, for an aggravated assault, which had stood over from the last commission, in consequence of the jury not being able to agree to a verdict, was resumed on Monday, before the Chief Baron and Mr. Justice Burton. Nothing could surpass the interest excited by this trial, as a general impression prevailed that the charge, like others of the same nature on former occasions, had been got up by the detective police. Mr. Duffy was accompanied by the Right Rev. Dr. Kinsella, Roman Catholic bishop of Ossory; Sir Richard Langrishe, Bart., Sir John Power, Bart.; the Hon. John Plunkett, Henry Baker, William Bryom, Thomas Bushe, William F. Finn, James Martin, Arthur Bushe, Loftus Bushe Fox, Edward Smithwick, and Edward Lalor, Esqs. The evidence against him was of the most loose and contradictory character, and without hearing a reply from Mr. M'Donagh, Q.C., the jury stopped the case, and returned a verdict of Not Guilty. The streets in the vicinity of the court during the evening were crowded with people cheering.—A meeting of the Town Council was held on Wednesday, at which Mr O'Connell proposed that a deputation be appointed to wait upon the Lord Lieutenant for the purpose of pressing upon the attention of Government the propriety of taking measures to prevent the export of provisions of all kinds to any country except England, of stopping distillation from grain, and of laying a tax of 50 per cent upon the income of absentees, and of 10 per cent upon all other incomes. The proposition was unanimously adopted.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association was held on Monday, Mr. Somers, M.P. for Sligo, in the chair. A letter was read from a Repeal warden in England, stating that most of the Irish labourers on the Carlisle Railway had refused to contribute to the funds of the Association, on the ground that Mr. O'Connell had greatly offended them by his denunciations of Ribbonism. Mr. O'Connell took occasion, upon this very suspicious piece of intelligence, to repeat his expressions of the most decided condemnation and abhorrence of Ribbonism. He next took up the subject of the proposed statues in the new Houses of Parliament. Having bestowed a few passing compliments on Oliver Cromwell, he vehemently attacked Lord Bacon. He was not surprised that they were about to erect a statue for him. Who was he? A judge who took bribes. What infamy could be so great as that? To be sure, they had had examples of a one-sided judge lately, but he was incapable of taking a bribe. Indeed, there would have been no necessity for giving him one. Bacon, however, had polluted the high office he held, and they gave him a statue. Was it to encourage other judges to follow in his steps? Pope had well described him as "the mightiest, wisest, meanest of mankind." Well, then came Wycliffe, John Knox, and John Wesley. Wycliffe was the first man who introduced the doctrine denying the real presence in England, and he asserted that the Sovereign forfeited his authority by the commission of one mortal sin—rather inconvenient for the monarchs of the present age. He possessed none of the dignity which belonged to the English character, for he apostatized a second time, and returned to his curacy. What was his end? He fell dead as he was saying mass just at the elevation. False to himself false to his country—false to his God. They were about to give him a statue. Then came John Knox, he whom Dr. Johnson had called "the ruffian of the Reformation;" and certainly a more unmitigated ruffian never existed. One of his principal works was against female Sovereigns. He denounced that as the most hideous thing in the world. He (Mr. O'Connell) hoped that his statue would hold that work in its hands. Did Her Majesty really know of the fact? But he did worse than that. He was the assassin of Cardinal Beaton. He was the principal actor in "the real gunpowder plot," the murder of King Henry Darnley. The learned gentleman went on to prove these assertions by references to letters in the State Paper-office and Tytler's History of Scotland, and continued.—They were really going to give that ruffian a statue. Why, there ought to be another erected to it of Dick Turpin. "Honest" Wesley was the next he would notice—a fellow who changed his religion half a-dozen times, and each time left a memorandum "that his last religion was the most damnable in the world." He absolutely "excommunicated" a lady in South Carolina because she refused to marry him. He (Mr. O'Connell) thought she got off very cheap. Having made several onslaughts of a similar character against Wesley, the hon. member proceeded to abuse the Wesleyan Methodists as a most bigoted but powerless body, with a Pope of their own, rejoicing in the euphonic name of Jabez Bunting; and enumerated the political exertions he had made in their behalf, and the bad return he had received from them. Well, there they were—Wycliffe, Wesley, and John Knox—a pretty trio, just fit to "polka" with Cromwell, Monk, and a certain gentleman in black of whom he had spoken at the last meeting. He should complain more of this selection, but that he thought there would be a house of Parliament very soon which would be free from their presence. Next, Mr. O'Connell attacked the the selection of Queen Elizabeth, which he described as an outrage on civilisation and the sex to which she belonged. A more profligate wretch never existed, or a greater stain on humanity. In proof of that he would merely refer to her letter to Sir A. Paulet, instigating him to that assassination of Mary Queen of Scots which she afterwards effected legally. That letter was extant, and proved his assertion. He hoped these remarks would leave some impression, and rescue England from the disgrace of inflicting such statues on the country. At all events, he had done his duty and would go and vote against every one of those statues. He next briefly alluded to the affairs of Buenos Ayres, and took occasion to denounce Rosas as a "monster," and to say that he would support the Government in any measure which might have the tendency of putting down that person. He next took up the late address of the Protestants, agreed to at Belfast, and signed by Lord Roden, and declared that he had read it with the "greatest pleasure," because it showed that the Protestants had really nothing to complain of. They would no longer domineer over the Catholics, and that was, in truth, their only grievance. They resembled the West Indian slave-owner in England, who declared that there was no liberty in that country, because a man would not be permitted to "larrup his own nigger." He repeated that he was vastly well pleased with it—from its absence of everything like solid ground of complaint, and from its freedom from much of that sectarian and exciting bitterness which formerly exhibited itself in such productions. The Orangemen might re-organise themselves as much as they liked; they might march in procession, too, as often as they pleased; the Catholics cared no longer for these things. He would, therefore, move that it be referred to a committee to see how much of Lord Roden's address might be inserted on their minutes. After various excursions Mr. O'Connell passed his various monster meetings in review, and pronounced that the repeal movement had now become almost irresistible. For the present the great want was more repeal members in Parliament, and he proposed remaining constantly in Dublin until January, for the purpose of attending most closely to the registries. He concluded by calling on them to contribute to the Repeal rent; "a farthing a week, a penny a month, a shilling a-year." The rent for the week was 24*l*. 15*s*. 11*d*.

Castlebar.—The Mayo Repeal demonstration took place on Sunday, the 12th inst. Mr. O'Connell left Killarney on Thursday, and on Sunday arrived at Castlebar, amid the usual cheers and acclamations of the multitude. The day was exceedingly wet, and yet, although the rain poured down in torrents, upwards of 80,000 persons attended in the procession, and remained until the meeting was over. The procession commenced to move from a place called French-hill (a locality designated by that name in consequence of a defeat in that particular spot, in 1798, of the French forces who landed in Ballina) at about 2 o'clock, and arrived at the place of meeting at 4. The rain still continued to pour as if the sluices of heaven were opened, in the midst of which the chair was taken at the place of meeting, in Castlebar, by Mark Blake, Esq., M.P. Various resolutions were proposed and carried, after which Mr. O'Connell addressed the meeting. He briefly alluded to the injustice with which the Irish people were treated, and concluded by avowing his determination to persevere in his struggles for Repeal until the object was accomplished. A petition for a Repeal of the Union was then agreed to, after which the vast assembly separated. A pavilion was erected for the dinner, which was given the same evening; but in consequence of the inclemency of the weather, the persons who attended might as well have been called on to dine in the open air. After the Queen's health was proposed, and that of the royal family, the Chairman proposed in eloquent terms the health of "The Liberator of his country."—Mr. O'Connell said that if it had been an auspicious evening, he would have endeavoured to say something on the topics which then pressed upon his mind, but he would, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, endeavour to go through some of them, in order to leave an impression behind him of what his intentions were, and to show the people of Mayo how those intentions ought to be worked out. His object was to secure the connection with the British Crown. He felt that that connection was placed in extreme jeopardy by the wickedness of the British Minister, by the rancour of Stanley, and the treachery of Graham. He believed it was in such a position, that if they did not shrink from their own intendments, the most evil consequences would happen. It was represented that his object was to injure and destroy that connection, to trample it under foot. But his struggle was to place it on such a footing as that the interests of both should be maintained, and equal justice done to Ireland. He defied any rational man to say that the connection can be long maintained under present circumstances after his death, and when his influence was gone—he had, thank heaven, obtained and possessed such influence over the present generation, or at least that portion of them of his own time of life; but who could answer for the consequences!—who could answer for the rising generation when his voice was heard no more among them? His policy then really was to act as a drag on the revolutionary car; but after his death, he could not promise that it would not run with such a rapidity as to frighten the one country and emancipate the other. He believed the restoration of the Irish Parliament was absolutely essential to a continuance of the connection, for it was hardly worth having without the protection of a domestic legislature. He repeated again that he would submit to it, but he would not preach to the young people of Ireland to do so; he would give them no other advice, but when the control was gone they might act for themselves. Mr. O'Connell then dilated at considerable length on the power of the aristocracy, describing Her Majesty as destitute of all political power, as domineered over by an oligarchy of which Sir R. Peel, whom he called King Peel, was the instrument. He declared that after repealing the Union, his object was to rescue the Crown from its degrading thraldom, and make it the link of connection between the two countries. He concluded by saying that Ireland should be, would be, and must be, a nation. Mr. O'Connell then proposed the Chairman's health.—Mr. R. D. Browne returned thanks. The next toast was "the Archbishop of Tuam." Dr. M'Hale returned thanks in a long speech.

Sligo.—The Repeal demonstration of Sligo took place on the 15th. It presented but few distinctive features to contrast it with the preceding meetings this year. Less numerous than that at Thurles, but more successful than its immediate precursor at Castlebar, it was fortunate in the fineness of the weather and the beauty of its locality. Mr. Martyn Maldeu, ex-Mayor, presided. Mr. O'Connell addressed the meeting at great length, and stated that Earl Spencer, who had only died within a few days back, had left it upon record "that if the people of Ireland in an overwhelming majority declared for Repeal, they should have it." Now, they had declared for it, and should have it. He had made the experiment, and proved their majority: he did so in 1843, and he was then repeating it in 1845, because there were some dolts foolish enough to assert that the agitation had subsided. He had within the last few weeks proved the Irish people again; and it would be necessary to hold but one more monster meeting, and that should take place in the county of Limerick, until after the next session of Parliament, for he wished to see what the English Parliament was disposed to do: and in order to remind them of what they wanted they would send in petition after petition in favour of Repeal. The usual resolutions condemnatory of the Act of Union and in favour of Repeal, were moved and seconded by Mr. Somers, M.P., Mr. Ed. Kelly, Mr. Bernard M'Dermott, the Rev. J. M'Hugh, and other gentlemen. The dinner in the evening was attended by about 300 gentlemen, Mr. Somers, M.P., in the chair, supported, among others, by the Roman Catholic Bishops of Elphin and Killala. Mr. O'Connell made another speech on the usual topics, concluding by assuring his hearers that Repeal was certain. Dr. Browne, Bishop of Elphin, also spoke at great length, declaring that the Irish priesthood were not to be deceived by the Maynooth grant, or to be juggled by the odious Colleges Bill. They were too enlightened to be deceived by the British Treasury, and would never be separated from their people by any pretended boon which the Government could confer.

Limerick.—The Repeal demonstration of the county Limerick, the last monster meeting for the season, took place on the 23d. It was announced as a demonstration in honour of Mr. Smith O'Brien and Repeal. Rathkeale was the place of meeting; and from the most moderate estimate the number present was somewhat under 20,000: the Freeman, however, gives the number at from 80,000 to 100,000. Mr. Ferguson, barrister, took the chair, and the usual resolutions, condemnatory of the Act of Union, were unanimously passed, together with a vote of confidence in Mr. S. O'Brien, who returned thanks at some length. Mr. O'Connell also made a long speech in praise of Mr. O'Brien, and after a speech from Dr. Gray the meeting peaceably dispersed. At the dinner the Rev. D. Synan presided. After the usual toasts, the Chairman proposed the health of Mr. S. O'Brien. He was a proud man for Ireland—a prouder man for Limerick—proudest of all for Rathkeale. He was endeared to the Roman Catholic clergy, for he always spoke well of them, and protected them when calumniated.—Mr. W. S. O'Brien thanked them for the honour, and alluded to the circumstances under which he became their representative: he entered upon a history of his political life, and of his unsuccessful efforts to make the British Parliament take the same view of things that he did. Failing in that, he perceived that from the English Legislature no hope of good government was to be obtained, therefore he became a Repealer; and he was glad to think he had been able to do something to sustain the cause. As regarded all the objects which legitimately belonged to public life it was the dream of his existence—for it alone he lived. The time was not come—he hoped it never might come—when he would be called on to say, that for it he would die. But in pursuing that which he had called a dream, but with no doubt of its realisation, and which those who mocked at Repealers called a phantom, the other interests of the country were not to be neglected. Where were the labours of the Conservative party? He challenged them to show him their fruits. The Whigs were no longer a party—they were merely a few respectable individuals, possessing no force apart from being so, and only considered so by themselves and the people of England. The Repeal members, it was true, did not possess the power of making laws, but they exposed abuses and suggested remedies, with the advantage of having whatever they saw reported, and not misrepresented, as in English papers. He had to complain of those members who, professing to be Repealers, did not attend Conciliation-hall—the virtual Parliament of Ireland: who performed their duties neither in London nor Dublin. He hoped their constituents would remind them of it. Now, at the risk of imprisonment he had told the British Parliament that he considered his time misapplied there, and that he would not be coerced in an attendance which he did not consider for the good of his constituents. He thought that the men who presented themselves at the next election should be prepared to attend Conciliation-hall, or St. Stephens, to track the enemy, as the interests of Ireland required it. He took no credit to himself for putting in his own way the bar of perpetual exclusion from office, though he might have been rewarded had he played "the Whig game," as other men—not his superiors—had done, for during nine years he perceived that the Whigs looked upon Irish questions—not as they affected the interests of Ireland—but as they bore on English faction, and that as the country itself was considered as a mere draw-farm to England, so were its interests regarded as subordinate to the ambition of party. He regretted to see that there were persons of such base hearts and weak heads as to imagine they could suppress Repeal by a petty persecution; but he was not sorry to tell the meeting that certain persons had thought proper to frown on him for his connexion with Repeal. It would be utterly impossible for him to describe the extent of his pity and contempt for them. Many of them were persons whose influence—such as the dignity of justice of the peace—deterred them from avowing their real sentiments and becoming Repealers. The hon. gentleman then eulogised Mr. Lloyd as an exception to that class, and denied all merit in his conversion to Repeal, as well as the statement that he (Mr. O'Brien) intended to stand for Dublin; and continued to say, that he would not raise the question whether or not the British constitution sanctioned an appeal to arms under circumstances of mis-government, as he believed it would not only be questionable in point of morality, but fatal as regarded policy. He knew full well that 19-20ths of the peasantry that day would rather have settled the matter by fighting than by any other means; but defeat would be probably certain, and feeling how much the country had been thrown back from age to age by futile and premature rebellion, he trusted that neither he nor his children should ever live to see another unsuccessful outbreak. Considering that the preponderating majority of landowners and the Protestant population of the north were so far opposed to it, Repeal would lose half its benefits and all its security if carried by force against their wishes. Having insisted on the necessity of union—the inevitable success of Repeal; he proceeded to contend that Protestants would reap equal advantages with the Catholics from that consummation, and concluded by assuring those who were instrumental in obtaining it that posterity would bless them for it hereafter.—Mr. O'Connell returned thanks for his health in connexion with Repeal of the Union; and having expressed his delight at the meeting, launched out into a high flow of eulogy on the character, conduct, and talents of Mr. O'Brien, whom he styled the mainspring of Repeal. Repeal meant the consolidation of the British empire, the abolition of the absentee drain, and the augmentation of the Crown's prerogative. The concentration of the Ministerial power—the first officer of the Crown—has an authority unlimited in its nature. The Minister is everything—the Queen is nothing. The Queen has no actual power; she enjoys trips of pleasure, and matters of that kind that most respected lady may enjoy, but political power she has none. I want, he said, the people of England to know that I am addressing them from this spot. You think I am addressing you, but I am not, and I tell the people of England that the concentration of so much power gives the Crown into the hands of the Ministers. That Minister domineers over the Queen—whoever the majority of the House of Commons chooses to make Minister is the real monarch of the day—he may permit the Queen to have such chambermaids as he pleases, or he may refuse it at his own option. The entire power of the State is in the hands of the British Ministry, and the Crown is a mockery and delusion, instead of being an authority, as it ought to be. "Repeal the Union, and the Ministerial power in Ireland would counterbalance the Ministerial power in England, and the Queen, by giving a balance to one side or the other, would augment her own authority. The Repeal of the Union is a royalist phrase, restoring the prerogatives of the Crown, restrained by Parliamentary authority, but self-acting with a responsible Minister, and with a Parliament to check usurpation, as at the present moment. Repeal was also the cry for Irish happiness. Let not the people of England mind the absurd bullying of their absurd newspapers, which had never dared to refute any of his propositions, though if they convinced him, he promised to abandon Repeal. As yet their only argument had been the soft end of the cudgel. Proceeding in a tone of admonition to warn the meeting against the miseries produced by internal strife at every epoch of Irish history, the learned gentleman went on to repudiate, in strong terms, the idea that he or his party sought for Roman Catholic ascendancy, appealing to Mr. O'Brien as a witness of its absurdity. Mr. O'Brien was a Protestant, but he believed the Pope himself would not have a chance against him for the county. It was said that popular favour was fleeting. He (Mr. O'Connell) had been popular for 45 years; Mr. O'Brien would be popular for a longer period. No! the people of Ireland were true—never did a nation so emphatically deserve the name. Mr. S. O'Brien's career was commencing as his (Mr. O'Connell's) was about to close, and he thanked God he would have such a successor. If, however, he had a shorter time to remain among them than his friend Mr. S. O'Brien, he would endeavour to compensate for the shortness of that time by redoubling his efforts to make Ireland as she ought to be—

"Great, glorious, and free,
First flower of the earth and first gem of the sea."

Mr. W. S. O'Brien, in terms of high praise, proposed the health of the Chairman, which was followed by that of "the Hierarchy and Clergy of Ireland," for which the Roman Catholic Dean Coll returned thanks, and in doing so declared his belief that the clergy were safe guides in politics, and his hope that the priest and people, in every part of Ireland, would be bound together, and that those whom God had joined, no man should attempt to put asunder. It was utterly impossible that the Catholic priests could ever surrender, and he denied that there was any division between them and the people.

Sporting.

NEWMARKET HOUGHTON MEETING.

MONDAY.—Sweeps of 10 sovs each for 3-yr-olds, 7st 7lb; four, 8st 3lb; five and upwards, 8st 8lb. Duke of Bedford's Captain Phœbus, 3 yrs, beat Mr. Howe's Khorassan, 5 yrs, Mr. J. Thompson's Lord Saltoun, 4 yrs, Mr. E. Dyson's Devil-to-Pay, 4 yrs, Mr. Mostyn's Beaumont, 4 yrs. and Mr. W. H. Johnson's Milden, 3 yrs. Won by half a length.—Handicap Sweeps of 25 sovs each, for 3-yr-olds, &c. 9 subs. Mr. Meeson's Fair Charlotte, 4 yrs, 7st 12lb, beat the Duke of Rutland's Paultons, 2 yrs, 7st 5lb, General Grosvenor's Scarlet-runner, 3 yrs, 5st, and 4 others. A dead heat between the two first. The stakes were afterwards divided, and Fair Charlotte walked over.—Cambridgeshire Stakes of 25 sovs each, 10 ft and 5 only if declared, with 100 added. 121 subs, 43 declared. Mr. Greville's Alarm, 3 yrs, 7st 9lb, beat Mr. Ward's Event, 3 yrs, 6st 2lb, Lord Warwick's Yardley, 5 yrs, 8st, and 25 others, who were not placed. Won by a couple of lengths. A fine race, and the pace very fast.—Match, 100, h ft. The Duke of Richmond's Refraction, 8st 7lb, beat the Duke of Bedford's Prologue, 8st 4lb, by half a length.—Match, 50, h ft. Sir J. Hawley's Alamode, 4 yrs, 8st 9lb, beat Mr. Shelley's Hawkesbury, 3 yrs, 8st 2lb, by a length.—Match, 300, h ft. Lord G. Bentinck's Miss Elis, 6st 12lb, beat the Duke of Bedford's Oakley, 9st 4lb, by a head.—Sweeps of 300 sovs each; h ft; 8st 7lb. Lord Glasgow's br f by Retriever, out of Emma, beat Mr. Herbert's b f by Elis, out of Tesane, in a canter.—Match, 200, h ft. Duke of Bedford's Captain Phœbus received from Lord Glasgow's c by Bay Middleton, out of Miss Whip.

TUESDAY.—Fifty Pounds, 2-yr-olds a feather; three, 7st 5lb; four, 8st 9lb; five, 9st 3lb; six and aged, 9st 7lb. Lord G. Bentinck's Clumsy, 3 yrs, beat Lord Albemarle's The Little Vulgar Boy, Mr. Herbert's b c by Venison, out of Pet, Mr. R. J. Shafto's Metal, 3 yrs, and 5 others. Won by a length.—Sweeps of 10 sovs each, for 2 yr-olds; colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 4lb. Lord W. Powlett's c by Montreal, beat Mr. Shelley's Tit-bit, Mr. Mostyn's Sharpshooter, and Mr. Coape's Pawnbroker. Won by a head.—Sweeps of 10 sovs each, 3-yr-olds, 7st 10lb; four, 8st 4lb; five and upwards, 8st 8lb. Winner to be sold for 80 sovs. Colonel Peel's ch g Caen, 5 yrs, beat Mr. Parry's b f Sally Brown, 3 yrs, Mr. G. C. Gill's b g Richard Cricket, 3 yrs, Lord Sandwich's Prairie, 3 yrs, and Mr. Dawson's Kiss-me-quick, 3 yrs. Won by two lengths, and claimed.—Match, 50, h ft, 7st 5lb each. Duke of Bedford's Black Cat beat Sir W. W. Wynn's Anna Bullen by a length.—Match, 100, h ft. Lord G. Bentinck's Terrier, 2 yrs, 8st 7lb, beat Lord Glasgow's f by Velocipede, out of Miss Whip, 2 yrs, 7st 5lb, by three lengths.—Match, 100, h ft, Lord Glasgow's Physalis, 8st, beat Sir W. W. Wynn's Stoker, 7st 11lb, by a neck.—Handicap Plate of 100*l*. for 3-yrs-old and upwards. Lord Stradbroke's Boarding School Miss beat Mr. Whitelock's Fair Rosamond, 4 yrs, and 13 others who were not placed. Won by a length.—The Criterion Stakes of 30 sovs each, 2-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 5lb. 45 subs. Mr. Forth's br c Sting, by Slane (7lbs extra), beat Lord Lonsdale's Joy (2lbs extra), and 8 others. Won by two lengths.—Match, 50, h ft, 8st 4lb each. Mr. Greville's Motilla received from Duke of Bedford's Black Cat.—Match, 100, h ft, 8st 4lb each. Sir W. W. Wynn's Anna Bullen received from Mr Shelly's Blanchie.

WEDNESDAY.—Handicap Plate of 50*l*., for 3-yr-olds and upwards. Sir J. Hawley's Alamode, 4 yrs, 7st 7lb, beat Mr. Wigram's Kesheng, 3 yrs, 6st 9lb (carried 6st 11lb), and 9 others who were not placed. Won cleverly by a length; Queen of the Gipsies a good third, Little Hampton fourth.—Match, 100, h ft. Mr. Payne's Collingwood, 8st 7lb, beat Lord G. Bentinck's Astern, 7st 10lb, by a length.—Subscription Plate of 50*l*., 2-yr-olds, 6st 7lb; three, 8st 10lb. Mr. Shelley's Blackbird, 2 yrs, beat Lord G. Bentinck's Terrier, 2 yrs, Mr. Clifton's Miss Love, 2 yrs, and 4 others who were not placed. Won by a length. Winner claimed.—Sweeps of 10 sovs each, 3-yr-olds, 7st 7lb; four, 8st 2lb; five and upwards, 8st 7lb. 19 subs. Mr. Phillimore's Skeleton 4, yrs, beat Lord Miltown's Colleen Bawn, 3 yrs, Mr. Howe's Khorassan, 3 yrs, Mr. E. Dyson's Devil-to-pay, 4 yrs, and 4 others who were not placed. Won cleverly by a length.—Match, 300, h ft. Lord Stradbroke's Idas, 8st 6lb, beat Mr Irwin's Ould Ireland, 8st.—Match, 150, h ft. Duke of Bedford's Prologue, 7st 8lb, received from Mr Carr's Altered One, 8st 5lb.

THURSDAY.—Sweeps of 10 sovs. each; 2-yr-olds; colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 4lb (5 subs)—Lord George Bentinck's Astern beat Lord Chesterfield's Subscription, Mr. Bouverie's Science, Sir W. W. Wynn's Anna Bullen, and Mr. John King's Needle, by Camel. Won by half a length.—Handicap Sweeps of 15 sovs each, 10 ft, for 2-yr-olds (8 subs)—Mr. Godwin's Dexterous (h b), 8st 10lb, beat Mr. Shelley's Chandelier, 7st 13lb, Lord George Bentinck's Terrier, 8st 10lb, Mr. S. Herbert's c by Venison, out of Pet, 8st 3lb, Sir J. Hawley's Miranda, 8st 1 lb, and Lord Chesterfield's Flash of Lightning, 7st 8lb. Won by a length. The stewards, however, were called upon to have Dexterous examined.—Sweeps of 10 sovs each, 3-yr-olds, 7st 4lb; four, 8st 4lb; five and upwards, 8st 11 lb. (8 subs)—Sir J. Hawley's Alamode, 4 yrs, beat Mr. Mostyn's Beaumont, Lord W. Powlett's Espoir, 4 yrs, and 4 others. Won by a length.—Match, 100, h ft, Mr. Pratt's Secundus, 6st 7lb, beat Colonel Peel's Garry Owen, 8st 7lb, by a length.—Match, 200, h ft, Mr. G. H. Moore's Wolf-dog, 7st 7lb, beat Duke of Bedford's Oakley, 8st 7lb, by two lengths.—Sweeps of 10 sovs each, 2-yr-olds, 7st; 3 yrs, 8st 12lb; fillies, allowed 2lb. (11 subs)—Mr. Shelley's Chandelier, 2 yrs, beat Mr. Drinkald's Ohio, 2 yrs, Lord George Bentinck's Killie Krankie, 2 yrs, and 8 others. Won by a length. Glasgow Stakes of 100 sovs. each, h ft, for 2-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb. (24 subs) Lord George Bentinck's Binnacle, Lord Albemarle's Rodulphus, Lord Exeter's c by Colwick out of Mecca, and 4 others ran. A dead heat between the three first. In the deciding heat the Mecca colt bolted amongst the crowd; Binnacle then took a slight lead, maintained it to the end, and won with the greatest difficulty by a head.—Match, 200, h ft. Sir J. Hawley's Bishop of Romford's Cob, 5 yrs, 9st, beat Mr. Osbaldeston's f by Stockport, 2 yrs, 6 st, in a canter by three lengths.—Subscription Handicap of 50*l*. for 3-yr-olds and upwards. Sir W. Standish's Little Hampton, 4 yrs, beat Lord G. Bentinck's Naworth, aged, Mr. Salvin's Alice Hawthorn, aged, 8st 12lb, and Sir S. Spry's Subduer, 5 yrs, 6st 12lb. A dead heat between the three first. The deciding heat was a splendid race between Naworth and Little Hampton, and won only by a short head. Alice Hawthorn was beaten off. Prince George of Cambridge honoured the course with his presence, and was gratified with a day's sport that has no parallel in the history of the turf; it commenced at 12 o'clock, was made remarkable by two dead heats between three horses, and was not brought to a close until nearly dusk.

Miscellaneous.

Mr. Fortune's Expedition.—The following is an extract of a letter from an officer in Her Majesty's service, dated August 29:—"I have not seen Mr. Fortune since last year I think, but have heard of his having beaten off a piratical junk that attacked the one he was taking his passage in, from Foo-chow-foo further along the coast to the northward. The crew of his junk ran below, and allowed the other crew to commence their robbery and plunder, when Mr. Fortune gave them the contents of his fowling-piece up from below, and sent them all scampering off. So much for Chinese pirates."

Eruption of Mount Hecla.—The Hamburgh Borsenhalle, of the 7th Oct., contains the following communication from Copenhagen, under date of Oct. 4:—"The English journals have already stated that the largest of the Orkney isles was, during a violent storm from the north-west on the night of the 2d ult., covered with fine ashes, resembling ground pumice-stone; and that it was thought they had been driven by the wind from Mount Hecla, in Iceland, as similar appearances had been observed during several years. We now learn that on the same or the following night the crew of a vessel, bound to this port from Reikiavik, observed, whilst about 18 English miles from land, volcanic flames on the southern coast of Iceland. On September 3, two vessels near the Fawe Isles were also covered with ashes. According to letters which have been received here an earthquake occurred on the previous day in the west, north, and east portions of Iceland. More recent intelligence has arrived from the southern part, and it appears that the eruption was a more violent one than any that had taken place there during the last 60 years. The latest accounts are September 15. They confirm the intelligence of a volcanic eruption in the southern part of the island on September 2, the first since the memorable one which occurred 19 years ago. The extent of the fall of sand and ashes is not yet known, but it is ascertained that the populous districts adjacent to the volcano have not been seriously injured, except that the grass plots near the mountains were destroyed."

Shipwreck of a Hull and Hamburgh Steamer.—Intelligence has been received in the city of the shipwreck of the Hull and Hamburgh screw-steamer, Margaret, Captain Rawlinson, accompanied by a great loss of life. From the few particulars that have been brought over, it appears that during the whole of last week the coast was visited by a fearful storm, the wind blowing a continual gale from N. to N.W., and the destruction among the coasting-traders is stated to have been very great. The Margaret left Hamburgh for Hull on the 19th ult., the weather being moderate, when she arrived off Cuxhaven, near the mouth of the Elbe, it was blowing a gale from N.W., but the captain thinking it would not be of any duration, the pilot left the vessel at that port, and she proceeded on her passage, and was last seen from Heligoland, passing through the usual track. Nothing further was heard of her until Sunday last, when the steamer Neptune, on the point of starting with the mails from Norden, learned that the unfortunate steamer had been wrecked off that coast, and that 16 of the passengers and 3 of the crew had perished. From another source it has been ascertained that the Margaret, after leaving Heligoland, could, in consequence of the gale, have only made lee way, and eventually, it is supposed, was driven on a dangerous sand, called the Memmett, near Juist, at the eastern entrance of the river Memm. According to the accounts, she struck before day-break, on the morning of the 22d, and therefore must have been encountering the gale for three days. It appears that the moment she took the shoal the sea, which was running terribly high, swept several persons overboard. The long boat was launched, and attempts made to reach the shore, but owing to its crowded state and the violent surf, it capsized, and every soul in it met with a watery grave. Those who remained on board the vessel, after being exposed to the most severe privation for a number of hours, were saved. The steamer became a complete wreck, but as the tide receded, considerable quantities of her cargo were got out of her hold. Within a few miles of the spot where the Margaret was lost, a ship foundered about the same time, and every soul was drowned. Another vessel, belonging to St. Petersburg, was lost on the previous day on the same sands, and the captain and one of his crew perished. In addition to these disasters, the Hamburgh Mail announces the loss of no fewer than nine other vessels on the Dutch coast during the storm.

BIRTHS—On the 10th ult., at Finsbury-pl., the lady of Dr. J. R. BENNETT, of a daughter—10th ult., at Newhailes, near Edinburgh, the Hon. Mrs. COVENTRY, of a son—10th ult., at Streatham, the wife of the Rev. J. K. NICHOLL, of a son—11th ult., at Turnham-green, the wife of the Rev. R. C. JENKINS, of a son—11th ult., at 17, Gower-street, Bedford-square, the lady of T. W. GREENE, Esq., of a son—11th ult., at the Ranger's House, Blackheath, the Right Honourable Lady HADDO, of a son—21st ult., Lady RIVERS, of a son—21st ult., in Upper Harley-street, Lady AGNETA BEVAN, of a son—23d ult., at Westover, in the Isle of Wight, the lady of the Hon. WILLIAM A'COURT HOLMES, M.P., of a son—24th ult., in Gloucester-terrace, Regent's-park, the Hon. Lady PEARSON, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES—On the 9th ult., at Stratford-upon-Avon, Warwickshire, LEWIS MATHIAS, Esq., eldest son of C. Mathias, Esq., of Lamphey Court, Pembrokeshire, to EMILY CATHERINE, youngest daughter of the late J. Bennet Lawes, Esq., of Rothamsted Park Herts—14th ult., at Trinity Church, Marylebone, GEORGE, son of George Lyall, Esq., M.P., to ELEANOR HARRIET, only child of the Rev. John Manley, rector of Merstham, Surrey—16th ult., at St. John's Episcopal Chapel, Edinburgh, EDWIN WODEHOUSE, Esq., R.A., eldest son of the late Vice-Admiral the Hon. Philip Wodehouse, to CATHERINE, only daughter of the late Captain John Street, R.A.

DEATHS—On the 12th ult., at Ostend, Mr. W. COATES, of Whitechapel, wine-merchant, aged 58—9th ult., DR. JAMES JOHNSON, aged 69, long known in medical literature as the editor of the Medico-Chirurgical Review—14th ult., at Torquay, WILLIAM FOURD HILTON, Esq., of Harbledown, magistrate for the Eastern Division of the county of Kent, aged 36 years—16th ult., at Ely, GEORGE BASEVI, jun., Esq., of Savile-row, Architect—16th ult., at his residence, Baker-street, Reading, the Rev. ROBERT PARDEE JAQUES, senior member of Lincoln College, Oxford, aged 75—16th ult., at Forton, Gosport, Captain PAGET BAYLY, Barrack Master of that station for the last 20 years—16th ult., at Bath, the Right Rev. Dr. BAGGS, principal of the Roman Catholic College at Prior Park, and Vicar Apostolic of the western district—17th ult., at Manor House, Wethersfield, Essex, CHARLOTTE, wife of Thomas White, Esq., and only child of Sir George Henry Smyth, Bart., of Berechurch Hall, in the same county—20th ult., aged 45, the Rev. WILLIAM HARDING, formerly Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford, and vicar of Hockley, Essex—At sea, on the coast of Africa, of fever, Lieut. H. F. ELLIOT, R.N., son of Admiral the Honourable G. Elliot—12th ult., at Highgate, near London, aged 53, JOSEPH FERDINAND TAAFFE, Count of the Empire, Knight of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, great grandson of Nicholas, sixth Viscount, and cousin of Francis, eighth and present Viscount Taaffe in the Peerage of Ireland, Count of the Empire—26th ult., at Brighton, Sir MATTHEW TIERNEY, Bart., Physician to King George IV., aged 69—26th ult., in Portman-square, Lady STRAFFORD, wife of General Lord Strafford, G.C.B.

WANTED A GARDENER, where only one is kept.—A married Man, without family, who has a practical knowledge of the Vinery, Greenhouse, and Kitchen and Flower Gardens. Wages 1*l*. per week, with Cottage, spare Milk, and Vegetables. A searching inquiry will be instituted into character.—Address, by letter only, to X. X. X., Messrs. Barton, 26, Bishopsgate-street Within, London.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.—WANTED, a respectable, well-educated youth, as an OUT-DOOR APPRENTICE, about 14 or 15 years of age, who writes a good hand, and is clever at accounts, by a wholesale Seedsman, whose connexion is very extensive. No premium required, but the services of a willing youth, who will find this such an introduction as is seldom to be met with. He must apply in his own handwriting to J. G. WAITE, Wholesale Seedsman, 4, Eyre-street-hill, Hatton-garden.

SEED TRADE.—J. G. WAITE, 4, Eyre-street-hill, Hatton-garden, Seedsman, is in WANT of a SHOPMAN. A liberal salary given to a competent person.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS HEAD-GARDENER.—A married Man, without incumbrance, who understands his business, including Forcing, Pines, Grapes, Greenhouse, Kitchen and Flower Gardens, &c. Has no objection to the management of Land and Stock. Can be well recommended from the gentleman he has just left, whom he has served 7 years.—Direct to B. A., at Messrs. Fairbairn's, Nurserymen, Clapham.

AS GARDENER.—W. P. AYRES, Brooklands, Kent, can with confidence recommend a young Man to any Nobleman or Gentleman in want of a Gardener; he has served under him in the capacity of Foreman for a considerable period, and would be found fully competent in every department of his profession. He is unmarried and 28 years of age.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 37, who is well acquainted with Early Forcing, Greenhouse Plants, &c. Can have 4½ years' good character from the situation he has just left.—Direct to C. C., 34, Earl-st. West, Edgeware-rd.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, a native of Scotland, aged 34, who perfectly understands his business in all its various branches, including Forcing, Pines, Vines, Greenhouse, Kitchen and Flower Gardens, &c. Can have an excellent character for sobriety, ability, &c.—Direct to A. M. I., 2, Coborn-road, Bow, Middlesex.

AS GARDENER.—P. HALL, Gardener to Sir W. G. Gordon Cumming, of Altyne, Bart., for 6½ years, being about to leave that situation, would be happy to engage with any Nobleman or Gentleman, in the same capacity. P. H. feels competent to undertake the management of Pleasure-Grounds, Kitchen and Flower-Gardens, Stove, Greenhouse and Conservatory, Vinery, Peach-house, and Fruit Culture in general. The most satisfactory testimonials of character and abilities will be given by his present and former employers, both in England and Scotland, if required. No objection to any part of the United Kingdom. P. H. is 38 years of age, is married, and has one child.—Direct to P. HALL, Altyne Gardens, by Forres, N.B.

AS GARDENER.—A Man who perfectly understands his business in all its branches, has had long experience in laying out New and improving Old Gardens, and also in growing Flowers, Fruits, and Vegetables for Exhibition. Can have an excellent character of two years.—Direct to G. L., 1, Norfolk-place, Coach and Horses-lane, Newington-green.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 29, who perfectly understands his profession in all its branches, having been for the last 11 years in some of the most extensive places both in Scotland and England, from all of which satisfactory references may be obtained.—Direct to D. R. Q., Post-office, Turnham-green, Middlesex.

AS GARDENER, or GARDENER and BAILIFF.—A middle-aged married Man, without incumbrance, who has a thorough knowledge of his business in all its various branches, and has had long practice in the Forcing department; also in Laying out Ground-work, the Management of Plantations, and Farm and Dairy Stock. His Wife can take charge of Dairy and Poultry, if required. Can have an unexceptionable character from the gentlemen he has just left.—Direct to E. E., 4, North-place, Dalston, Hackney.

TO NURSERYMEN AND MARKET-GARDENERS.

A YOUNG MAN, 19 years of age, whose friends are highly respectable, wishes to place himself with a Nurseryman or Market-gardener, to acquire a knowledge of the business. He knows something of Farming, and will prefer a Situation where there is a prospect of being taken in as a Partner on suitable terms.—Direct to P. P., Mr. Duncan's, 11, Featherstone-buildings, Holborn, London.

A FARMER, in the prime of life, about to leave his Farm in one of the best farmed counties in the South of Scotland, owing to his possessing inadequate means to cultivate it, wishes to be employed in the management of another man's property. His character as to integrity and capacity for business may be easily ascertained, as he is well known in the district where he Farms. The Advertiser entertains no objection to a situation in the Colonies, but an inferior one, either at home or abroad, will not be accepted.—Apply for address at the Office of this Paper.

AS FARM BAILIFF.—A man, aged 35, who has had most extensive experience in stock and arable farming in the best cultivated districts of Scotland, and who is thoroughly acquainted with the most approved system of rotation cropping, as well as the management and selling of all sorts of stock. The most unexceptionable references will be given as to character and general qualifications. A situation in England will be preferred.—Direct to ADAM YOUNG, White Bank Lee, Gallashiels, N. B.

TO NOBLEMEN AND GENTLEMEN.

AS FARM-BAILIFF, in any county in England.—A young Man, who would be able to give respectable references, and produce testimonials as to character and capabilities, &c.—Direct to A. B., Post-office, Otley, Yorkshire.

AS STEWARD OR BAILIFF.—A sober active Man, aged 36, who practically understands the Kentish system of Farming generally, and is a good accountant. Reference to a Nobleman his last employer.—Direct to Y. Z., Post-office, Edenbridge, Kent.

AS CLERK, OR SEEDSMAN AND CLERK.—JAMES TEMPLEMAN, who has filled the situation of Clerk in Messrs. Veitch and Son's establishment for the last 5 years, wishes to obtain a situation as above. He will be disengaged at Christmas next.—For particulars, apply to J. T., at Messrs. Veitch & Son's Nursery, Exeter. Messrs. V. & S. will answer any inquiries, and give satisfactory testimonials as to character and ability.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1845.

LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITIES.—The following are Specimens of the rates of Premium charged by the AUSTRALASIAN, COLONIAL and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE and ANNUITY COMPANY.

Age	20	30	40	50
Annual Premium, with Profits ..	£1 17 1	£2 8 2	£3 4 0	£4 11 8
Without ditto ..	£1 10 3	£2 0 7	£2 15 3	£4 1 8

Peculiar facilities are afforded for the Assurance of the lives of persons proceeding to or residing in Australasia and the East Indies.

Immediate and deferred Annuities are granted by the Company, on very favourable terms, and it is a peculiar feature in its constitution, that Annuitants participate in the profits.

Directors.

Edward Barnard, Esq., F.R.S. | Gideon Colquhoun, Esq.
Robert Brooks, Esq. | C. E. Mangles, Esq.
Henry Buckle, Esq. | Richard Onslow, Esq.
John Henry Capper, Esq. | William Walker, Esq.

Solicitors—Messrs. Maples, Pearse, Stevens, and Co.
Bankers—The Union Bank of London.
Physician—Dr. Fraser, 62, Guildford-street, Russell-square.
Actuary and Secretary—Edward Ryley, Esq.

For Prospectuses and other particulars, apply at the Offices, No. 126, Bishopsgate-street, corner of Cornhill.

LONDON SEWAGE COMPANY.
(Provisionally registered.)
Capital 1,500,000*l.*, in 37,500 Shares of 40*l.* each.
Deposit, 2*l.* 4*s.* per Share.

Bankers.—Messrs. Williams, Deacon, and Co, Birchin-lane.

Engineers.

Thomas Wicksteed, Esq., Engineer to the East London, the Grand Junction, the Kent, the Southwark, and Vauxhall Water Works in London, and to the Hull and Wolverhampton Water Works.

Architects and Surveyors.

Jno. Blyth, Esq., Aldersgate-street; R. C. Carpenter, Esq., Guildford-street.

Consulting Chemist.

Arthur Aikin, Esq., F.R.S., F.G.S., &c., Lecturer on Chemistry at Guy's Hospital, and Vice-President of the London Chemical Society.

Solicitors.—Messrs. Wood and Blake, 8, Falcon-street, City.

This Company, which is possessed of a practicable plan, ready to be deposited, in conformity with the standing orders of Parliament, by the 30th Nov., for intercepting every sewer that discharges itself into the Thames, proposes to carry out the contents into the country for agricultural purposes.

Thus the pollution of the water of the Thames being prevented, an improved drainage of the metropolis will be secured, whilst the sewage, applied to agriculture, will yield a very ample return on the capital which is required.

Applications for Prospectuses or for Shares to be addressed in the usual form. ANDREW MARTIN, Secretary.
4, New London-street, City, Oct. 30, 1845.

METROPOLITAN SEWAGE MANURE COMPANY.—(Provisionally Registered.)—Estimated Capital for the Metropolis, 1,500,000*l.* Capital to be first raised 300,000*l.*, in 15,000 shares of 20*l.* each. Deposit, 1*l.* per Share.

Provisional Committee.

The Hon. Wm. Cowper, M.P., 39, South-street.
William Ayrton, Esq., F.R.S., 39, Dorset-square.
Edward Wm. Cox, Esq., 1, Torrington-square.
Thomas George Everill, Esq., 26, New Broad-street, and Birmingham.
H. P. Fuller, Esq., 112, Piccadilly.
W. A. Guy, Esq., M.D., Professor of King's College, 15, Bloomsbury-square.
Rev. Frank Hewson, Southall, Middlesex.
Thomas Hodgkin, Esq., M.D., 9, Brook-street, Hanover-square.
Charles Jopling, Esq., 4, Pelham-crescent, Brompton.
John Martin, Esq., K.L., 30, Allsop-terrace, New-road.
James Edward Mathew, Esq., Church Cottage, De Beauvoir-square.
F. G. P. Neison, Esq., 25, Pall-mall.
G. H. Pinckard, Esq., 78, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury-square.
The Hon. Capt. Plunket, R.N., Travellers' Club, Pall-mall.
Thomas Ottrey Rayner, Esq., M.D., F.S.A., St. Matthew's-place, Hackney.
James Reid, Esq., M.D., 10, Bloomsbury-square.
William Shaw, Esq., 346, Strand.
Thomas Wilmott, Esq., Isleworth.

Projector.—John Martin, Esq., K.L., 30, Allsop-terrace.

Consulting Agricultural Chemist.

Professor Brande, F.R.S., Royal Mint, Tower.

Consulting Agricultural Engineer.

James Smith, Esq., of Deanston, 13, Queen-square, Westminster.
Engineer.—Wm. C. Mylne, Esq., F.R.S., New River Head.
Architect.—Charles Fowler, Esq., 1, Gordon-square.
Solicitors.—Messrs. Bailey, Shaw, & Smith, 5, Berners-street.

Secretary.

John James Moore, Esq., 3, Queen-square, Bloomsbury.

The object of this Company is to supply (at a quarter of the cost of stable or farm-yard manure) the sewage water of the metropolis to the surrounding country as manure, by mechanical means, similar to those employed by the water companies.

A careful and moderate calculation has been made of the annual outlay and income, from which it can confidently be stated that the undertaking will realise a net profit of at least 15 per cent.

No allotment of shares will be made until after the 30th of November, when the plans will have been deposited, and the notices of the application to Parliament given.

The act of incorporation will limit the responsibility of the shareholders to the amount of their shares.

Applications for shares to be made in the usual form, addressed to the Provisional Committee of the Metropolitan Sewage Manure Company, and also for Prospectuses and pamphlets, containing full particulars, at Messrs. Bailey, Shaw, and Smith's, 5, Berners-street.

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, WATCHMAKERS, 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, request the attention of purchasers to their stock of London-made PATENT LEVER WATCHES, which are manufactured by themselves in their own house. In silver cases, with the detached escapement and jewelled, the prices are four guineas and a half, six, and eight guineas each; or in gold cases, 10, 12, 14, and 16 guineas each. The very large stock offered for selection includes every description, enabling customers to select that which is more particularly adapted to their own use.

News of the Week.

THE prospect of a change in the Corn-laws in consequence of the failure of the potato-crop, to which we alluded briefly in our last, is the absorbing topic of the day. Cabinet Councils have been held with unusual frequency, but at present nothing of an authentic character has transpired on the result of their deliberations. Rumour of course is still busy on the subject, and the impression gains ground that Government considers legislative interference necessary, and are more likely to convoke Parliament for an early day than to open the ports on their own responsibility. In the meantime, meetings have been held in most of the commercial towns of the country, at which it has been resolved to petition Government for an immediate opening of the ports. In Ireland also active measures, in which men of every shade of political opinion have taken part, have been adopted in order to guard against the famine with which that country is threatened. It is a marking feature of the resolutions adopted at the Irish meetings, that they unanimously disclaim all intention of seeking charitable assistance from the State, and simply impress upon Government the expediency of providing the people with local employment in the drainage of lands, the embankment of rivers, and other public works, and of thus making the natural resources of the country available in the present emergency.

In France the prospect of a change in the English Corn Laws engages the attention of the whole Paris press, which show by their remarks the importance attached to the proposed change by foreign politicians. We have given in another column extracts from the leading journals on this subject, from which it will be seen that they consider it impossible any longer to avert the change. They regard the question as already decided in the public mind, and conclude that if the Government propose only a temporary measure to meet the present crisis, it is not probable that the Corn Laws, once suspended, can ever be re-established.—The news from Algeria is still of a formidable character. Abd-el-Kader, who was represented by the last advices as flying before the French troops, is actively engaged in raising the native population, and still with unwearied energy eludes the regular forces of France at the moment when they consider him within their power.—The Bombay mail of the 1st October has arrived this week, having been preceded by two days by the extraordinary express brought by Mr. Waghorn, from Alexandria, via Trieste, to test the superiority of the route through Germany over that of France. The Governor-General left Calcutta on the 22d September for the upper provinces, to assume the command of the army of 38,000 men assembled on the frontier of the Punjaub. There is little doubt that a war is imminent, and that some severe fighting may be anticipated, for the Sikh soldiers are not likely to submit to British intervention, unless conquered in the field. From Scinde, we learn that the province continues pacific, and that the recent sickness has almost disappeared. The cholera, which has ravaged so many parts of India, is now raging at Cabul and Candahar with almost unprecedented violence.—From Constantinople, we learn that the French Ambassador has not succeeded in his extraordinary demands, as the last accounts had led us to believe. The Porte has assumed a tone of dignity and moderation in this quarrel, which contrasts favourably with the pretensions of France, and gives a very satisfactory impression of the increasing enlightenment of Turkish diplomacy.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal family continue at Windsor Castle, and are quite well. During the week, the Queen has taken her usual airings in the pony phaeton, and on foot. Prince Albert on Tuesday came to town, and transacted business at the office of the Duchy of Cornwall. It is announced that the visits of her Majesty and the Prince to the Duke of Norfolk and other members of the nobility, arranged to have taken place during the present season, are indefinitely postponed. Lord Charles Wellesley (Clerk Marshal) has succeeded Colonel the Hon. Charles Grey as equerry in waiting; Lady Portman has succeeded the Countess of Mount Edgecumbe as the lady in waiting; Lord Byron has succeeded the Earl of Hardwicke as the lord in waiting; Major-General Sir F. Stovin has succeeded Captain the Hon. Nelson Hood as the groom in waiting to her Majesty; and Colonel Wylde has succeeded Colonel Bouverie as equerry in waiting on Prince Albert.

Cabinet Councils.—A Cabinet Council was held on Saturday afternoon at the residence of Sir Robert Peel. The Ministers present were Sir R. Peel, the Duke of Wellington, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Wharncliffe, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Stanley, Sir J. Graham, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Earl of Haddington, the Earl of Lincoln, and the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert. The Council sat four hours and a half.—Another Cabinet Council was held on Thursday at the residence of Sir R. Peel. All the Ministers were present except Lord G. Somerset. The Council sat four hours.

Parliamentary Movements.—The election for North Warwickshire took place on Wednesday, when Lord Brooke was returned without opposition.—The nomination at Windsor will take place this day, and the polling will commence on Monday.—The rumour of the probable elevation of Sir Thomas Wilde (the Whig representative of Worcester), to the House of Lords is again in circulation, and a successor of similar principles is talked of in the person of Mr. Edward Holland, of Dumbleton, Gloucestershire.—The Irish papers state that Mr. Serjeant Stock has resigned the representation of Cashel, being about to be "advanced in his profession," and that Sir W. Chatterton, Bart., will come forward as a candidate for Cork on the Whig and Anti-Repeal interest.

Death of Lord Montagu.—We have to announce the death of this peer, which took place on Thursday week, in Hamilton-place. Lord Montagu, of Boughton, in the county of Northampton, was born in 1776, and married the daughter of the first Lord Douglas, by whom he leaves four daughters. His Lordship was Lord Lieutenant of Selkirkshire, and keeper of Geddington Chase. He was the second son of the third Duke of Buccleugh, by the only surviving child of the first Duke of Montagu. The title, in the absence of a male heir, becomes extinct, and the bulk of the property falls into the possession of the Duke of Buccleugh.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The question of the retirement of Marshal Soult from the Cabinet being now set at rest by the gallant Marshal's acceptance of the Presidency of the Council without any other office, the papers appear to be at a loss how to entertain their readers at this dull season. The Moniteur of Monday contains a series of despatches from the French Generals commanding in Algeria, from which it appears that the indomitable Emir was as active, energetic, and ubiquitous as at any former period of his career. With a formidable body of swift cavalry he is able to set at defiance the regular troops opposed to him, and to raise the population in nearly every direction, contriving when menaced by a superior force of the French to effect in every instance a safe and brilliant retreat. Thus Abd-el-Kader is truly represented in the despatches of the French officers as flying before them, while in reality his great object is gained by causing to them immense loss, not merely by the yatagan, but by disease. The Debats, in commenting upon these despatches, says that it does not appear to be Abd-el-Kader's intention to attempt the hopeless task of reconquering Algiers, or even to make a stand in the province of Oran, but to carry away with him into Morocco the greatest possible number of tribes, in order to form for himself a new state and new army. It says that there are large tracts of uncultivated land ready to receive them on the two banks of the Malonia, in the neighbourhood of Taza, and the Rif mountains, and that it will very soon be necessary for the French troops to penetrate into that district.—The successor of Marshal Soult, as Minister of War, has not yet been definitively appointed, and there appears to be considerable difficulty in making the selection. It is generally believed, that General Saint Yon has accepted the office, but the ministerial papers are silent on the subject. In the meantime Marshal Soult has quitted the hotel of the Ministry of War.—The Débats (the organ of the Government) publishes a leading article on the subject of the English Corn Laws, in which it says—

"The great change which must so profoundly modify the economical constitution of Great Britain, has already taken place in the public mind: and it is for that reason that apparently so few efforts have been necessary to effect its accomplishment by legislative means. Sir Robert Peel may, perhaps, only propose temporary measures, but it is not probable that, in the present state of public opinion, the Corn-laws once suspended can ever be resuscitated."

The Constitutionnel (the organ of M. Thiers) regards a change in the legislation on the Corn-laws in England as inevitable. "The Times," says that paper—

"Thinks that Sir R. Peel will seize with eagerness the occasion which presents itself for indirectly giving the coup de grace to that legislation. As to the present system of the sliding scale its destiny appears to the Times irrevocably sealed, and it resigns itself, although with regret, to its definitive fall. Not so with the high aristocracy, which seems determined to engage in a last struggle in favour of this legislation, which is the source at once of its wealth and its influence."

The Presse (the organ of Count Molé), dwells with great solicitude on the impending opening of the English ports for the admission of foreign grain.

It calls upon the Government to adopt immediate measures in order to prevent foreign exportation from withdrawing the grain that France requires for her own consumption; and professes to know that there are already a number of English commercial agents at Paris, organising a vast system of exportation that may promptly attain the object of the extreme measure about to be adopted in England.

The Reforme observes that—

"Whilst the Tory journals in England recommend that the corn laws should be suspended in consequence of the alarming rise in the price of provisions in Ireland, and whilst the Governments of Holland and Belgium have adopted measures of precaution to prevent a similar calamity in those countries, France alone suffers the winter season to approach without appearing to perceive the consequences which are inevitable. The Minister of Commerce still waits the reply to the questions addressed by him to the agricultural committees. This is the only measure of precaution yet adopted by the French Government."

"The Times," says the Courrier Francais,

"Announces that a decision is about to be come to relative to the corn laws. The announcement appears to have caused a great sensation upon the London markets, business was suspended, and it would appear is likely to remain so until the resolve of the Cabinet becomes known. As the English journals remark, it would appear that Sir R. Peel has been obliged to yield to circumstances. The state of the European markets renders the suspension of the corn laws unavoidable. But when once that law shall have been abolished, can it be ever re-established? That is the great question. To judge from the uneasiness of the old Tory party, and the hopes of the partisans of commercial liberty, it would seem that the solution of this question is no longer doubtful. It was at first feared that a schism might arise between the Whigs and Radicals, and that the Whigs might return to a fixed duty, but the language of the press must have re-assured the free-traders."

The Princess of Joinville was on Wednesday morning last safely delivered of a Prince, who has received the title of Duke of Penthievre. — Lieutenant Waghorn's successful express with the last India mail is viewed with much jealousy by most of the journals. Some, unwilling to give him full credit for his achievement, urge that he had the start of the usual packet to Malta and Marseilles by above 24 hours, and that the weight of the despatches, &c., which he carried must have been ten times less than what is brought by the ordinary conveyance. All, however, view the subject as a serious one which is deserving the prompt attention of the Government, and not without reason, for the second edition of Galignani's Messenger of Saturday copied from the Times of Friday (received in Paris by special express) the contents of the Indian mail of the 1st of October, thus actually publishing the Indian news in Paris —brought by Lieut. Waghorn's express via Trieste and London—many hours before the arrival of the mail, even by special courier, from Marseilles!—The Patrie says:—"The explanations of M. de Marcillac, prefect of the Dordogne, on the subject of the publication of Marshal Bugeaud's letter, have been found satisfactory, as we learn that M. de Marcillac has returned to his post."—It appears that Paris has not enjoyed during many years a more delightful month of October than that just closed. Private letters describe the weather as the finest that can be imagined, and most favourable for the late vintages.

Spain.—We have accounts from Madrid of the 28th ult., but they possess little interest, being chiefly occupied with endless speculations on the Queen's marriage. The Government has determined that the Cortes shall assemble on the 15th December. Malaga, which has been for some months under martial law, has been placed once more under the jurisdiction of the civil authorities. Sir John Walmesley and Mr. George Stephenson have arrived at Santander, for the purpose of tracing out a railway to the Canal of Castille, and Valladolid to Madrid.

Germany.—The first synod of the German Catholics held its first sitting at Berlin on the 24th of October. The representatives of the provinces of Pomerania, Brandenburgh, and Prussian Saxony, were present. The Berlin Gazette of the same day says:—"The general Synod of the Free Scotch Church has addressed a letter to the German Catholics of Berlin, expressing its sympathy with them. While blaming their profession of faith as too vague, it offers them its aid and succour. It is not known whether the German Catholics will accept this offer of pecuniary assistance, as they did a similar proposal from the Anglican Church." The Augsburgh Gazette announces that a reform movement is beginning to manifest itself amongst the Popish clergy of Baden. The priests of the chapter of Gusingen have, in a memorial to the Archbishop of Friburg, requested him to modify the system of education for young priests according to the principles of M. Von Wessemberg, who wishes more particularly to see scholastic theology abolished, synods instituted, the celibacy of the priesthood suppressed, and the general introduction of the vernacular language into the Church service. The clergy of Heidelberg have addressed the same prelate in favour of the establishment of synods.—The last representative of the house of Lorraine Guise, a lateral branch of the house of Hapsburgh, the Duchess of Lorraine, died at Vienna on the 19th. She was the widow, on a second marriage, of the Prince of Lambesc, who played a part in the first few years of the French revolution. The Duchess of Lorraine had taken part in the education of the Archduchess Maria Louisa, and been commissioned by the Emperor Francis to prepare that Princess for her marriage with Napoleon.

Italy and Malta.—Letters from Rome of the 18th ult. state that the revolutionists do not appear to have as yet relinquished their projects, although the occurrences at Rimini had rendered them more cautious. They state that an armed ship made its appearance on the 12th ult., after sunset, at the entrance of the Tronto, which forms the boundary of the Roman states and kingdom of Naples. The ship came so near to the entrance that the men on its deck could be seen. Two guns were fired, probably as signals, but no reply having been returned from the shore, the ship retired before day light. It is believed that she sailed in the direction of Corfu, whence it had come. Troops had been marched from Ascoli in the event of a landing taking place. It is also said that on the coast, below Fermo, near San Benedetto and Ascoli, a number of the malcontents have attempted a landing in two well-armed ships, but that the resistance of the numerous posts on the coast has frustrated their enterprise.—Letters from Malta of the 27th state that the Locust steamer had arrived from Naples with intelligence that her Majesty's Minister has caused the quarantine imposed to be reduced to one of observation (7 days), in consequence of the sickness on board the Eclair; an evident excuse, as the royal order was on account of two alleged cases of yellow fever at Corfu. There is no doubt that the measure is a political act carried into effect to prevent the landing in the Neapolitan dominions of persons engaged in insurrectionary schemes.

Holland.—The States General were opened on the 20th ult. by the King in person. The speech gave a favourable account of the state and prospects of the country. On the 30th, the Second Chamber adopted all the paragraphs of the address in answer to the speech from the throne; after which the whole was agreed to by a majority of 40 to 11.

Sweden and Norway.—Letters from Stockholm of the 24th ult. state that deplorable accounts of the results of the harvests have been received there. The provinces of Upland, Westmanland, part of Sodermanland, East Gothland and Calmarsleen, all Gothland, and Ocland, have suffered a total failure, and these are the very provinces which used to export corn, but cannot now, not having sufficient for their own consumption. In consequence of this state of things, the price of barley and potatoes has risen. It is expected that the Government will follow up the prohibition to export potatoes. Norway is indeed free from the potato disease, nevertheless potatoes are already scarce, because such great quantities have been purchased for foreign countries by speculators.

Turkey.—Previous to the departure of the French steamer, on the 8th ult., it had been generally understood, from the representations of the French party at Constantinople, that M. de Bourqueney had gained a complete triumph, and that the Porte had conceded all his demands. But this version of the affair has proved to be wholly incorrect, and both the questions at issue have been irrevocably set at rest by a few simple facts. It appears that the subjects of the French Government, ecclesiastical or otherwise, spontaneously withdrew, on the first hint of danger, from the Lebanon. The affair of the Druse chief also has terminated in a manner which, if possible, reflects still less honour upon French diplomacy. The trial of the chief for the alleged murder of Father Charles, it appears, has already taken place, and there can be no doubt that as far as his accusers are concerned, it was fair even to a fault. Not a single Druse was admitted as judge or witness, and on the other side the tribunal was partly composed of the Maronite Caimacam and Moukatadgies. Three Maronite priests, and more than 50 laymen gave their evidence in favour of the accused, and the result of the proceedings proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that he was at the time in question several leagues' distance from the spot where the French priest was slain. He was consequently acquitted by the unanimous verdict of his judges; and in the opinion of everybody at Beyrout, with the exception of the French Consul, who continued to protest on the subject, they could not possibly have come to any other decision. After the acquittal of the Druse chief was made known, M. de Bourqueney addressed a third note to the Porte, in which he required that Abou Neked be again made a prisoner, brought to Constantinople, and tried a second time; and threatened that should not this demand be complied with, he will demand his passports. It is probable that the reply of the Porte will be in the affirmative on this point, as by Turkish law an accuser has a right to appeal from local tribunals to the supreme council, and it is not unlikely that this demand may be granted, though the case falls rather under the cognizance of international usage than of Turkish law. The position of the French Ambassador is a very false one, and not likely to add to the reputation of French civilisation or diplomacy.

India and China.—By Lieut. Waghorn's express from Alexandria, by the Trieste route, we have accounts from Bombay of the 1st of Oct., and the regular mail has since arrived with more ample details. Tranquillity generally prevails throughout India, but an impression appears to be gaining ground that it will not be of very long continuance, and that, ere the lapse of many weeks, our army will have entered the Punjaub. This belief is general at Lahore, both among the inhabitants and the troops, and the latter have agreed among themselves that it will be advisable to defer any further demands upon the Government, either for gratuities or increase of pay, until they shall have beaten the English! Sir Henry Hardinge was expected to arrive at Agra about the 20th October. He has bought a house at Simla, from which the inference may be drawn that he expects to remain for some time on the frontier. On his arrival he will assume the command of an army of 32,000 infantry, 6000 cavalry, and 140 pieces of artillery. In the Punjaub itself nothing has occurred of any particular moment, if we except the absconding of the Prime Minister with the customary presents made to the Rajah on his birthday, but which the Wuzeer, instead of paying into the treasury as usual had walked off with. From Scinde, which continues tranquil, we have complaints of the scarcity and dearness of provisions, and large quantities of grain had been imported into Scinde from the side of India. From Cabul we have accounts of plague and pestilence, earthquakes and inundations. The mortality from cholera had reached such a height that Dost Mahomed, with his whole Court, went to the chief mosque to attend the prayers offered up for deliverance. Nearly all the prisoners in Cabul were released, numerous bullocks and other animals killed, and the flesh bestowed in charity—as acts of propitiation. On the 3d August a violent earthquake occurred at Cabul, the shocks continuing with slight intermissions for upwards of an hour. From Candahar, the capital of Western Affghanistan, news had been received of a great inundation of the Urglonda river, by which a considerable loss of life and property had occurred, and cholera appeared a day or two after to add to the horror of the scene. The news from China comes down to the 15th July, but adds nothing to our previous advices.

City.

Consols for money closed at 95¾, and for the account 95⅞. Exchequer bills 25s. to 27s. p.m.; Bank Stock 203 to 204; Three per Cents. Reduced, 94¼; Three-and-Quarter per Cents. 96½ to ¾; India Stock, 259—The following important notice was issued on Thursday by the directors of the Bank of England:—"Notice: The minimum rate of interest on bills discounted at the Bank of England, not having more than 95 days to run, is £3½ per cent. November 6, 1845." By this notice the Bank of England have shown themselves prompt in taking advantage of the growing demand for money, and this new increase in the rate of discount will no doubt give a check to any revival of the speculative mania. Indeed, says the Times, it is by no means certain that it will be their last move, and many experienced persons who are carefully watching the aspect of monetary affairs are predicting that a further change will occur before many weeks elapse.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK.

TUESDAY—BANKRUPTS—J. Reding and W. N. Judd, Horsecourt, Ludgate-hill, Printers—E. Speller, Berners'-street, Oxford-street, Tea dealer—W. Ashcroft, sen., Bere street, Butcher-row, Ratcliffe, Cooper—J. Littlewood, New Bond-street, Hosier—G. Straight, Skinner-street, Snow-hill, Dealer—J. Gadd, High-street, Camden town, Baker—J. Sproat, Chatham, Linendraper—E. Turner, Princes-street, Soho, Chemist—J. Whitaway, Chudleigh, Devonshire, Miller—T. B. Vaughan, Poulton cum Spittal, Cheshire, Farmer—G. Greenstock, Weston-super-Mare, Somersetshire, Ironmonger.

FRIDAY—BANKRUPTS—C. Draper, Bishopsgate-street, Victualler—J. Elliott, Pavement, Finsbury, Surgeon—W. Hay and J. A. Tittersell, London-road, Surrey, Oil and Colourmen—M. Davis, Paternoster-row, Pawnbroker—S. M. Levi, Leadenhall-street, City, Navy Agent—H. Cunningham, Strand, Bookseller—W. Harding, sen., Johnson-street, Westminster, Master—C. Norman, Cumberland Mews, Edgeware-road, Coach builder—R. Pearson, Chorley, Lancaster, Grocer—J. Wright, Brinscall Hall, Wheelton, Lancashire, Calico Printer—W. H. Lyon, Liverpool, Merchant—J. Gaines, Bridgend, Gloucestershire, Dyer—H. Lisfrot, Wrexham, Bootmaker—E. Meredith, Liverpool, Linendraper—S. Rhodes, Bradford, Yorkshire, Worsted Spinner.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Race of the two Indian Mails.—The greatest race the world ever saw came off last week just as our Paper was preparing to go to press. This race was nothing less than a journey from Bombay to London, undertaken to prove whether the route through Germany or that through France would prove the shortest course for the Indian mails. The abettors and originators of the race were the Austrian and French Governments; the latter with its long-organised and highly-perfected system of conveyance at its disposal, the Austrian Government with no other reliance than on the intrepid and enterprising Lieut. Waghorn, whose name history will associate with the opening and improvement of the communications with India. Bombay was the place of departure, and London that of arrival. From Bombay to Alexandria both were in juxtaposition, their speed being regulated by circumstances beyond their control. The true start was from Alexandria, Mr. Waghorn taking his course from that port to Trieste, and the carriers of the French mail pursuing their usual route to Marseilles. One proceeded through Germany to Ostend, the other through France to Calais, thence bending their course both to Dover, and by railroad to London. In this extraordinary race Mr. Waghorn was completely successful. It appears from the published details that the Company's steamer Semiramis arrived at Suez with the Bombay mail on the morning of the 19th, and Mr. Waghorn received a private India despatch from Suez by express courier in the remarkably short space of 21 hours. Mr. Waghorn started for Trieste at 10 minutes past 11, A.M., on the 20th ult., in a steamer placed at his disposal by the Austrian Government. He arrived at Trieste on the 27th, and started instantly for London, arriving at the Times office at ½ past 4 on the morning of Friday last the 31st ult. He thus performed the entire distance between Alexandria and London in nine days seven hours, bringing accounts from Bombay in 29 days and a half. We understand that had not the Austrian steamer been made too deep with coals, which much retarded her speed, the voyage would have been at least 15 hours shorter. The journey from Trieste consumed only 99 hours and three-quarters. Mr. Waghorn on his passage passing through Niederndorf, Innspruck, Kempten, Meiningen, Stutgard, Cologne, Ostend, and Dover. The mail to be conveyed through France did not reach Alexandria from Suez so soon as Mr. Waghorn's despatch, indeed it could not be expected that a heavy mail of 60 or 70 boxes could be conveyed across the desert in as short a time as a single despatch. The Iberia steamer which took this mail to Marseilles, did not start till the morning of the 22d, 48 hours later than Mr. Waghorn. The result, therefore, of the race would seem to be that the route viâ Trieste is the shorter of the two by rather more than 14 hours, that being the time which remains after deducting the 48 hours' start which Mr. Waghorn had over the Iberia. By this result Mr. Waghorn has placed beyond a doubt the possibility of effecting a shorter route for overland communication than that at present carried on through France. Temporary obstacles may prevent the service being performed with certainty throughout the year, but when these shall have been removed, and the advantages of railways in Germany been properly secured, there is every reason to expect that even further advances may yet be made in shortening the period occupied in the transmission of the despatches. It is at least established that the route can be accomplished in a shorter time than formerly, and it is something to know that if the necessity should arise, we can be independent of our irritable neighbours on the other side of the channel.

The Eclair Steam-ship.—The officers and crew of the unfortunate Eclair were gratified on Friday by the announcement that they are once more permitted to have free intercourse with the shore. The yellow flag was on that morning hauled down on board the Eclair and the several hulks appropriated for her sick and convalescent. Several of the officers have already availed themselves of their pratique, and been visiting their friends. It is expected that the Eclair will be paid off immediately. There are still several on her sick list suffering from the effects of the fever, but all who are unable to be paid off will be sent to the Hospital.

The Royal Academy.—On Monday, a General Assembly of Academicians was held in Trafalgar-square, when Mr. Alfred Elmore, Mr. Sidney Cooper, and Mr. W. P. Frith, were elected Associates of that institution.

City of London School.—Mr. David Salomons, the late Sheriff, who was recently excluded from the aldermanic gown of Portsoken, on account of his being a Jew, has presented the City of London School with 1,666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, for the purpose of establishing scholarships of 50*l.* a year for ever.

The Corporation and the City Hospitals.—At the last Court of Common Council, the Lord Mayor reported that he had convened a meeting of the Governors of the different Hospitals at Guildhall, but very few attended; and that Bridewell and St. Thomas's Hospitals were disposed to join with Christ's Hospital in resisting his authority. It was also stated that the legal opinions delivered to the Court of Aldermen upon the subject of the right of the Lord Mayor were decidedly in favour of the corporation, and that the opinions of the law authorities consulted upon the part of the governors of the hospital were as decidedly against the City. The whole matter was then referred to a special committee, with power to consult counsel thereon.

City Improvements.—The committee appointed to consider the best means of carrying into effect the resolution of the court of Common Council for appropriating the sum of 20,000*l.* annually for public purposes, reported last week in favour of two plans—one for forming a street from the south end of Water-lane, now called Blackfriars-street, and the other in the Old Bailey, from the south side of the New Inn to the south side of Prujean-square; and the Court, after some discussion, adopted the report by a large majority. The last of these projects, by the opening to the transit of carriages, will afford great relief to Ludgate-hill, and will be formed upon part of the site of the Fleet Prison. The first, although of small dimensions, will be productive of much public convenience, as it is well known that the traffic from the wharfs in the neighbourhood of the gas-works seriously interferes with the transit through Fleet-street and its vicinity.

Railways in the City.—The Committee of Common Council have reported to the Court that they have been attended by Mr. Dillon, the chairman, Messrs. Deacon, Wells, and Shepperson, directors of the Direct London and Manchester Railway, and by Mr. Rastrick, their engineer, when Mr. Dillon fully explained the views and wishes of the petitioners, and Mr. Rastrick submitted plans and sections of the intended railway, and was heard at considerable length in explanation of that part which affected the city, by which it appeared that the company propose to take the entire site of Farringdon Market, and all the adjoining houses and buildings extending from Harp-alley to Holborn-hill, north and south, and from Farringdon-street to Shoe-lane, east and west, and to form a viaduct from Holborn-hill to Skinner-street. That they were also attended by Mr. Stephenson, the engineer, and Mr. Creed, Mr. Parker, and Mr. Mordigan, on behalf of the London and Birmingham Railway, when Mr. Stephenson was heard in support of their petition, and submitted a plan and section of the proposed line of railway, and particularly shewing the portion of ground they were desirous of obtaining within the city, by which it appeared that the company contemplate purchasing an area of about five acres, situate between Skinner-street, the Old Bailey, and Farringdon-street, including a portion of the site of the late Fleet Prison; that their object was to form two levels, the lower to be approached by a tunnel from Camden-town, so as not to interfere with any of the streets and houses, except those immediately connected with their proposed site, and the upper level to be approached through Skinner-street and the Old Bailey, and any new street that might be formed in that neighbourhood. That the committee, after inspecting the several plans, and considering the statements of the respective parties, with all the circumstances connected with this important subject, are of opinion that it is desirable, both for the prosperity and advantage of the citizens of London, to have railway termini within the city; that the sites proposed to be purchased by both companies are desirable; they interfere but in a small degree with the public streets within the city; and that the plans will afford great accommodation to the traffic passing east and west." This report was agreed to by a large majority, together with an amendment, proposed as a rider by Mr. Wire, conveying an instruction to the committee to obtain plans, elevations, and models from the two companies, and to consider what arrangements can be made to prevent monopoly, and to secure to the public the utmost amount of railroad accommodation that can be obtained by stations in Farringdon-street, consistent with a due regard to the trade of the city and the convenience of the public.

Railway Bridges and the Tunnel.—It is announced that, besides three of the metropolitan bridges, the Thames tunnel is to be converted to railway purposes. Southwark-bridge, it is said, has been sold to the North Kent Company, subject to their obtaining a bill, and the consent of the proprietors. The terms are 360,000*l.*, or a rental of 12,000*l.* per annum. The present net proceeds of the bridge, all expenses deducted, amount only to 2000*l.* per annum, and the market value of a 100*l.* share until lately was 3*l.* The bridge was surveyed by the Thames Embankment and Railway Junction Company, with a view to the same object, but the latter company declined offering more than 150,000*l.*, on the ground that a new railway bridge could be built for nearly the sum that would have to be spent in the reconstruction of Southwark-bridge to adapt it for railway traffic, without closing the bridge as a public road.—The arrangements between the directors of the Great Western and South Western companies with the directors of Waterloo-bridge, for its conversion into a a railway bridge, to unite these lines, are understood to be finally arranged. The structure will remain untouched, and the transit both for foot passengers and carriages will remain in its present state. The proposed line is to run alongside the bridge. On the south side of the bridge, the abutments can be widened several feet; this foundation the directors have agreed to lease to the railway companies for a period of years at a yearly rental, subjected to a variety of provisos, the principal ones being, it is stated, that the lessees shall make good every damage which may be done to the bridge, to keep the approaches, &c., in proper repair, and also to pay all damages that might be recovered in a court of law, in any action that might be brought for injuries sustained from horses, &c., taking fright through the noise occasioned by the trains.—The proprietors of the new Charing Cross Bridge on Thursday agreed, by a large majority, to accept the offer made by Mr. Fuller on behalf of the Central Metropolitan Railway, and to sell the bridge to that Company for 226,000*l.*—It appears that negotiations are now going forward between the directors of the Thames Tunnel and a party of capitalists for the purchase of the tunnel, with the view of carrying a railway direct from the junction of the Eastern Counties and Blackwall lines to the point on the Greenwich line, whence the Croydon, Brighton, and Dover Diverge. It is well known that the Thames Tunnel has not returned, and is not likely to return, one farthing of profit to the proprietors, nor even to pay interest on the large sum for which it is mortgaged to government. Under these circumstances an offer of about 10*s.* in the pound seems a fortunate chance to the shareholders. It is said that the atmospheric principle will be adopted, that Mr. R. Stephenson will probably be the engineer-in-chief, Mr. Phipps acting engineer, and that the direction will consist of members of the Northern and Eastern, Dover, Brighton, and Blackwall Boards.

Tractarianism in Shoreditch.—On Sunday, in pursuance of a resolution agreed to last week at a general meeting of the subscribers to the National Schools, Hoxton-square, the children of the schools, boys and girls, amounting to about 130, proceeded to the church of St. James, in the City-road, instead of the parish church, from which it has been determined to remove them, in consequence of the Tractarian doctrines and ceremonies being still practised by the vicar. The churchwardens, with some of the committee and subscribers, and the beadles, accompanied the schools to St. James's, where the children were placed in the free seats. The children of the parochial school also, on account of the same difference between the vicar and the parishioners, attend the service of this church.

The Woolwich Division of Chelsea Pensioners.—The eight days' training of the Woolwich division of Chelsea pensioners having been completed on Saturday, they assembled on the barrack-field of Woolwich garrison, under the command of Captain Forbes, and went through their exercises before Lieut.-Gen. Lord Bloomfield, who expressed himself astonished at the manner in which they performed their various evolutions, and said that he was "satisfied the country has in them men fully capable, not only of defensive, but also of offensive operations, should their services be required."

Her Majesty's Approval of the Lord Mayor Elect.—On Friday morning, several members of the corporation arrived at the Lord Chancellor's house, when his lordship, in a complimentary speech, said he was commanded to give Her Majesty's full and entire assent to the choice the citizens of London had made of chief magistrate for the year ensuing.

Agricultural Protection Society.—A meeting of the members of this Society was held in Old Bond-street on Tuesday, at which a motion, urging the provincial societies to concentrate their efforts and form district societies by the union of local ones, was, after considerable discussion, withdrawn, and an amendment adopted for the formation of a general society for each county or division of county. The amendment also states that the high price of grain in this country arises from unfounded apprehensions as to the amount of the crop; that the price of grain is (proportionably with the means of the people) lower in this country than in continental states, and that the supply of wheat is not such as to justify alarm. The resolution declares the Society in favour of the present protection to agriculture, pledges them to maintain it, and calls upon all local societies for their co-operation, and for information respecting the amount and character of the present crop.

New Courts of Law.—The select committee appointed to consider the expediency of erecting a building in the neighbourhood of the inns of court in lieu of the present courts of Westminster-hall, have published the evidence which they have taken, unaccompanied by any remark or recommendation. Mr. Barry, the architect of the new Houses of Parliament, whose evidence constitutes the chief part of that taken by the committee, proposes to pull down the streets and alleys between Carey-street and the Strand to the north of St. Clement's Church, and there to construct new courts of law, with ample offices, and further accommodation for the profession. Mr. Barry says in his evidence, that the clearance of such a neighbourhood would, of itself, irrespective of the future appropriation of the site, be one of the greatest public improvements that he knows of in London, with regard not only to the health and beauty, but also the morality of the metropolis. Mr. Barry calculates the area for the new buildings at a little under eight acres; and he designs the front to be opposite to the Strand and Fleet-street, widening the Strand so as to give an easy access to the building. In answer to Sir R. Inglis, Mr. Barry said that it would not be necessary to get rid of Temple-bar; he intends, however, to leave it in a somewhat remarkable position. Mr. Barry says, "it would not be in the centre of the street, or of the area in the front of the building; but would be attached to one side, like the Arch of Titus, in some degree." A question was raised as to a site a little further eastward, where the Rolls' estate lies; but Mr. Barry is of opinion that the space would be much too confined, and the access less advantageous than the one south of Carey-street. The position of St. Clement's, it was admitted by all parties, is very convenient for the legal residents of the Temple and Lincoln's-inn; it is also central for business, and the distance will be less for the mercantile juror or witness dwelling in the City. It appeared also by the evidence of Mr. Maugham, Secretary of the Law Institution, that the attorneys and solicitors have petitioned in favour of the proposed plan, considering that it would be a great saving of time and trouble to have all the courts and law offices under one range of building. "At present," says Mr. Maugham, "the Chancery offices are chiefly in Chancery-lane, Southampton-buildings, and in the Rolls'-yard; the Queen's Bench offices are all in the Temple; the Common Pleas offices are in Serjeants'-inn, Chancery-lane; the Exchequer offices are in Lincoln's-inn and Symonds'-inn." To have all these dispersed offices collected together the solicitors think would be a gain of "great convenience and facility in the despatch of business."

The New Poor Law Asylums.—On Saturday the vestry and guardians of Marylebone unanimously adopted the report made by their special committee on the proposed asylums, recommending them not to proceed to the election of managers, but to resist to the utmost the encroaching spirit of centralisation, to stand firm to the principles of local self-government, and to use all legitimate means of restricting the enormous powers exercised by the Poor Law Commissioners as foreign to the general spirit of the constitution. They also determined to petition Parliament on the subject, and appointed a deputation to wait upon Sir James Graham, and state the case of the parish at large, with a view to its exemption from the proposed union.

Railway Streets.—The question of adapting railway viaducts to street traffic, so as to improve instead of deteriorate the property they pass over, and diminish the cost of their construction by the proceeds of new building frontages, will receive a practical solution in the experiment proposed to be tried on a grand scale by the Thames Embankment and Railway Junction Company. The object of this company (promoted by the Earl of Devon) is to form a through communication with the railways entering the Metropolis from the east and west, and to connect them, by a railway bridge, with the lines approaching the Thames from the north and south. One part of this object it is proposed to effect by a railway embankment between Hungerford-market and Blackfriars-bridge, where the river is broad and shallow; but it was left for consideration, on the formation of the company, whether the railway, in passing to the east of Blackfriars-bridge, should continue in front of the wharfs, or, leaving the river at that point, proceed behind the wharfs, in a line parallel with them, between Thames-street and Cannon-street, to the Blackwall Railway, at or near the Minories. The latter course has at last been determined upon, after a careful survey of the two lines, with a view to their comparative cost, the wharf line involving expensive constructions, and unlimited demands for compensation, and the upper line a large original outlay, but a certain return of about two-thirds the amount by the sale of ground-rents. It is intended, therefore, to form between the Minories and Blackfriars-bridge—through a mass of property, some portions of it costly, but the greater part of so inferior a character that it is styled the "back slums" of the city—a new street, nearly as wide and as straight as Oxford-street, with a railway viaduct for atmospheric carriages in the middle, constructed with cast iron girders, supported by columns along the side pavement, resembling those of the Quadrant. A model of the viaduct, and proposed new buildings on either side, has been prepared for public inspection, and Messrs. Bridges and Mason, the solicitors of the company, have already commenced serving the necessary notices for the property to be purchased. The new street, which will give a frontage to Doctors' Commons, and open a view of St. Paul's from the south, will, in connection with the embankment line, if carried out as intended, form one of the main arteries of the metropolis. It would appear, as described, to take the most direct as well as the most agreeable course from east to west, even for foot passengers; and passengers by the railway will reach the Bank in five minutes from Charing-cross, or the sea at Southend within an hour and a half. The chief city station will be immediately at the back of the statue of King William, facing London-bridge; but it is intended to have a station for omnibus traffic every 500 yards throughout the line. The architectural elevations of the railway embankment, in reference especially to its ornamental effect in passing the Temple-gardens, will be supplied by Mr. Barry.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Nov. 1:—West Districts, 141; Northern, 141; Central, 219; Eastern, 198; Southern, 249; Total, 948; males, 481; females, 467. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1286; males, 628; females, 658.

Provincial.

Andover.—The excitement caused by the late Poor-law inquiry has not yet subsided. On the 25th ult. a meeting of the guardians was held, at which it was proposed that Mr. Westlake, surgeon of the Union, who was the prosecutor in the case of M'Dougal, the late master, should be suspended for want of confidence in him. 22 out of 32 guardians were present, and four voted for Mr. Westlake, nine against him, and nine were neutrals; several of Mr. Westlake's friends not being present, having no idea or intimation of what was intended to be proposed. Mr. Hammond was appointed surgeon in the place of Mr. Westlake. Part of the evidence he had given against M'Dougal was read over to show their want of confidence. A public subscription, however, is now in progress for the purpose of presenting Mr. Westlake with some testimonial, expressive of the feeling of the public in regard to his conduct during the late inquiry.

Berwick.—We have already had occasion to observe that Government have in contemplation some extensive plan for the defence of our coasts. Within the last fortnight several Government officials have been examining the state of the ramparts and other defences of Berwick; and we learn from other places, not only on the north coast, but on the shores of Cornwall and Devon, that new fortifications and repairs of old batteries are in active progress.

Brighton.—The local papers mention that the railroad has driven all the coaches off the London-road, with the solitary exception of one which runs by way of Horsham, Dorking, and Epsom, and that, in a short time, a coach in Brighton will be quite a novelty.

Bristol.—On Saturday week, as the men engaged in the Upper Soundwell Pit, Kingswood, the property of S. Whittack, Esq., were leaving their work, five of the number entered the basket, for the purpose of being drawn up to the top, when the rope broke, and they were precipitated to the bottom of the pit, a distance of 26 yards. Besides the five who had entered the bucket, a sixth was about getting into it, and was also dragged down with it. Four were killed instantly; a fifth lingered three quarters of an hour and then died. The man who had not entered the basket was dreadfully mangled; his arm has since been amputated, and he lies now in a very dangerous state. An inquest was held on the bodies of the five men, at which it was proved that the rope had been so much worn, and so frequently repaired as to have been unfit for use for 12 months past. The jury, after a consultation of two hours, returned a verdict of Accidental death, with a deodand of 100*l.* on the rope, accompanied by the following special verdict:—"That the jury cannot refrain from expressing their opinion that there has been very great neglect on the part of the proprietor of the pit, Samuel Whittack, Esq., and the bailiff, Charles Stone, for not having provided a sufficient rope for the safety of the men in ascending and descending the said pit."

Cambridge.—Thorwaldsen's statue of Byron was placed in its permanent position, at the upper end of Trinity College Library, last week.—Prof. Whewell, Master of Trinity, has just presented the College with a very fine statue of Bacon, by Weekes, which has been just placed in the ante-chapel, near the screen, and almost under the bust of Wordsworth. The philosopher is represented in his chair in a reclining position.—The Beehive, the last of the coaches between London and Cambridge, ran for the last time on the 25th ult., being fairly vanquished by all-potent steam.

Crewe.—A new class of towns may now be said to have been added to the map of England since the establishment of railways. Crewe is the third town in the kingdom that, like Swindon on the Great Western, and Wolverton on the London and Birmingham, owes its origin to the enterprise of railways. It has been established entirely from the necessity experienced by the larger lines of fixing the laboratories of their locomotive operations, and the depots of their mechanical power, midway on the line of route, where constant accumulations of labour have formed communities of handicraftsmen and mechanics. There has thus gradually been concentrated at Crewe about 700 mechanics, with their families, exceeding the population of either Swindon or Wolverton, where the average is 1200 people, presenting a fine spectacle of industry, order, and intelligence, and employed in every species of locomotive labour, instead of being engaged, as might have been the case had such asylums never existed, in a daily struggle for subsistence. Crewe was an unmarked spot upon the map until the railway converted it into a vigorous community, constituted it a school house for engineers and mechanics, and carved out for a section of the population of the north dwelling places and paths for honourable industry. Between 300 and 400 houses, parcelled out into streets, go to form this railway township, where all the constructive, locomotive, and superintending operations of the Amalgamated Grand Junction Company, working over a consolidated surface of 130 miles, are now daily conducted. There is no doubt that there will soon be established similarly regulated townships in connection with every railway of magnitude in the kingdom. The Morning Chronicle in a recent article on this subject, observes that "very extensive additions are daily being made to the workshops and manufactories at Crewe, where the number of cottages amount to three hundred and fifty. These dwellings are divided into classes, and are arranged in wide streets, running at parallel lines east and west, with the exception of the terrace fronting the line, and a double row of cottages running north and south. The accommodation afforded in the first, second, and third class of these cottages for the workmen consists of four rooms, two on the ground-floor and two above, with sculleries, pantries, and other conveniences. The whole of them are lighted with gas, and are well drained. Class No. 1 rents at 2*s.* per week, and the highest class, No. 4, at 8*s.* per week, being superior to the others, and occupied by the company's clerks and officers. There are two agents' houses, of an ornamental character, for the superintendents of the locomotive and carriage departments, having extensive gardens, and renting at 40*l.* per annum. The streets are macadamised, and the foot-paths asphalted. Two or three roadmen are kept constantly employed by the company in cleansing the thoroughfares and keeping them in repair. The town is properly sewered, the sewers being trapped, so as to prevent the ascent of noxious vapours, a matter of importance as regards health and comfort. Abundant supplies of good filtered water are pumped up by engine from a reservoir to a tank placed at the highest point of the town, and distributed through the streets in pipes to fonts placed in various directions. The rain-water is collected from the roofs in large tanks for washing, and the streets are lit with gas. There is a well-paved market-place, attended weekly by people from the surrounding country with poultry, eggs, butter, meat, fish, and vegetables. For the benefit of the workmen and their families, a surgeon is appointed by the company, who has a free residence and a salary. Baths, hot and cold, have been established, available at small charges. A commodious building, containing a library and reading-rooms, for concerts, balls, lectures, &c., is provided by the company for the recreation and amusement of the workpeople. The library is supplied with books purchased and presented by the company, and is managed by a committee appointed by the workmen themselves. Commodious schools have been erected for both boys and girls, and a third for infants. Each school is calculated to accommodate from 150 to 200 children, and a schoolmaster and two schoolmistresses have been appointed by the directors, each with a salary and a free house. The school and public rooms form the north side of Moss-square, so named in compliment to the late chairman. In the centre of the square a church, now completed, has been erected by the company's architect, Mr. Cunninghame, calculated to contain 600 persons. A clergyman has just been appointed to officiate at 200*l.* per annum. The town altogether is a model, well worthy the imitation of larger communities, and the company have manifested most laudable zeal for the moral and physical well-being of their workmen. In addition to the buildings erected by the company, there are 98 houses and shops for the supply of the inhabitants with commodities, a steam and water mill for grinding flour, and two Wesleyan meeting houses. The Presbyterians and Roman Catholics meet in chapels of their own. A splendid new station, in the Elizabethan style, is, it is understood, to be erected at Crewe, which, in connection with the various new lines projected, promises to become one of the most important points of junction for the great northern streams of traffic. It is to be furnished with every accommodation for passengers, and is to consist of booking offices and waiting rooms on the west side of the line, and on the east side with refreshment rooms, and all the required accompaniments.

Farningham.—The annual ploughing match and dinner of the Kentish Agricultural Association took place on Tuesday week; the former in two fields belonging to Mr. N. Ray, of Franks, in the parish of Horton-Kirby, and the latter at Farningham. The prizes for ploughing, servitude, &c., having been distributed by Viscount Sydney in the usual manner, the friends and supporters of the association sat down, to the number of 100, to dinner at the Lion Hotel. Lord Sydney presided, and the vice-chair was occupied by Joseph Berens, Esq., Chairman of the Quarter Sessions. After the routine toasts, the Chairman gave the health of the President, Sir P. H. Dyke, Bart., who, he was happy to announce, was considered by his medical attendant likely to be restored to health again. The next toast was "The Judges of the Field," which was replied to by Mr. Love, who took occasion to urge that the object of such meetings as the present should be more the discussion on and suggestions of agricultural improvements, than the mere drinking of toasts—that landlords were too much in the habit of imposing on the tenant the necessity of improvements of their land—that by the growth of useless timber in hedgerows, their tenants were deprived of much otherwise valuable soil; and wound up by a strong phillipic against the practice of battue shooting, characterising it as not only un-English but unsportsmanlike in the highest degree, and that the practice was carried to a most ruinous extent in their own immediate neighbourhood; and after some observations on the financial state of the society, sat down amid loud cheers.—The Noble Chairman's health was then proposed by the Vice-Chairman, and loudly responded to, and was met by his Lordship in appropriate terms, who assured Mr. Love that he received his lecture in the most cordial spirit. He agreed with most of what he had said, and could assure him that if their future meetings be of a discussive nature, he, for one, would readily acquiesce. They were told by the leading journal that such meetings were of no use. In spite, however, of such high authority, he entirely dissented from such an opinion. They were eminently calculated to carry out that for which they were solely intended—to keep up the best feeling between the landlord, tenant, and labourer—and no pains on his part should be wanting to carry the same into effect. "The Health of the Vice-Chairman" and other toasts followed. No political topic was touched upon, the principal theme being the introduction of the use of two-horse ploughs as both economical and effective.

Honiton.—The annual meeting of the Honiton and Ottery Agricultural Association was held at Honiton on Tuesday. After the show of stock, the members of the Association dined together at the London Inn. Mr. Justice Coleridge was in the chair, supported by Sir E. J. Prideaux, Bart.; the High Sheriff of the county of Devon; Sir J. Kennaway, Bart.; and many others of the principal landowners of the district. After the customary toasts, Mr. JUSTICE COLERIDGE gave "Prosperity to the Honiton and Ottery Association." The learned judge said—"Although I have always taken some interest in the welfare of societies, devoted as this is to the promotion of practical improvements in the cultivation of the lands, I am free to confess that I myself am ignorant of agriculture generally. Strictly speaking I cannot be said to be a landowner, nor am I either a tenant farmer or a labourer. I therefore subscribe to the old familar adage, that the cobbler should not go beyond his last. I shall therefore not presume to enter upon a discussion as to the relative merits of short horns or long horns, nor shall I venture any opinion upon the advantage of under-draining. These, in my opinion, are all matters for practical agriculturists to discuss, for they alone can discuss them with beneficial effect. Still every man of common sense—every man who regards dispassionately what is passing in the world—must come to the conclusion that these are times when the agriculturists must exert themselves, and rely more upon their own efforts, if they hope to prosper. They must, like the manufacturers, look to the sciences for aid, and we all know that the application of science has already done much, and might, I am confident, do much more towards the advancement of agriculture. It may be said that the improvements to which I more particularly refer, cannot be accomplished without considerable expense; but that I am certain would be amply repaid; the landowner who has capital is the proper party by whom experiments should be made. I do not say that he ought to take up every rash scheme. He should make a judicious selection of those suggestions which are most approved of by practical and well-informed persons. Where the experiment is found to succeed the tenant farmer should give up his old prejudices and adopt the new system. Holding the office that I do, I am anxious to steer clear of politics—a wise rule in these societies—but there is one point upon which, without infringing that rule, I may be permited to offer one or two remarks. In the course of not a very long life, and with somewhat limited experience, I have observed that there has been scarcely any great public measure which has not been represented on the one hand as pregnant with more evil, and on the other hand, as being likely to produce more good than had been found, upon experience, to be really the case. This is owing, possibly, to the fact that the effect of many public measures has been mistaken or overrated. I do not pretend to be a prophet; but only speculating, as other men do, upon the probability of any material alteration in the corn-laws, I am bound to say that I do not apprehend the harm would be so great, or the benefit so extensive, as some persons are disposed to anticipate, either the one way or the other. I have said already that I am not a practical agriculturist, therefore my opinion may be little worth your attention; but I think that, with the blessing of God upon your industry and skill, good may work its way out of that which you now regard as evil: and that in a little time you would not find yourselves so much worse off as some of you may possibly anticipate. Let us never forget that there are in this country two mighty interests—agriculture and manufactures; both are essential to the well-being of the State. It has, I regret to find, been but too much the fashion to set the one against the other. It seems to my mind that these should be co-existent, for they have a common interest; the greatest consumer is the friend of both. I must remind you, also, that our population is steadily increasing, and it is to the agriculturists that we must chiefly look for food to meet this growing demand. The population is already increasing at the rate of 300,000 per annum; should it continue to advance in the same proportion, we must have additional produce to feed the additional mouths. Under these circumstances, I feel confident that the British corn grower will find customers at tolerably remunerative prices. Before I sit down, I would respectfully but earnestly beg to impress upon you the importance of improving the moral and social condition of the labouring class, with whose well-being your own interest is very closely identified. Many amongst them are wretchedly lodged. From my own experience as a judge, the painful conviction has been forced upon my mind that very much of the crime which disgraces our country is mainly attributable to the mixture of sexes and of ages in the dwellings of the poor, a practice that debases and demoralizes the human mind; and which, unless counteracted, must effectually neutralize every effort made towards the elevation or improvement of the people."

Liverpool.—On Saturday information was circulated throughout the divisions of the metropolitan and city police that Mr. Lyon, an extensive merchant in Liverpool, in the Smyrna and American trade, has absconded from that city, having committed forgeries to a very large amount. Mr. Lyon is believed to have quitted Liverpool about Monday or Tuesday week, but he was not missed until Thursday. It is supposed that he is in London, and that he intends to quit the country.—A serious explosion of gunpowder took place in this town last week, caused, it is supposed, by a spark from a candle when the shopman was weighing a small quantity from the canister. Two men and a boy were severely injured, the latter so much so that he died on Monday.

Manchester.—The annual soirée, or literary meeting of the members and friends of the Manchester Athenæum, was held on the 23d ult. in the Free-trade Hall. The interest manifested by the inhabitants was, perhaps, greater than on any former occasion. Tickets were issued for 3600 persons, but the demand far exceeded that number; and on the day before the meeting as much as three guineas was offered for tickets which originally cost 7*s.* 6*d.* The directors had provided ample accommodation for the company, and the attraction offered was of a high character. It was expected that Mr. Charles Dickens, M. Eugene Sue, and M. Thiers would have attended, but from various causes they were absent. Mr. Sergeant Talfourd took the chair on the occasion, and addressed the meeting for nearly 50 minutes on the advantages of such institutions, and on the progress made by that of Manchester. Mr. M. Philips, Mr. F. Stone, Mr. Douglas Jerrold, Mr. M. Gibson, and Mr. Cobden, also delivered speeches on the occasion.—An aggregate meeting of the Anti-Corn-law League was held in this town a few days since. The greatest interest was manifested, and the demand for tickets of admission, both for ladies and members from the country, was unprecedently great, though there was no subject announced for discussion, and no resolutions of an important character to be proposed. Mr. Cobden, Mr. Bright, and Mr. H. Ashworth, addressed the meeting on the usual topics.—The purchase of Eaton-park (including the mansion and park), the property of the Earl of Wilton, has been completed by one of the four rival railway companies projected between Manchester and Bury, a distance of eight or nine miles. Lord Wilton is to receive, it is stated, the sum of 500,000*l.* for his property. The park is about three miles north of Manchester, and is, it is understood, to be laid out in sites for villas.

Oxford.—It is rumoured that an influential body of noblemen and gentlemen, among whom are Lords Ashley, Sandon, and R. Grosvenor, Sir T. D. Ackland, Bart.; Messrs. Gladstone, Glynne, Vernon Smith and others, are about to memorialise the authorities of Oxford and Cambridge, suggesting additional departments to the existing colleges, or the foundation of new collegiate bodies, to provide increased facilities of University education on a more economical scale than has hitherto prevailed.—Several members of the University have followed the example of Mr. Newman, and gone over to the Roman Catholic Church since our last notice. Among them are Mr. J. King and Mr. W. Lockhart, commoners of Exeter College (the latter the nephew of the editor of the Quarterly Review); Rev. F. Oakeley, M.A., Fellow of Baliol, Prebendary of Lichfield, and late of Margaret-street Chapel; Rev. G. Talbot, M.A.; Rev. Moore Capes, M.A.; Rev. W. G. Ward, M.A., fellow; and G. Tickell, Esq., M.A., and late scholar, all of Baliol; Rev. Goodenough Penny, M.A., student; Rev. W. F. Wingfield, M.A., student; Rev. C. H. Collyns, M.A., student; and Mr. J. Douglas, commoner, all of Christ Church.—Rev. Daniel Parsons, M.A.; Rev. F. R. Neve, M.A., rector of Poole; and Rev. Brook Bridges, M.A., of Oriel.—Rev. Bernard Smith, M.A., fellow of Magdalene; Rev. A. Seager, M.A., of Worcester College, Hebrew lecturer to Dr. Pusey; Mr. Renouf, Bible clerk, of Pembroke College; Mr. Grant, commoner, of St. John's; and Mr. Thomas Meyrick, M.A., scholar, of Corpus.—It is also announced that on Saturday last, being All Saints' Day, Mr. Newman, the Rev. Mr. Oakeley, Rev. Mr. St. John, and Rev. Mr. Walker, received confirmation, in] the chapel of Oscott College, at the hands of Dr. Wiseman, Coadjutor Bishop of the Midland District.

Peterborough.—The Lincolnshire Chronicle contains the following paragraph; "land for gardens has lately been offered to the public near Peterborough at 10*l.* per acre per annum. This rent was by some persons considered exorbitant; but what will those persons say when they are informed that a small piece of garden ground has this week been let after the rate of 20*l.* an acre for one year?"

Portsmouth.—The Vanguard, 84, having completed her alterations, has sailed to join the Canopus, Albion, Rodney, and Superb. Captain Willes, being the senior officer, will take the command during the cruize. The Vanguard's mainmast has been moved three inches more forward; the sails have been altered, and it is now expected she will both sail and steer better than formerly. The Ajax, 74, has been taken into dock to have the bulwarks cut down, and all the superfluous timber removed, preparatory to being handed over to Mr. White, of Cowes, to be converted into a block ship. The St. Vincent, 120, the Admiral's flag ship in the late experimental cruise, has been towed into the harbour, and is to go into dock to be improved upon.

Sheerness.—The Janus steam-sloop, during the last few weeks, has been making experimental trips down the river Medway. The first was made on the 11th ult., the Earl of Dundonald, and Captain Shirreff, superintendent, being on board. From opposite the dockyard to Upnor Castle the wheels revolved about five times within the minute, when a breeze sprung up and her canvas was spread; she then went down as far as Gillingham-reach, the wheels revolving about 13 times within the minute. It now appears that after all the trouble and expense of taking her machinery to pieces and reconstructing it, no alteration in the speed has been effected since the last experimental trip, and she is again in the hands of the engineers. The general opinion is that the vessel is a total failure.

Sunderland.—The contemplated wet dock at this port, under the auspices of Mr. Hudson, is now the absorbing subject of public conversation in the town. A plan of the dock has been published, which has attracted the attention of all classes of the inhabitants. It is the joint production of Mr. Murray, engineer to the Commissioners of the River Wear, and Mr. George Stephenson, the engineer. The site is on Sunderland Moor, extending southward from the lower part of the harbour. The length intended is 3100 yards, width 350 yards, and it is calculated to accommodate 350 sail of ships, which can load and lie afloat, and enter or depart at all times of the tide. A basin is intended at the south and north ends of the dock, and the inlet into the present harbour will be about the head of the south pier; and the outlet to the sea, at the southern extremity into Hendon Bay. The estimated cost is not stated, but all the shares are taken up, and there is no prospect of any opposition.

Swindon.—The Devizes Gazette says that this place would seem to be the "disputed railway territory," from the number of schemes now before the public proposing to have connection with the Great Western Railway, or to pass over with independent lines. The following list will show most of the schemes which are projected:—Manchester and Southampton direct (Watkin-shaw's line), capital 1,500,000*l.*; Manchester, Southampton, and Poole (Lacy's line), 1,600,000*l.*; Southampton, Manchester, and Oxford Junction (Parson's line), capital 900,000*l.*; Oxford, Southampton, and Portsmouth, viâ Didcot, with branch (Bethell's line), 500,000*l.*; South and Midlands Junction, capital 1,250,000*l.*; West Midland, Manchester, and Southampton, and Swindon and Birmingham Junction, 1,200,000*l.*; Cheltenham, Oxford, and Brighton Junction, 1,000,000*l.*; Brighton and Cheltenham Direct, 1,000,000*l.*; Salisbury and Swindon Extension of the Wilts, Somerset, and Southampton Junction, 700,000*l.*; Rugby, Swindon, and Weymouth Direct Junction, 1,800,000*l.*; Southampton and Great Western Junction. Troops of engineers and surveyors are traversing the country in the neighbourhood of Swindon in all directions; and upon almost every eminence may be seen some eminent surveyor spying out points and taking sights, whilst the fields present an appearance, from the number of flagstaffs, as if a steeple chase on a grand scale was about to be run.

Wakefield.—Mr. Collett, M.P., for Athlone, who has released from prison so many persons who have been convicted in different parts of the country for offences against the Game-laws, has transmitted to the governor of Wakefield prison 5*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* to effect the release of Thomas Higgins, who had been incarcerated for three months, for picking up a hare in a wheat-field as he was going to work. The hare had been caught in a snare, but there was no evidence to prove either that he was a poacher, or in any way connected with poachers.

Railways.

PRICES AND TRAFFIC, by permission, from the List of Messrs. HILL, FAWCETT, & HILL, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

NAME OF RAILWAY. Those marked thus * are not yet opened.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Week ending between Oct. 28. & Nov. 5.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Corresponding Week. 1844.	6 Mos. Dividend Per Share. † 3 Mos.	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid up.	Price, Friday 4 o'clock.
	£	£	£ s. d.	£	£	£
Birmingham, Glo'ster		2,233	2 0 0	100	all	124-6
Bristol, Birmingham
Bristol, Exeter			1 8 0	100	70	80-90
Bristol, Glo'ster			1 0 0	50	20	53-5
Chester, Holyhead	*	*		50	15	18½-17
Eastern Counties	6,695	4,331	0 2 0†	avr.	14½	19½ 20
Eastern Union				50	20
Do. Extension				25	1½
Edinburgh, Glasgow	2,849	2,217	1 5 0	50	all	68-72
Grand Junction	14,629	7,744	2 10 0†	100	all
Great North of England		1,862	3 0 0	100	all	£10 20
Great Western	18,747	15,320	3 4 0	100	50	144 7
Gt. South. & Western (I.)	*	*	*	50	15	19-21
Do. Extension	*	*	*	50	2½	11-13
Hull, Selby				50	all	101 3
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*	*	50	25	52-4
Liverpool, Manchester		4,586	4 10 0	100	all
London, Birmingham	21,003	16,074	5 0 0	s.k. 100		213-16
London, Blackwall	311	776	0 3 0	avr. 16⅔		8½-9½
London, Brighton	5,497	4,789	1 10 0	50	all	56-60
London, Croydon	1,570	383	0 8 0	avr.	13½	19½-20
London, Greenwich				avr.	42½	9-10
London, South-Western	6,563	5,892	2 0 0	avr.	41½	71-3
Manchester, Birmingham	4,406	3,123	1 0 0	40	40	75-80
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	955	877	2 14 0	123	93
Manchester, Leeds, Hull	6,689		2 16 0	100	73	136-46
Midland	17,749	9,961	2 2 6	stk. 100		137 42
Do. Birmingham, Derby				stk. 100		100-5
Newcastle, Carlisle	1,846	1,975	2 10 0	100	all
Newcastle, Darlington	2,902	1,937	4 0 0	25	all	55-9
North British	*	*	*	25	15	22-3
Northern, Eastern			1 2 6	50	45	67-9
Norwich, Brandon				20	14	20-2
Preston, Wyre	489	310		50	all
Sheffield, Manchester	1,240	632	5 p. Cent	100	95
South Devon	*	*	*	50	20	28-30
South-Eastern, Dover	7,071	4,742	0 13 4	avr.	33⅓	35-6
Yarmouth, Norwich			0 10 0	20	all	24-6
York, North Midland	5,290	2,326	2 10 0	50	all	105-9
Do. Scarboro' Branch	*	*	*	25	all	21-3
Do. Selby			0 12 8	50	20	76-8
FRENCH RAILWAYS.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*	*	20	8	8½-9½
Orleans, Vierzon	*	*	*	20	10	17-19
Orleans, Bordeaux	*	*	*	20	4	9½-10
Paris, Orleans	6,686	5,699	1 0 2½	90	all	44 6
Paris, Rouen	5,653	4,500	0 19 2	20	all	36-8
Rouen, Havre				20	14	56-8

The railway meetings have decreased within the last few days. The public, no doubt, by this time have become in a measure surfeited with them, and the projectors do not find that general support which till within the last week or so was afforded to every scheme making its appearance. It is also certain that the recent resolution of the Bank of England respecting the increase in the rate of interest, has had the effect of arresting a large amount of worthless schemes; and the Times and Mr. Hudson have both contributed to the exposure of those companies which were got up merely as gambling speculations. As a proof of the necessity for a more healthy state of things, we may mention that on the 7th October the number of new schemes before the public for the session 1846, was for the United Kingdom, 399; amount of deposits 28,994,074*l.*, amount of capital 329,290,000*l.* Foreign schemes, 70; amount of capital 197,280,000; amount of deposits 17,689,750*l.* This gives for Great Britain alone more than one scheme, and nearly a million of money, for every day of the year.—The York and North Midland, of which Mr. Hudson is chairman, have issued a manifesto, to the effect that they have determined upon the route of the various branch lines for which they intend to apply to Parliament in the next session, by means of which ample accommodation, both to the north and south, will be given to all the principal places in the East Riding; that the surveys are on the point of completion; and that arrangements have been made with the Manchester and Leeds, which will secure the friendly support of that body. The capital necessary for the formation of these lines is to be raised by the issue of new shares, scrip for which and for other purposes will shortly be issued, and will be divided among the holders of shares in the York and North Midland.—The Manchester and Birmingham have purchased the Macclesfield and Lichfield line, which has been delivered over on the following terms, viz.: The committee and landowners are to have 15,000 shares of 20*l.* each, and 55,000 go to the proprietors of the Manchester and Birmingham.—The London Salisbury and Yeovil, Exeter Yeovil and Dorchester, and Cornwall and Devon Central, are to be amalgamated, and it is rumoured that they will receive an accession of support from the proposed Manchester and Southampton.—The Bodmin and Wadebridge has been purchased by the Cornwall and Devon Central, and is intended to form a branch from their trunk to Padstow, for the purpose of opening a communication with Cork, and bringing that city within 20 hours of London. The purchase-money is said to be 36,000*l.*—The Amber-Gate, Nottingham, and Boston, and Eastern Junction have obtained the aid of the Midland company, and Mr. Hudson, chairman, and Mr. John Ellis, vice-chairman, have been added to the committee of direction, in addition to the alliances with the Manchester, Buxton, Matlock, and Midland Junction, and Lynn and Ely and Lynn and Dereham. This undertaking was commenced by the Nottingham and Grantham Canal Companies, who have since formed an amalgamation with the Nottingham, Erewash Valley, Amber-Gate and Manchester, the Nottingham, Vale of Belvoir, and Grantham and Nottingham, and Boston Companies, and will now afford a direct line of communication from Liverpool and Manchester, in the west, to Boston, Spalding, Lynn, Yarmouth, Norwich, &c., in the east. The amalgamated company are to make the whole of the line from Amber-Gate to Boston and Spalding.—The London and Brighton Company at a special meeting on Thursday adopted resolutions in favour of amalgamating with the Croydon Company.

Ireland.

Dublin.—The public attention has been fully aroused to the imperative necessity of prompt and effectual measures to avert the calamitous consequences which may be apprehended from the failure of the Potato-crop. A Privy Council was held by the Lord Lieutenant on Saturday, and on the two previous days there were two very important meetings—one, of the citizens, at the Mansion House, presided over by the Lord Mayor, and attended by the Duke of Leinster, Lord Cloncurry, Mr. O'Connell, and many leading citizens, without distinction of creed or party; the other, of the Royal Agricultural Society of Ireland. At both deputations were appointed to communicate with the Government. It is a remarkable fact that at both meetings, the universal and decided feeling was, that nothing in the shape of eleemosynary aid should be sought or accepted either from the government or the people of England, but that Ireland relying upon her own resources as ample for the exigency, should only require prompt official and legislative intervention, to afford remunerative employment in the improvement of the soil, and the development of the resources of the country. On Monday the city deputation proceeded to the Vice-regal Lodge, and had an interview with the Lord Lieutenant. The deputation was composed of the Lord Mayor, the Duke of Leinster, Lord Cloncurry, Sir John Power, Bart., Mr. O'Connell, M.P., Sir James Murray, Mr. Grattan, M.P., Mr. Pierce Mahony, Alderman Keshan (lord mayor elect), Alderman O'Brien (ex lord mayor), Alderman Stainton, Very Rev. Dr. Yore, Very Rev. Dr. O'Connell, Mr. Cornelius M'Loghlin, and several other gentlemen. The Lord Mayor read a paper, containing the suggestions which had been the subject of discussion at the corporation and at a public meeting of the citizens of Dublin on Friday last, to this effect: to open the ports—to prohibit the export of Irish provisions—to raise a million of money, on the security of the Irish Woods and Forests, for the purpose of filling granaries with corn—and to provide the means of employment for the working-classes. His Excellency read the following reply:—

"My Lord Mayor and Gentlemen,—It can scarcely be necessary for me to assure you that the state of the potato crops has for some time occupied, and still occupies, the most anxious attention of the Government. Scientific men have been sent over from England, to co-operate with those of this country in endeavouring to investigate the nature of the disease, and, if possible, to devise some means to arrest its progress. They have not yet terminated their inquiries, but two reports have already been received from them, which have been communicated to the public. The Government is also furnished with constant reports from the stipendiary magistrates and inspectors of constabulary, who are charged to watch the state of the potato disease and the progress of the harvest. These vary from day to day, and are often contradictory; it will, therefore, be impossible to form an accurate opinion of the whole extent of the evil till the digging of the potatoes shall be further advanced. To decide under such circumstances, upon the most proper measures to be adopted, would be premature, particularly as there is reason to hope that though the evil exists to a very great extent in some localities, in others it has but partially manifested itself. There is no immediate pressure in the market. I will, however, lose no time in submitting your suggestions to the consideration of the Cabinet. The greater part of them can only be enforced by legislative enactment, and require to be maturely weighed before they can be adopted. It must be clear to you that, in a case of such great national importance, no decision can be taken without a previous reference to the responsible advisers of the Crown."

This result is exactly what was anticipated. The Lord-Lieutenant declines to take any step, leaving it to the Ministry, as the responsible advisers of the Crown, to adopt any measures which may be required by the emergency. It is said that the Duke of Leinster, who had been previously in communication with his Excellency, stated to the Lord Mayor at the close of the interview, that the Irish government could have returned no other answer, inasmuch as legislative intervention was required, and that Parliament was to be called together almost immediately. On the following day (Tuesday) the citizens and corporation held an adjourned meeting, the Lord Mayor in the chair, to receive the report of the deputation. The Lord Mayor gave an account of what had been done by the committee appointed at the last meeting—the resolutions they had agreed to, and submitted to the Lord Lieutenant—their visit on last afternoon to the Vice-regal Lodge, and his Excellency's reply, as given above. A long discussion ensued, during which nearly all the speakers expressed dissatisfaction at the reply of the Lord Lieutenant. Mr. O'Connell, in particular, commented on it, paragraph by paragraph, keeping the meeting in a continued roar of laughter at the ludicrous light in which he placed it before the public. A resolution in favour of repeal of the corn laws was moved and seconded, but, at the suggestion of Mr. O'Connell, it was withdrawn, as involving a political question, and ultimately it was resolved to appoint a committee to sit daily, consisting of the Lord Mayor, Duke of Leinster, Lord Cloncurry, Mr. O'Connell, Mr. Grattan, Mr. O'Neill, the O'Connor Don, Sir J. Power, Alderman Keshen, Alderman Gardiner, Sir J. Murray, Dr. Kane, Alderman M'Kenna, Alderman O'Brien, and other gentlemen.—The deputation from the Royal Agricultural Society were received by Sir T. Fremantle. They stated that they neither asked nor needed any grant, but required only the aid and use of the fair credit to which Ireland was entitled: and were willing that the expenditure they recommended—the expenditure for local and general employment, under the existing necessities of the country—should be fully repaid by those portions of the country permanently benefited by the expenditure. In short, they wanted the resources of Ireland to be brought into action for Ireland's relief. They asked no boon for peasant or landlord, but they called on the Government to conduct the general drainage principle on their responsibility, because the national benefits which must result would be immense, as was developed in the third report of the Drainage Commissioners, presented to Parliament in July last—a report, by the way, prepared without the remotest reference to the impending evil. Sir T. Fremantle received the representations of the deputation in the most favourable manner, and the gentlemen parted with him under the impression that he considered their proposal the most practicable, as well as the most suitable, which had, up to the present time, reached the Government—at the same time the Right Hon. Baronet did not pledge himself to details.—The large sum of 8,000*l.* has been subscribed in Killarney as security for the purchase of provisions for the poor in case of need; the list includes Lord Kenmare, 3,000*l.*; Henry A. Herbert, 1,500*l.*; Christopher Gallwey, high sheriff, 500*l.*; Morgan J. O'Connell, M.P. and J. O'Connell, of Grena, 500*l.*; John Coltsman, 300*l.*; John Leahy, 300*l.*; Denis S. Lalor, 500*l.*, &c.—The city of Galway, the capital of the western province, has been fixed upon as the site for one of the new Colleges, and the Rev. Dr. Kirwan, Roman Catholic parish priest, of Outerard, and vicar-general of the diocese of Galway, has received the appointment of president of the College; and it is stated that Professor Kane, who is also a Roman Catholic, is to be President of the new College at Cork. It is to be hoped that the appointment of Dr. Kane will not interfere with the arrangements which are now going on under the Professor's able superintendence for the establishment of a Museum of Economic Geology in Dublin.—An Orange demonstration in the shape of a dinner to Mr. James Watson and Mr. Edward Archdall, ex-J.P.'s, took place at Enniskillen on Tuesday week. The dinner was laid out in a large room of the Town-hall, which was profusely decorated with Orange banners, with appropriate mottoes. The Earl of Enniskillen presided, and Colonel Barton, D.L., J.P., occupied the vice-chair. Amongst the company were—The Hon. H. A. Cole, James Watson, Nicholas Archdall, R Archdall, Richard Hall, Esqrs.; Simon Armstrong, Esq., J.P.; Alexander Nixon, Esq., D.L., J.P.; Rev. H. Archdall, J. Lendrum, Esq., D.L. J.P.; Charles Scott, Esq., J.P; H. M. Richardson, Esq., D.L., J.P.; Col. Dickson, J.P.; John Irvine, Esq. D.L., J.P.; Paul Deane, Esq., J.P.; S. Y. Johnstone, Esq.; W. C. Espy, Esq., representative of the Grand Lodge of Dublin; Arthur Holmes, Esq., representative of the Grand Lodge of Monaghan, &c., besides a considerable number of clergymen.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday in Conciliation-hall, Mr. Lanigan, of Tipperary, in the chair.—Mr. O'Connell commenced the business of the day by handing in the subscription of an English lady (Mrs. Jerningham), whose husband, he said, was a descendant of Lord Stafford, who was sacrificed to the Titus Oates conspiracy. He wondered the committee of the Fine Arts did not recommend the erection of a statue to that notorious individual. He then handed in 14*l.* from Brooklyn, New York, 100*l.* from New York itself, and read communications which accompanied the remittances. After some few remarks, he observed that Mr. Johnson had asserted, at a dinner lately given at Enniskillen, that the Repeal Association and the Ribbon Society were synonymous. Now, he had no hesitation in saying that a more wilful misrepresentation had never been promulgated. The fact was that he never omitted an opportunity of denouncing and exposing the evil tendency of those nefarious societies. Having disposed of these and some other matters, he alluded, very briefly and hastily, to a letter which had appeared in the papers from Mr. Foster, the Times Commissioner, denying most emphatically an assertion of Mr. O'Connell at the last meeting of the Association, that Dean O'Shaughnessy, of Limerick, had threatened to kick him (Mr. Foster) out of his house. With regard to this flat denial Mr. O'Connell offered no apology or explanation, but only said that "the gutter commissioner was very angry but not wise in his passion." For his part, he (Mr. O'Connell) would say that, if he was not kicked out of Dean O'Shaughnessy's house, he deserved to be so!—Mr. J. A. O'Neil gave notice of motion to the effect that during the potato alarm a committee of the association should sit to collect information and occupy themselves with that subject.—A notice was also given for Mr. W. S. O'Brien proposing that the association should offer premiums for the best suggestions on the subject of the potato rot.—Mr. R. D. Browne, M.P., then made a long speech intended chiefly as a reply to the Times Commissioner. He concluded by saying that those who complain of the vengeance taken against hard landlords by a suffering people forget the murders committed by those landlords.—Counsellor Clements moved a resolution, pledging the association to the active collection of the O'Connell tribute.—After the disposal of some further business, the rent for the week was announced at 385*l.* 10*s.*

Cork.—The Marmora, American screw steamer, which only left Liverpool for Constantinople a few days since, with a general cargo and specie to a considerable amount, put into this harbour on Sunday at noon, in distress, her coals having ignited ten hours after leaving Liverpool. Admiral Sir H. Pigot immediately sent marines and sailors from H.M.S. Crocodile, and, with the help of the inhabitants, the fire was got under about midnight on Sunday. It will be necessary, however, to discharge all her cargo and repair damages before the Marmora can proceed.—The brig Luvius, from Cardiff for Cork, in running up Cork Harbour at six o'clock on Tuesday night, was run down by the steam-ship Sirius, and sunk in five minutes afterwards. The whole of the crew were saved by the steamer.

Tipperary.—The Tipperary papers bring the shocking intelligence of the assassination, in open day, of Mr. Patrick Clarke, a gentleman of extensive property, and late of the firm of Clarke and Vincent, solicitors and land agents, of Merrion-square, Dublin. Mr. Clarke resided at South-hill, within half-a-mile of Nenagh, and whilst walking about his lands, was shot dead between two and three o'clock in the afternoon. Two balls were driven through his skull, and he expired immediately. Two men were seen crossing the country immediately after the murder; but the perpetrators of this fresh deed of blood remain undiscovered. Mr. Clarke was about 55 years of age, brother of Charles Clarke, Esq., J.P., Holy-cross, and was partner and father-in-law of John Vincent, Esq., of Leeson-street, Dublin. Some supposed offence connected with land, is presumed to have provoked the arm of Ribbon vengeance in this, as well as numerous other unhappy cases. On the same afternoon a gentleman of the county of Fermanagh, Mr. Barton, J.P., of Clonelly, was fired at by assassins and severely wounded in the breast.

Scotland.

Edinburgh.—On Monday last, the freedom of Edinburgh was conferred on Lord John Russell, who is at present on a visit in this city. The ceremony of presentation took place in the Music-hall, the largest public building in Edinburgh, the Council Chamber being too small to accommodate the number of inhabitants who were anxious to be present on the occasion. The hall was crowded, long before the hour announced for the ceremony, with a large and respectable audience, composed of men of various shades of politics. The Lord Provost presented the freedom in a highly complimentary address, and Lord John Russell replied in a speech of considerable length, which was frequently interrupted by loud and continued cheers. His lordship said:—

"My Lord Provost,—Whatever acquirements I may have made in early life, I owe a great part of them to the education which I received in the University of Edinburgh. Gentlemen, I cannot stand here receiving the testimony of your approbation—I can hardly go forth into your streets, without having my mind forcibly recalled to the happy scenes of those days when I was a student within your walls. I cannot but recollect with regret, at the same time accompanied with gratification, the instruction which I received from a man eminent indeed in science, but not less eminent from his character—I mean Mr. Professor Playfair. We know that with respect to others, it may be said that they, in following the lighter paths of literature, may have the accomplishments which are suitable to those paths and those occupations; but it was remarkable in Professor Playfair that while his pursuits were in the abstract sciences, his character, his conversation, and his whole life partook of all that was amiable, of all that was kind, and of all that was engaging. After studies and abstract calculations on, perhaps, the density of the earth, he would go forth—for I have had the pleasure of accompanying him—to enjoy the sublime and remarkable landscapes which abound in the neighbourhood of your city. He would go from disquisitions with respect, perhaps, to the astronomy of the Hindoos, and to all that was difficult in calculations, to be the most cheerful, the most at ease, and the most happy of the society of which he was the ornament. I cannot, in entering your city, but reflect upon the days when I had the satisfaction of being under the tuition of such a man. I cannot but recollect also that in this city I heard the lessons of moral philosophy, adorned by the eloquence of Mr. Dugald Stewart. Within your walls, also, there were many others whose society I had then the happiness of enjoying. I had to admire, in Mr. Mackenzie, in the extreme of age, that liveliness and that spirit which is usually the accompaniment of youth; and I likewise had the happiness to enjoy the hospitality of Sir Walter Scott, a man whose works, which have since been produced, have become so famous in all parts of the world—on the banks of the Don as on the banks of the Mississippi—in all parts of Europe, in all parts of America; whose works tend to the enjoyment of intellectual pursuits, and to raise men from the sordid and selfish occupations of sense to the pleasure of intellectual enjoyment. Since those days I have been engaged the greater part of my life in the occupations and struggles of political warfare and political debate. I trust that in the midst of that warfare I have not failed to do justice to my opponents. I trust that, engaged in a party, it has been my object to promote the welfare of my fellow-countrymen of all creeds and persuasions. With me the colour of the negro was no objection to his receiving the rights of a free citizen; nor could I think that a difference of religious persuasion ought, either on the one hand to deprive men of those political honours and that political power, to which they might justly aspire; nor, on the other hand, to deprive them, while so struggling, of the regard and sympathy of those who, differing with them in religion, might still regard their conscientious persuasion, and grasp them with the hand of Christian charity. It has been the course of my life, in the many important measures in which I have taken a part, to extend the liberties of my country, and to promote the popular power. I have always kept in view to make measures in which I have taken a part conducive to the constitution of England. I have always endeavoured to frame those measures, that they assimilate, if I may so speak, with the blood of existing institutions. Wherever there were abuses, I thought those abuses ought to be corrected. Wherever the franchise was narrowed by the spirit of former times, or narrowed, perhaps, by the necessity of a contest with some other body, and required to be enlarged, I have been in favour of enlargement. But I always assumed it to be my bounden duty to endeavour so to correct those abuses, so to regulate that enlargement, that our admirable Constitution should not be weakened but strengthened and if possible, perpetuated by the change. Men differ, as they must do in this free country, with respect to the particular measures that should be pursued. Some think that the prerogatives of the Crown are too much enfeebled, others that the franchise of the people is not sufficiently extended. Far be it from me to enter into any controversy on these topics. What I do wish to impress on you, at least as my notion—at least as my conviction—that, in any changes that may hereafter be made, the spirit of our Constitution should always be kept in view; and this I say, not from any bigoted adherence to that which is established; although with respect to old institutions, even if they were less perfect than others, it would perhaps be imprudent to endeavour to change, in order to reach some abstract perfection. But I speak of our institutions, because in looking at the history of the world, in looking at the institutions of nations now existing in the world, I find none—I will not say none in which there are not better laws on particular subjects, none in which there may not be some part of its institutions better than ours—but I find no constitution so well formed to promote the liberty of man as the Constitution under which we have the happiness to live. It was accounted by a Roman historian a rare felicity of the particular time in which he wrote, that he could both think what he pleased, and venture to say what he thought. Now, that is not only a great privilege and happiness itself, but it is a mode in which truth can be ascertained, and in which the welfare of the whole community can be best promoted. I will venture to say that in no quarter does there now exist such freedom in forming opinions, and such freedom in expressing them, as now exists in our own country. I need not, I suppose, allude to those countries on the Continent of Europe where monarchy is still unchecked by representative institutions. It is not, certainly, worth our while to discuss whether, in those countries, they have greater freedom than we have here; but if we go to free countries, such as France and Spain, where they have representative institutions, we will find that freedom of expression and the liberty of the press are checked by laws—it may be necessary laws—which have been passed within the last few years. But if I leave Europe, and go to a country which many quote as an example of freedom to all the world—the United States of America—even then I do not believe there exists that uncontrolled power of the expression of opinion which we have the good fortune to enjoy in this country. It was but the other day that a gentleman set up a newspaper, with a view to argue the abolition of slavery—that most detestable and un-Christian institution of slavery. His press was seized by force. The persons who seized it sent it away, and told him he was no longer to venture to print anything against slavery, and he was now endeavouring, and probably endeavouring in vain, to recover damages from those persons. They contend that to set up a newspaper which will argue against slavery as an institution is a nuisance which ought to be suppressed by force and violence. Do I ask you, then, without reason—am I not justified in saying that, of all countries on the globe, there are none where is a greater power of forming public opinion, and of expressing that public opinion, from one extreme to the other; from the extreme of declaiming against our Constitution as too democratical, and proposing to go back to the reign of the Stuarts, and to the other extreme of denouncing the Crown and the aristocracy, and endeavouring to obtain the abolition of those institutions. I say, from one extreme to the other there is no latitude of opinion which men may not dare to form, and man may not dare to express. Having given this opinion, my Lord Provost, I will not venture to make any observations upon those laws in the discussion of which I have had to take a share, still less upon other laws which it may be the part of Parliament hereafter to discuss—suffice it for me that, if I am right in what I have stated, public opinion will sift, will weigh, will measure truly—perhaps by a slow process—but will measure in time justly all the proposals of change, of improvement, or, it may be, of restoration, which various persons of various political opinion may from time to time propound. My opinions are, that the Constitution of this country admits of the greatest enjoyment, both of civil and religious freedom. Your lordship has done me the honour to allude to an ancestor of mine, who laid down his life in behalf of the laws of England, then unjustly suppressed, or tyrannically violated. I am naturally proud of being descended from such an ancestor. I believe that his blood was not shed in vain, and that it tended to that revolution which a few years after fixed the representative government—fixed the representation of the people as the governing principle of our institutions; and that blood will not have been shed in vain if the people of these countries wisely and soberly appreciate the blessings that they enjoy; will not be either deceived or blinded by the defects of those in which abuses or defects prevail, but will go on from time to time amending and improving, as the spirit of the age requires, constitutionally extending the liberties and promoting the welfare of the people, and making this country not only happy itself, but an example to all the nations of the globe." His lordship resumed his seat amidst the most enthusiastic applause.

Law.

Rolls' Court.—Lord Nelson v. Lord Bridport and Others.—Lord Langdale on Tuesday gave judgment in this cause, relating to the estate of Bronte in Sicily. The case was heard upon exceptions taken to the report of the Master under a decree referring it to him to make various inquiries with respect to the laws of Sicily. In 1842 a state of facts was carried into the Master's-office, and the parties were to be at liberty to examine witnesses. Plaintiff procured the joint opinion of Rugiero and Cacachi, two Sicilian lawyers, who were examined in the Examiner's-office, where their opinions were stated. It was a joint opinion given bonâ fide in accordance to the law of Sicily. A commission had been issued for the examination of witnesses in Sicily, and both plaintiff and defendant had examined Sicilian noblemen and other witnesses, and each party had carried in their further state of facts. Plaintiff submitted to the consideration of the Master various writings, printed books, documentary evidence and authorities, respecting both the ancient and the modern law of Sicily. Defendants also carried in their further state of facts, and the witnesses in their depositions referred with more or less particularity to several law books which were not produced or authenticated. Amongst them were some not mentioned by plaintiff's witness Viola. Plaintiff afterwards carried in two further statements, containing the case laid before Rugiero and Cacachi, and their opinion thereon. Further statements containing extracts of books were also carried in. The Master refused to admit as evidence the case laid before Rugiero and Cacachi, and their joint opinion, but received as evidence depositions of witnesses which referred to books not produced, and he refused to receive evidence of other extracts from the books tendered by plaintiff. Each party had taken exceptions to the report. His lordship after going into the case with great particularity, said it appeared to him that the joint opinion of the two Sicilian lawyers on the case submitted to them ought to have been received in evidence. He should overrule the first six of plaintiff's exceptions, but should allow the seventh.—Attorney-General v. the Mayor and Corporation of Plymouth.—Lord Langdale on Wednesday gave judgment in this cause, heard in last June, when it occupied several days. The information prayed to set aside a conveyance, dated June 22, 1805, made by the governors of "Sherwell's Hospital of Orphans' Aid," in Plymouth, to the defendants, upon the ground that the two corporations stood in such a relation to each other that the alienation could not stand. The rights of a leat and the profits of a water-course came in question if the deed of 1805 were set aside. The leat was constructed in 1584 to supply Plymouth with water from the river Mevy, and a lease was afterwards granted to the celebrated circumnavigator Sir Francis Drake. The Orphans' Aid Hospital was founded in 1617 by Thomas and Nicholas Sherwell, and endowed with certain property. There was a close connexion between it and the corporation of Plymouth. His lordship then stated the sale, set out in the information, by the corporation of Plymouth, in 1653, to the Orphans' Aid Hospital of one-fourth part of the grist-mills, malt-mills, toll and multure of the inhabitants, and of the leat and watercourse, and of the several closes of land which had been let to Sir Francis Drake, which, by deeds of October, 1653, and May, 1655, were, in consideration of 1400*l.* paid to the corporation, conveyed by them to the Orphans' Aid Hospital, from which time until 1805 the one-fourth part of the produce was accounted for by the corporation to the hospital. In 1805 there was a repurchase of this one-fourth share by the corporation for 1800*l.*, and the conveyance deed to them of June, 1805, now sought to be set aside, was executed. His Lordship now decreed that that conveyance deed should be set aside, but thought that the Attorney-General was not entitled to the declaration he had asked, that the two corporations were not capable of contracting together; and his Lordship directed the minutes of the decree to be drawn up, and to be mentioned on Tuesday week.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—Railway Robberies.—Charles Maynard alias Charles Gregory Maynard, was indicted for aiding and counselling Daniel Garratt in the commission of a felony—to wit, the stealing of a leather writing-case containing 10 sovereigns, and valuable securities for the payment of monies, the property of Vaughan Prance. The indictment in a second count charged the prisoner with receiving the leather writing-case and its contents, well knowing them to have been stolen by the said Daniel Garratt; and in a third count, with receiving them, knowing them to have been stolen by some person to the jurors unknown. The prisoner Daniel Garratt, who had pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him as principal in the felony, was also placed at the bar.—The circumstances connected with the prosecution have latterly been very much before the public in the police reports. It appeared, as stated by Mr. Clarkson, that Mr. Vaughan Prance, a solicitor residing at Nether Stowey, near Bridgewater, was on the 8th July last a passenger by the mail train on the Great Western Railway from Paddington to Bridgewater, and that, among other luggage, he had with him a leather writing-case containing, besides 10 sovereigns, several bills and promissory notes to the amount of upwards of 2000*l.* He surrendered his luggage to the railway porter to be deposited in the luggage van, and on his arrival at Bridgewater the writing-case was missing. Mr. Prance immediately communicated the fact of his loss to the railway company, and an advertisement was published in the newspapers offering a reward for its restoration. This advertisement was answered by a letter proved to be in the prisoner Garratt's handwriting by the Hon. Mr. Petre, with whom he had formerly lived as servant. A liberal reward was in that letter required to be paid for the restoration of the property, and a series of communications by means of advertisements followed, Mr. Prance being anxious to recover his papers, and the directors of the Great Western Railway being desirous of ascertaining and bringing to justice the thief or thieves. At length the prisoner Maynard appeared in the field, and several interviews by appointment took place between him, Mr. Prance, and Mr. Nash, the managing-clerk of Mr. Stevens, solicitor to the railway company. The first interview was the result of a letter addressed by Maynard to Mr. Prance, which was in these terms:—"Sandhurst, July 24, 1845. A stranger called at my office last evening, and represented that he had found a travelling writing-desk and contents, your property. He emphatically asserts that he did not obtain possession of the same dishonestly, for in fact he never received it at all. Now the party has requested me to see you upon the subject, and, if perfected through my agency, you will be so good as to address a letter to my house, 19, Howland-street, Fitzroy-square, London, stating the sum you will give on the papers being given up into your hands. The party is evidently a shrewd man of business, and says the documents are valuable, and further, that no good can be effected with them, unless the creditor has them back again. He has thrown out a hint that 100*l.* ought to be paid as a reward, but he will take 50*l.*, which sum he will have paid into my hands ere he restores the papers, accompanied with a redemption on your part from any ulterior proceedings in the event of future occurrences. The cash may safely be deposited in my hands, as you will soon know on an interview, and the papers (not in my possession) brought to my office within two hours afterwards. I shall be in town on Saturday morning, but must return again into Kent early on Wednesday morning, so I trust the matter will be arranged satisfactorily on or before. I reckon the party is acting under the tuition of some sharp practitioner. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, Charles Maynard, House and Estate Agent." After repeated interviews, in the course of which the prisoner was repeatedly urged to give up the name and address of his principal, which he refused to do, he was given into custody on the charge of receiving the property of Mr. Prance, knowing it to have been stolen. To affix guilt upon the prisoner it was proved by Mr. Prance, Mr. Nash, and Superintendent Collard, that after his apprehension his place of business in Howland-street and his person were searched, and in the former was found, torn up, and thrown under the fire-grate, the draught of the prisoner Garratt's original letter, treating of the restoration of the property to Mr. Prance, and on his person was found a memorandum-book containing entries in shorthand of his meetings with Garratt prior to, contemporaneous with, and following the day the robbery was actually committed. These entries had been translated and transcribed by Mr. Gregory, a professional shorthand writer, and showed not merely a close connexion between the parties in reference to this particular transaction, but also that they had been engaged in other similar matters. The case for the prosecution having closed, Mr. Ballantine addressed the jury on behalf of the prisoner Maynard, and urged that the prisoner had merely acted in the transaction as the bonâ fide agent of a party who was desirous of returning to its right owner property which had been found. He submitted that there was no proof that the property in question had been stolen by any individual, and therefore the prisoner was entitled to a verdict of acquittal. The Common-Serjeant summed up, and the jury, after a moment's deliberation, returned a verdict of Guilty. The certificate of a former conviction of the prisoner Maynard, in 1816, for stealing in a dwelling house, and of his sentence to seven years' transportation for that offence, was put in and proved by Superintendent Collard; but this part of the charge fell to the ground in consequence of the absence of the witness, a man of the name of Potts, to prove the prisoner's identity. Potts was called upon his subpœna, but did not answer. On being called upon for judgment both the prisoners were silent. The Common Serjeant addressing the prisoner Garratt, said, in the case before him he was necessarily obliged to treat his case in the same way, though the prisoner had pleaded guilty, as he should that of any person who had by the jury been found guilty of the offence laid to his charge. The sentence on this indictment was that he be transported for the term of seven years. With respect to the other prisoner—Maynard, interrupting the Court, said—"My Lord, I wish to set at rest a question which has long occupied the public mind: I beg to say that I am entirely innocent of a guilty knowledge that the property was stolen. An erroneous impression has gone abroad that it was in my power to give up the names of parties connected with the Great Western Railway. I now state that I never knew any one in this transaction except the party for whom I was engaged to negotiate. If I had known any others I would have given them up to public justice on public grounds." The Common-Serjeant observed, that the prisoner's statement was an exact contradiction to the decision at which the jury had arrived. In that decision he (the Common-Serjeant) entirely concurred. The sentence of the Court was, that he be transported beyond the seas for the term of 14 years. The prisoners were then removed, but after a short interval of time, Daniel Garratt was again put to the bar, when Mr. Bodkin stated, that the prisoner had pleaded guilty to six other indictments for felony of the same kind, at railway stations, and had made a statement in writing which he desired to have read. The clerk then read the prisoner's statement, which was in the following terms:—"Prison of Newgate, Oct. 31, 1845.—I feel it to be useless to make any attempt to defend myself against these cases, and I desire to plead 'guilty,' although I did not myself take some of the luggage produced against me, but they came to me afterwards; for instance, Dr. Daniel's, on the Great Western, I did not have for some period after the time he stated they were lost, as I have explained to Mr. Nash. I regret that I was in a moment of inebriation tempted to embark in so dishonest a traffic; but the first temptation having succeeded, I could only go on, and to habits of drinking do I attribute my first false step, for it was only when elevated with liquor that I was tempted to meddle in these matters: but I beg to appeal to those kind noblemen and gentlemen with whom I for years lived, and some of whom are on the bench and in the court, as to my general character as a servant. Some of their testimonials are in the possession of Mr. Nash, who, I believe, has ascertained that I bore the highest character. Notwithstanding the extent of these matters I am left without a shilling; my thoughtless and careless habits, my love of dress and drink, have brought me to this; and those who have led me into it from an industrious course of life, have the reflection of doing so, and then leaving me without even contributing one shilling to defend one whose purse and liberal treatment (even to foolishness) they always experienced, and I leave them with that reflection on themselves, and on the insincerity of human nature, in the hour of need and peril to which they contributed. Had I followed the advice and example of my present wife, I should now be a respected member of society. To her I shall ever feel great respect, though I have deeply injured her (who is an innocent sufferer); and to the Governor of Newgate, Mr. Nash, and my attorney, I tender my thanks for their kind consideration to her and my feelings, in the discharge of their duty to the public and to the companies whom Mr. Nash represents. D. GARRATT." The Common-Serjeant remarked, that though the prisoner had pleaded guilty to no less than six other indictments, he should pass sentence upon one of them, and upon that the sentence of the Court was, that the prisoner be transported for the further term of seven years, to be computed from the expiration of the former sentence.

Sporting.

NEWMARKET HOUGHTON MEETING.

FRIDAY.—Match, 50 h ft. T.Y.C. Mr. Vernon's Hartshorn, 8st 7lb, beat Lord Glasgow's f Bay Middleton out of Impertinence, 7st 6lb.—Sweeps of 10 sovs each, for 2-yr-olds: colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 5lb. 9 subs. Lord G. Bentinck's Killie Crankie beat Mr. Greville's Deer Chase, Mr. Mostyn's Sharpshooter, and four others. Won by a length.—Sweeps of 10 sovs each, 3-yr-olds, 7st 9lb: 4, 8st 3lb; 5 and upwards, 8st 8lb. 7 subs. Mr. G. Ongley's Queen of the Gipsies, 5 yrs, beat Duke of Bedford's Captain Phœbus, 3 yrs, and five others. Won by a head.—Match, 50, Mr. Speed's Everton, 5 yrs, 8st 10lb, beat Mr. W. H. Johnstone's Mildew, 3 yrs, 7st. Handicap Sweeps of 20 sovs each, for 3-yr-olds and upwards. 11 subs. Mr. Pratt's Secundus, 4 yrs, 7st 10lb, beat Lord Miltown's Duc-an-Durras, 3 yrs, 7st 8lb; Mr. Mieson's Fair Charlotte, 4 yrs, 8st 5lb; and five others. Won in a canter by two lengths.—Nursery Stakes of 25 sovs each, for 2-yr-olds. 18 subs. Mr. Godwin's Dexterous (h b), 7st 12lb, beat Lord George Bentinck's Green Pea, 8st; Mr. Greville's Polka, 8st 6lb; and 15 others. The first a dead heat between the two first, the deciding heat won cleverly by Dexterous by half a length.—Match, 200 h ft. Lord Exeter's Cocoa Nut, 4 yrs, 7st 11 lb, beat Mr. Carr's Event, 8st 7lb, by half a length.—Match, 100, h ft. Lord Exeter's Wee Pet, 7st 10lb, beat Lord Glasgow's Physalis, 8st, by a head.—Match, 50, h ft; Duke of Bedford's Leopold, 8st 10lb, beat Lord Exeter's f by Velocipede, out of Amaryllis, 8st, by four lengths.—Audley End Stakes of 30 sovs, for 3-yr-olds and upwards. 8 subs. Lord Waterford's Wolf-dog, 3 yrs, 6st 10lb, beat Mr. Meiklam's Trueboy, 3 yrs, 7st 2lb; Lord Warwick's Yardley, 5 yrs, 7st 10lb; and Mr. Whitelock's Fair Rosamond. Won easy by two lengths.—Mr. Payne's Collingwood received from Lord Glasgow's f by Retriever, dam by St. Patrick, 8st 7lb each; 150 h ft. Duke of Bedford's Prologue, 8st 7lb, received from Mr. Meiklam's Grimston, 6st 7lb; 100 h ft. Duke of Bedford's Black Cat, 8st 7lb, received from Lord Glasgow's c by Velocipede, out of Miss Whip, 7st 7lb; 50. Mr. James King's c by Dulcinea, out of Milner, 8st 2lb, received from Mr. Gregory's Le Chourniere, 8st 7lb; 100 h ft.—In regard to the Two-yr-old Handicap (Thursday), Dexterous was examined this morning, and pronounced to be only two years old.

SATURDAY.—Match, 50, h ft. Sir W. W. Wynn's Stoker, 7st 10lb, beat Mr. Langridge's Jessie Hammond, 7st, by half a length.—Match, 50, h ft. Lord Exeter's Cocoa Nut, 8st, beat Col. Peel's Caen, 8st 2lb, by a length.—Match, 100, h ft. Mr. W. S. Stanley's Paulton's, 8st 8lb, beat Lord Miltown's Duc-an-Durras, 8st 2lb, by a length.—Match, 100, h ft. Lord Glasgow's Physalis, 8st 5lb, beat Mr. Greville's Sir Francis, 8st, by a length.—Match, 100, h ft. Lord Exeter's c, by Colwick, out of Mecca, 8st 7lb, beat Lord Glasgow's f by Retriever, out of Emilia, 8st 2lb, by a length.—Houghton Handicap, of 15 sovs each, and 5 only if declared, for 3-yr-olds, &c. 17 subs. Lord Stradbroke's Boarding School Miss, 4 yrs, beat Mr. Meeson's Fair Charlotte, 4 yrs, 8st 2lb, Lord Exeter's Celia, 3 yrs, 7st 10lb, and six others. Won by a length.—Sweeps of 10 sovs each: 2-yr-olds, 6st 7lb; 3 yrs, 8st 7lb; 4 yrs, 9st; 5 years and upwards, 9st 4lb. 6 subs. Lord G. Bentinck's Terrier, 2 yrs, beat Mr. Drinkald's Ohio, 2 yrs, and four others. Won by a length. Sweeps of 5 sovs each: 2-yrs-old, 6st 7lb; 3yrs, 8st 9lb; 4 yrs, 8st 10lb: 5 yrs and upwards, 8st 12lb. 8 subs. Lord George Bentinck's Malvoisie, 2 yrs, beat Mr. Marson's Pawnbroker, 2 yrs, Lord Chesterfield's Subscription, 2 yrs, and five others. Won by two lengths.—Match: Sir J. Hawley's Alamode, 8st 10lb, beat Mr. Vernon's Hartshorn, 7st 6½lb, 50, by a length.—Match: Duke of Bedford's Leopard, 8st 11lb, beat Lord Exeter's f by Velocipede, out of Amaryllis, 8st 11lb, 100 h ft, by a length.—Match: Mr. R. Clifton's Pedlar, beat Mr. Vernon's Hartshorn, 8st each; 25; by a length.—Match: Mr. Pratt's Secundus received from Duke of Bedford's Prologue, 8st 7lb each; 150 h ft.—Match: Sir J. Hawley's Alamode, 8st 7lb, received from Lord Miltown's Colleen Bawn, 7st 7lb, 50 h ft.—Match: Duke of Bedford's Oakley, 8st 10lb, received 60 sovs from Mr. Gulford's Nix-my-Dolly, 7st 10lb; 200 h ft. This race closed a meeting that in the extent, variety, and quality of the sport, has no equal in the records of the turf. The weather throughout was splendid.

Miscellaneous.

Electricity, Magnetism, and Light.—Sir James South on Tuesday last addressed the following letter to the Times, under this title:—"With great pleasure do I communicate to you, that in addition to other scientific discoveries of the highest order made during the last 40 years in the laboratory of the Royal Institution, which have greatly exalted the scientific glory of our country, and have entitled that institution to the gratitude of mankind, Mr. Faraday, its Fullerian Professor of Chemistry, yesterday announced to the members present, that in the prosecution of his researches in electricity and magnetism, he had succeeded in obtaining experimentally what he had long sought for—namely, 'the direct relation of electricity and magnetism to light.' The details of his experiments, which exhibit the magnetization of light, the illumination of the lines of magnetic forces, and a new magnetic condition of matter, will be presented to the Royal Society immediately; but the public illustration of the several phenomena will be deferred till the approaching evening meetings of the members of the Royal Institution."

Interesting Antiquarian Discovery.—The town of Lewes has become an object of great interest to the antiquary, in consequence of an unexpected discovery in that part of the Priory grounds on which the workmen are engaged in the excavations for the Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings Railroad. In digging amidst the ruins of the old priory, the workmen lit upon a hard substance, which, on closer inspection, proved to be a leaden box, surrounded by a few square Caen-stones. After clearing away the soil it turned out to be a cist containing human bones. Further examination led to the discovery that it contained the remains of Gundreda, daughter of William the Conqueror; the name Gundreda being cut upon its lid. The size of the cist is about a yard in length, a foot in width, and 9 inches in depth. The lid, sides, and ends are in excellent preservation, but the bottom is destroyed. The lead is ornamented by being cast in beaded compartments of the lozenge form, 5 inches by 3, and the lid fits on, or rather laps over the sides. Shortly after this curious and interesting relic had been found, the workmen found a second cist, precisely similar in form, shape, character, and material, but somewhat longer. The bottom was eaten away in the same manner as that of its companion, and on the lid was inscribed the word—Willelm, with an abbreviation for the us, an old but usual way of writing Gulielmus. This antiquarians readily interpreted into the name of William de Warren; by this means establishing the fact that these cists contained the remains of Gundreda and her lord, William de Warren, the first Earl of Warren and Surrey, and founder of the monastery. Ancient records prove that Gundreda died in 1085, and William de Warren in 1083, and that both were interred in the chapter-house of Lewes Priory; the latter being, as is stated, "buried in the chapter-house in a tomb adjoining that in which his Countess Gundreda was laid." Gundreda died in childbed at Castle Acre, in Norfolk, and her body was brought to Lewes and buried in the chapter-house, and, to quote from Horsfield's "History of Lewes:"—"The sculptured slab of black marble which once covered her remains in the monastery was discovered about the year 1775, by Dr. Clarke, of Buxted, in the Shirley chancel of Isfield church. It formed part of a burial monument of Mr. Edward Shirley, by whose father probably it was preserved at the demolition of the priory, and conveyed by his directions to Isfield. Dr. Clarke obtained permission of the representatives of the Shirley family to remove the stone from the chancel where it had been so long preserved. It was the intention to replace the stone over the spot where the body of Gundreda had originally been deposited; but as the very site of the chapter-house could not with certainty be ascertained, the stone was placed in Southover church, that being the nearest ascertainable site of its original station." The magnificent priory was destroyed with the other monasteries by Henry VIII., and so complete was the destruction, that, as the Rev. Mr. Horsfield observes, "the very site of the chapter-house could not be ascertained." This point, however, the present discovery will clear up. The cists, with their contents, have been removed to the church of Southover, curiously enough, to the very spot where the stone above referred to is deposited. The bones have been arranged by a medical gentleman; and the public are allowed to inspect them under proper restrictions. Other skeletons have since been dug out, and as the work proceeds further discoveries may be looked for. Mr. Pickford, of Brighton, and Mr. Murrell, surgeons, have examined the bones. They found that they were of a firm texture—indeed, hard solid bones, and in a high state of preservation, especially those of Gundreda. Several of the bones of Earl de Warren were missing, but those of Gundreda were as nearly perfect as possible; and, judging from the length of them, the bodies must have been considerably above the middle stature. The details of the length of the bones are—Gundreda.—Femur, or thigh-bone, 13½ inches; tibia, or leg-bone, 15 inches; humerus, or upper arm-bone, 12 inches; probable height, about 5 feet 8 inches. William.—Femur, 19¾ inches; tibia, 15¼ inches; humerus, 12½ inches; circumference of the shaft of the femur at its middle, 4½ inches; probable height, about 6 feet 1 or 2 inches.

Air Churn.—The Bishop of Derry has invented an atmospheric churn. Instead of the present unscientific mode of making butter by churning, his lordship accomplishes this measure by the simpler manner of forcing a full current of atmospheric air through the cream, by means of an exceedingly well-devised forcing-pump. The air passes through a glass tube connected with the air-pump, descending nearly to the bottom of the churn. The churn is of tin, and it fits into another tin cylinder provided with a funnel and stop-cock, so as to heat the cream to the necessary temperature. The pump is worked by means of a winch, which is not so laborious as the usual churn. Independently of the happy application of science to this important department of domestic economy, in a practical point of view it is extremely valuable. The milk is not moved by a dasher, as in the common churn; but the oxygen of the atmosphere is brought into close contact with the cream, so as to effect a full combination of the butyraceous part, and to convert it all into butter. On one occasion the churning was carried on for the space of 1 hour and 45 minutes. and 11 gallons of cream produced 26 lbs. of butter.—Globe.

Sir John Franklin's Expedition.—The expedition to the North Pole, consisting of the Erebus and the Terror, Captain Crozier, under the command of Captain Sir John Franklin, was spoken by the Enterprise, Martin, master, arrived at Peterhead, lying at an iceberg, in lat. 73 12 N., lon. 62 W., on the 28th of July.

Ancient Price of Agricultural Labour.—In the year 1352, the 25th of Edward III., wages paid to haymakers were but 1*d.* per day; a mower of meadows 3*d.* a day, or 5*d.* an acre; reapers of corn, in the first week in August, 2*d.*, in the second 4*d.* per day; and so on until the end of the month,—without meat, drink, or other allowance, finding their own tools. For thrashing a quarter of Wheat or Rye, 2½*d.*; a quarter of Beans, Peas, Barley, or Oats, 1½*d.* By the 13th of Richard II., in the year 1389, the wages of a bailiff of husbandry was 13*s.* 4*d.* a year, and his clothing once during that time at most; a carter, 10*s.*; shepherd, 10*s.*; ox-herd, 6*s.* 8*d.*; cow-herd, 6*s.* 8*d.*; swine-herd, 6*s.*; a woman-labourer, 6*s.*; a day-labourer, 6*s.*; a driver of ploughs, 7*s.* From this time up to the 23d of Henry IV., the price of labour was fixed by the justices by proclamation. In 1444, 23d Henry IV., the wages of a bailiff of husbandry were 23*s.* 4*d.* per annum, and clothing of the price of 5*s.*, with meat and drink; chief hind, carter, or shepherd, 20*s.*, and clothing, 4*s.*; common servant of husbandry, 15*s.*, clothing, 3*s.* 4*d.*; woman servant, 10*s.*, clothing 4*s.* In time of harvest, a mower, 4*d.* a day—without meat and drink, 6*d.*; a reaper or carter, 3*d.* a day—without meat and drink, 5*d.*; a woman labourer, and other labourers, 2*d.* a day—without meat or drink, 4½*d.* a day. By the 11th Henry VII., 1496, there was a like rate of wages, only with a little advance.—Times.

Suspension Iron Chain of the Thirteenth Century.—M. Navier, speaks of a chain stretched across between two rocks that command the town of Mourtiers, in the department de Basses Alpes. It is 656 feet long, and made of rods about 2 feet 1½ inch long, and ¾ inch diameter, hooked one to the other without any intermediate links. The date of its erection is not certain, but it is supposed to belong to the thirteenth century. It does not, however, appear to have been ever intended for a bridge, but is thought by some to have been an offering to the Virgin to obtain protection against being overwhelmed by the rocks that overhang it. By others it is attributed to a Knight of Rhodes, who is supposed to have erected it in consequence of a vow made during his captivity in the Holy Land. The iron is said not to be injured by rust.—The Builder.

Mr. Duncan, the African Traveller.—It gives us much pleasure thus to be enabled to announce to the friends of Mr. Duncan, who is a native of Galloway, that a letter has reached London from him, that he was at the date of its despatch at Popo, in the kingdom of Dahomey, about 400 miles from Cape Coast Castle.—Wigton Free Express.

A Scene in Court.—"I call on you," said the counsellor, "to state distinctly upon what authority you are prepared to swear to the mare's age?"—"Upon what authority?" said the other, interrogatively.—"You are to reply, and not to repeat the questions put to you."—"I doesn't consider a man's bound to answer a question afore he's time to turn it into his mind."—"Nothing can be more simple, sir, than the question put. I again repeat it. Upon what authority do you swear to the animal's age?"—"The best authority," responded the witness gruffly.—"Then, why such evasion! Why not state it at once?"—"Well, then, if you must have it."—"Must! I will have it," vociferated the counsellor, interrupting the witness."—"Well, then, if you must and will have it," rejoined the ostler, with imperturbable gravity, "why, then, I had it myself from the mare's own mouth." A simultaneous burst of laughter rang through the court.—Land Sharks and Sea Gulls.

Extent of the Oregon Territory.—On the east it skirts 800 miles along the Rocky Mountains, on the south 300 miles along the Snowy Mountains, on the west 700 miles along the Pacific Ocean, on the north 250 miles along the North American possessions of Russia and England. This area or immense valley contains 360,000 square miles—capable undoubtedly of forming seven states as large as New York, or 40 states of the dimensions of Massachusetts. Some of the islands on the coast are very large—sufficient to form a state by themselves. These are situate north of the parallel of 48. Vancouver's Island, 260 miles in length and 50 in breadth, contains 12,000 square miles—an area larger than Massachusetts and Connecticut. Queen Charlotte's or rather Washington Island, too, 150 miles in length and 30 in breadth, contains 4000 square miles. On both of these immense islands, though they lie between the high parallels of 48° and 54°, the soil is said to be well adapted to agriculture. The straits and circumjacent waters abound in fish of the finest quality. Coal of good quality, and other veins of minerals, have been found.—Globe.

Patagonian Guano.—The [ship] George Palmer has arrived in the Mersey, from the coast of Patagonia, with a cargo of about 200 tons of guano, and 100 tons of a substance which is believed to be crystallised ammonia. The guano is remarkably strong, and of a dark colour, and the ammonia (if that is its proper description) appears to be intensely strong. It is in small pieces, many of them about the size of a hazel nut, and is mixed up with the guano. There has not yet been time to analyze any specimen of it, but it is to all appearance a new article.—Liverpool Times.

THE SONG OF STEAM.

(From an American Paper.)

Harness me down with your iron bands;
Be sure of your curb and rein,
For I scorn the power of your puny hands
As the tempest scorns a chain.
How I laughed, as I lay concealed from sight
For many a countless hour,
At the childish boasts of human might,
And the pride of human power.

When I saw an army upon the land,
A navy upon the seas,
Creeping along, a snail-like band,
Or waiting the wayward breeze;
When I marked the peasant faintly reel
With the toil which he daily bore.
As he feebly turned at the tardy wheel,
Or tugged at the weary oar.

When I measured the panting courser's speed,
The flight of the carrier dove,
As they bore the law a King decreed,
Or the lines of impatient love;
I could not but think how the world would feel
As these were outstripped afar,
When I should be bound to the rushing keel,
Or chained to the flying car.

Ha! ha! ha! they found me at last;
They invited me forth at length,
And I rushed to my throne with thunder blast
And laughed in my iron strength.
Oh! then ye saw a wondrous change
On the earth and ocean wide,
Where now my fiery armies range,
Nor wait for wind or tide.

Hurrah! hurrah! the waters o'er
The mountains steep decline;
Time—space—have yielded to my power—
The world! the world is mine!
The rivers the sun hath earliest blest,
Or those where his beams decline;
The giant streams of the queenly west,
Or the orient floods divine.

The ocean pales where'er I sweep,
To hear my strength rejoice,
And the monsters of the briny deep
Cower, trembling at my voice.
I carry the wealth and the lord of earth,
The thoughts of the god-like mind;
The wind lags after my flying forth,
The lightning is left behind.

In the darksome depths of the fathomless mine,
My tireless arm doth play,
Where the rocks never saw the sun decline,
Or the dawn of the glorious day.
I bring earth's glittering jewels up
From the hidden cave below,
And I make the fountain's granite cup
With a crystal gush o'erflow.

I blow the bellows, I forge the steel
In all the shops of trade;
I hammer the ore and turn the wheel
Where my arms of strength are made;
I manage the furnace, the mill, the mint,
I carry, I spin, I weave;
And all my doings I put into print
On every Saturday eve.

I've no muscle to weary, no breast to decay,
No bones to be "laid on the shelf,"
And soon I intend you may "go and play,"
While I manage the world by myself.
But harness me down with your iron bands,
Be sure of your curb and rein,
For I scorn the strength of your puny hands,
As the tempest scorns a chain.

BIRTHS—On the 24th ult., in Rutland-terrace, Stamford, the wife of the Rev. W. H. CHARLTON, of a daughter—28th ult., at Stonegate, Sussex, the lady of the Rev. GEORGE D. JOHNSTONE, of a daughter—28th ult., at Hagley-park, Lady LYTTELTON, of a son—30th ult., in Davies-street, Berkeley-square, the wife of Dr. WOODFALL, of a daughter—30th ult., Mrs. FENTON, of Brettenham-park, in the county of Suffolk, of a son—31st ult., at Adelaide-crescent, Brighton, the wife of JOHN CASSON TURNER, Esq., M.D., of a daughter—1st inst., at Clarendon-place, Hyde-park-gardens, the wife of ALEXANDER COLVIN, Esq., of a son—2d inst., at Bromley, the wife of the Rev. AUGUSTUS G. HOW, of a daughter—3d inst., at 54, Russell-square, the lady of JOHN TIDD PRATT, Esq., of a daughter—4th inst., at Standon, near Eccleshall, Staffordshire, the lady of the Rev. JOSEPH SALT, of a daughter—4th inst., at the house of her father, Sir Robert Graham, Bart., the lady of Major J. H. SIMMONDS, Bengal Invalids. of a son.

MARRIAGES—On the 25th ult., in Taney Church, near Dublin, THOMAS RICE HENN, Esq., barrister-at-law, second son of W. Henn, Esq., Master in Chancery, to JANE ISABELLA, second daughter of the Right Hon. Francis Blackburne, Master of the Rolls for Ireland—28th ult., at St. George's, Hanover-square, HENRY STORY, Esq., third son of the late Philip Story, Esq., to AMELIA, only daughter of the late Edwin Dashwood, Esq., and granddaughter of Sir John Dashwood King, Bart., of West Wycombe Park, Bucks—28th ult., at St. George's, Hanover-square, HUGH OWEN OWEN, Esq., of Llanstinan, Pembrokeshire, to HENRIETTA FRASER RODNEY, daughter of the late Captain the Hon. Edward Rodney, R.N.—7th ult., at Gibraltar, JOHN H. DRUMMOND HAY, Esq., Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General for Morocco, to ANNETTE, second daughter of M. Carstenten, His Danish Majesty's Consul-General for the same empire—30th ult., at St. John's, Paddington, ROBERT WATSON SMYTH, Esq., to LOUISA, youngest surviving daughter of the late John Maxfield, Esq.—1st inst., WILLIAM SIDNEY OATES, Esq., only son of the late Colonel Oates, and maternal grandson of Madame Alexandrine Poulet, neé de Chaistre, Baroness d'Anef of Naples, to CHARLOTTE FLORENTIA, youngest daughter of John Galliers, Esq., late of Stapleton Castle, Herefordshire.

DEATHS—At Auckland, New Zealand, on the 30th of April last, Captain GEORGE AUGUSTUS BENNETT, Commanding the Royal Engineers in that colony, aged 38—23d ult., suddenly at Brighton, Captain CHARLES HARVEY, late of the 10th Hussars, aged 46—29th ult., at the house of her brother, in Upper Baker-street, ANNE SOPHIA, relict of John Mackie Leslie, Esq., of Huntingdon—29th ult., at his residence, Lansdowne-place, Brighton, aged 74, EDMUND, only son of the late W[illegible] Smithe, Esq., of Horsham Park, a Magistrate and [illegible] Lieutenant for the county of Sussex—30th ult., at W[illegible] super-Mare, Somersetshire, aged 67, ANNE, daughter [illegible] late General Count D'Alton, and wife of Warren H. R. J[illegible] Esq., of Castleview, county of Cork, Ireland—31st ult., [illegible] residence, Bank-house, Kempsey, Worcestershire, in his [illegible] day), T. INGLEDEW, Esq., aged 66—1st inst., at his residence, Stand-lodge, Lancashire, JOHN MEIR ASTBURY, Esq.—1st inst., FAULKNOR, the youngest son of Mr. Pitcairn, 27, Broad-street Buildings.

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMAS AND WHEEZINGS ON THE CHEST CURED BY HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—When no other Medicine will afford the least relief in Coughs and Colds, HOLLOWAY'S Pills will almost immediately effect a cure in any case, however desperate, and what is extraordinary, Asthmas and Wheezings, even if of [illegible] years' standing, may be completely got rid of by following the directions which accompany each box of this justly celebrated Medicine. Many who were nearly at Death's door, not being able to lay down in their beds, fearing to be choked with Phlegm, have had Asthmatic complaints so effectually eradicated that not the least symptoms remained. Sold by all Druggists and at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment, 244, Strand, London.

FOR THE HAIR.

BALM OF COLUMBIA.—It is unerring in its operation, highly approved in the leading circles of fashion, and extensively demanded by all who cultivate the graces of the toilette.

IT STRENGTHENS AND NOURISHES,
Exerting a healthy influence and occasioning an ample and luxuriant growth of hair—
PRESERVES,
Where the Hair is already full—
RESTORES,
When weak or falling off—
BEAUTIFIES,
By giving a rich and beautiful appearance.
IT CLEANSES THE HAIR,
And supersedes the use of the fine comb, as the most respectable schools can testify.
THE NURSERY.
The peculiar mildness of the Balm, the action of which can be regulated at discretion, especially suits infancy and childhood. No well-regulated Nursery can dispense with it.
Price 3*s.* 6*d.*, 6*s.*, and 11*s.* per bottle. No other prices are genuine.
OLDRIDGE'S BALM, 1, WELLINGTON-STREET—(the second house from the Strand.)

WANTED A SHOPMAN.—A respectable Man required as UNDER-SHOPMAN in a large country Seed establishment. None need apply but those who can give unexceptionable testimonials as to character and ability.—Apply to A. B., at Messrs. Bunyard and Metcalfe's, Seedsmen, City-road, London.

WANTED A MAN AND HIS WIFE.—The Man as HEAD-GARDENER; he must be under 40 years of age, have a thorough knowledge of his business in all its branches, receive an unexceptionable character from his last place in a gentleman's family, and be fully qualified for a confidential situation. His Wife will be employed in the LAUNDRY or otherwise, according to her capability.—Apply at Wychecombe House, Haverstock-hill, Hampstead-road.

WANTED IMMEDIATELY.—A WORKING BAILIFF on a Property in Surrey of various quality. He must understand the improved modes of Cultivation, and keeping the common Farm Accounts. A North Countryman preferred. Apply in London to A. T. Peterson, Esq., 1, Essex-court, Temple; to Colonel St. Clair, Felcourt, near East Grinstead.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS GARDENER, OR GARDENER AND BAILIFF.—A. MITCHELL, aged 40, and who has just left the service of Lord Vernon, with whom he has lived for the last [illegible] years, during which time he had the entire management in every department of his Lordship's extensive gardens at Sudbury Hall, Derbyshire. For the five years preceding his last service, he superintended the garden, farm, and woods on the estate of the present Duke of Manchester, Tanderagee [illegible] Ireland. Should this meet the notice of any nobleman or gentleman who is in want of such a person, A. M. can present the most satisfactory testimonials from those noblemen he has had the honour of serving.—Direct to A. MITCHELL, at the Office of this Paper.

TO NOBLEMEN AND GENTLEMEN.

AS GARDENER, OR GARDENER AND FORESTER.—A single man, aged 35, of considerable experience, having been employed in some of the first establishments in the Kingdom, offers his services to any nobleman or gentleman in want of a person thoroughly acquainted with every branch of his profession. Can have an unexceptionable character.—Direct to T. T., at C. D. Smith & Co.'s, Nurserymen, Battersea, Surrey.

AS GARDENER, a single Man, aged 37, who has had many years practical experience in the cultivation of Pines, Vines, Peaches, and Cherries, together with every kind of Early Forcing; also the cultivation of Stove, Greenhouse, and Orchidaceous Plants. Can have the highest testimonials from his late as well as from his present employer. No objection to any part of England or Ireland.—Direct to P. G., Post-office, Richmond, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 30 years, possessing a perfect practical knowledge of his business in all its various branches. He can have a good character for four years from the gentleman he has just left.—Direct to J. D., the Office of this Paper.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 34, without incumbrance, and who perfectly understands his business; together with the management of Land and Cattle, if required. His wife is a a good Cook and Housekeeper. They have been accustomed to taking care of Gentlemen's houses and Gardens when the families have been from home. They are both now about leaving their situations.—Direct to B. P., 31, Eyre-street-hill, Leather-lane, London.

LAND AGENCY.

MR. DONALDSON, Professor of Agriculture in the Agricultural College, Hoddesdon, Herts, and author of several Agricultural Works, wishes to be employed in the Management of Landed Property, occasional or permanent. Mr. DONALDSON was regularly bred to practical Agriculture with the most eminent farmers and breeders in Britain, and has had a very varied and extensive practice of the art on the estates of Noblemen of the highest rank. Has been much employed in modern Draining and Planting, in the Erection and Repairs of Farm Buildings, in the Letting of Lands and Drawing of Rents, and in the general Management of Landed Property. Mr. DONALDSON may be consulted on Agricultural Subjects on easy terms, and permanent services obtained at moderate rate. High references for character and capability will be given if required.—Hoddesdon, Nov. 8.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1845.

CROWN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY, 33, NEW BRIDGE-STREET, BLACKFRIARS, LONDON.

London, 15th November, 1845.

NOTICE is hereby given that the Dividend for the year terminating the 15th November instant, declared to the Proprietors of the Company, may be received at this Office any day (Sunday excepted) between the hours of 11 and 3.

Directors.

GEORGE H. HOOPER, Esq., Chairman.
SIR JOHN KIRKLAND, Deputy-Chairman,

John Chapman, Esq. — Jameson Hunter, Esq.
Charles Chippindale, Esq. — Lieut.-Colonel Moody, R.E.
James Colquhoun, Esq. — John Nelson, Esq.
B. D. Colvin, Esq. — Richard Norman, Esq.
Rear-Admiral Dundas, C.B., M.P. — Alexander Stewart, Esq.
Thomas Harrison, Esq. — William Whitmore, Esq
Auditors.—Geo. Hankey, Esq. — William Wilson, Esq.
Thos. Lawrence, Esq. — O. Ommanney, Esq.

Physician.—Sir C. F. Forbes, M.D., K.C.H., 23, Argyll-street.
Surgeon.—Samuel Solly, Esq., F.R.S., 1, St. Helen's-place.
Standing Counsel.—Charles Ellis, Esq.
Solicitors.—Messrs. Hale, Boys, and Austen.
Bankers.—Bank of England. Actuary.—J. M. Rainbow, Esq.

The advantages of this Office, among others, are:—

1. A participation septennially in two-thirds of the Profits, which may be applied either in reduction of the Premium, or to augment the sum Assured.

The following BONUSES have been assigned to all Policies, of at least three years' standing, effected for the whole duration of Life:—

FIRST DIVISION, IN 1832.

From 18*s.* to 2*l.* 12*s.* per cent. per annum on the sums assured, varying with the age, being equivalent, on the average, to 26½ per cent. on the Premiums paid.

SECOND DIVISION, IN 1839.

From upwards of 1*l.* to upwards of 3*l.* per cent. per annum on the sums assured, or, on the average, 33 per cent. on the Premiums paid for the preceding Seven Years.

2. Premiums may be paid in a limited number of annual sums, instead of by annual payments for the whole of life: the Policy continuing to participate in profits after the payment of such premiums has ceased. 3. The Assurance or Premium Fund is not subject to any charge for Interest to Proprietors. 4. Permission to pass the Continental Ports between Brest and the Elbe inclusive. 5. Parties (including Officers of the Army, Navy, East India Company, and Merchant Service), may be assured to reside in or proceed to all parts of the World, at Premiums calculated on real data. 6. Claims to be paid within three months. 7. The Assured may dispose of their Policies to the Company. 8. No charge but for Policy Stamps. The Prospectus, Tables of Rates, &c. to be had at the Office in London, or of the Company's Agents.

T. G. CONYERS, Secretary.

EVENINGS WITH THE GREAT COMPOSERS.

THE SUCCESS which has attended the Lectures delivered by Mr. HENRY LINCOLN, at various Literary Institutions, the crowded audiences which have attended them, and the unanimous approbation with which they have been received, alike by the public and the press, lead to the inference that there is a large body of intelligent persons who are desirous of becoming acquainted with the Great Works of the Great Masters. Mr. LINCOLN has therefore resolved to give a series of

LECTURES, WITH MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS, AT THE WESTERN INSTITUTION, LEICESTER-SQUARE,

in which he will, each evening, offer an outline of the Musical life and labours of one or other of these great men, tracing the progressive development of his powers, marking his peculiarities and characteristics, with such illustrated examples as may best tend to elucidate the subject, and gratify and satisfy a cultivated and refined taste. Mr. LINCOLN proposes in the first instance to devote four evenings—

Dec. 2nd 9th, 16th, and 23d Dec. to Haydn. Cherubini. Cimarosa. Mendelssohn.

Should these Lectures be successful, the Series will be followed by Evenings devoted to Bach, Beethoven, Boieldieu, Gluck, Gretry, Handel, Jomelli, Meyerbeer, Mozart, Paiesiello, Purcell, Spohr, Spontini, Weber, and others—the Master Minds of Europe, various in power and originality, but all of great interest:—some only known by name in England, many only known for one or two works, not one in all the infinite variety in which his genius made itself manifest.

Tickets 2*s.* each, will be procurable at the principal Musicsellers; and Reserved Seats 3*s.* of Mr. LINCOLN, 9, Upper Johnstreet, Golden-square.

This day is published,

FIRST STEPS TO ANATOMY.

By JAMES L. DRUMMOND, M.D.
Professor of Anatomy and Physiology in the Royal Belfast Institution.
12mo, with Twelve illustrative Plates, price 5*s.*
JOHN VAN VOORST, 1, Paternoster-row.

A CATALOGUE OF THE FRUITS CULTIVATED IN THE GARDEN OF THE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY OF LONDON. Third edition, containing the Names, Synonymes, Colour, Size, Form, Quality, Use, Time of Ripening, and many other particulars concerning all the most important varieties of hardy Fruit cultivated in this Country.

Sold at the House of the Society, 21, Regent-street, and also by LONGMAN & Co., Paternoster-row; J. HATCHARD, Piccadilly; RIDGWAY, Piccadilly; RIVINGTONS, Waterloo-place; and by the principal Booksellers in all parts of the Empire. Price 3*s.* 6*d.* to Fellows of the Society, and 5*s.* to others (or, postage free, upon receipt of a Post-office order, price 5*s.* to Fellows of the Society, or 6*s.* 6*d.* to others).

On the 1st of January, 1846 (to be continued Quarterly), will be published PART I. of

THE JOURNAL OF THE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY OF LONDON, containing 96 pages in 8vo, with one Coloured Plate and other Illustrations, price 5*s.

In this work it is intended to publish periodically an account of the Proceedings of the Society, the Journals of the Society's Collectors, Papers on Horticultural Practice, or Subjects connected with Gardening, Reports upon the new Esculents, Fruits, or ornamental Plants, that may be from time to time introduced, an account of all Experiments tried in the Garden, and such other matter bearing upon Horticulture as may appear interesting to the Public. It will be distributed gratuitously to the Fellows of the Society, instead of the 4to Transactions; which will be discontinued after the completion of the current volume.

Fellows, Corresponding Members, and others, are invited to forward communications upon all matters of either theory or practice, to the Vice Secretary, at the House of the Society, 21, Regent-street, London.

MR. JAMES'S NEW NOVEL.

Just Published, in Three volumes post 8vo, price 1*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* boards,

ARRAH NEIL; OR, TIMES OF OLD.

BY G. P. R. JAMES, Esq.

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER & CO., CORNHILL.

Just published, price 2*s.* 6*d.*,

PUNCH'S POCKET-BOOK for 1846.—Illustrated with a coloured Frontispiece and Etchings by LEECH.
London: Published at the PUNCH OFFICE, 92, Fleet-street.

Shortly will be published, reprinted from "Punch," Illustrated by Leech,

MRS. CAUDLE'S CURTAIN LECTURES, as SUFFERED BY THE LATE JOB CAUDLE.
Edited from the Original MSS. by DOUGLAS JERROLD.
London: Published at the PUNCH OFFICE, 92, Fleet-street.

THE AGRICULTURAL CHEMICAL ALMANAC, By FREEMAN ROE, Engineer, 70, Strand, is now ready.

November 20th, will be Published,

JOHNSON'S GARDENERS' ALMANAC FOR 1846.

By an alteration in the arrangement, an addition of more than one-eighth is made to its contents, an increase rendered necessary by the large amount of valuable information contributed for insertion relative to the horticulture of the day. Among this will be found the results of most important experiments from Mr. Barnes, gardener to Lady Rolle, at Bicton, and from other authorities, relative to the Potato Murrain.

Now ready, price 1s., or, with Zadkiel's Legacy, price 3*s.* cloth,

ZADKIEL'S ALMANAC: and HERALD OF ASTROLOGY, for 1846: containing Important Predictions touching the Harvest, the Railway Panic, farther advances of the Papal Power in England, and Overthrow of the Protestant Constitution; Riots in Birmingham and Manchester, &c. &c.; and a Striking List of Fulfilled Predictions; also, ZADKIEL'S NATIVITY.
London: Printed for SHERWOOD, GILBERT, and PIPER, Paternoster-row.

TIMBER AND STONE MEASURER.

Just published, New Edition, long 8vo, price 4*s.* bound,

HOPPUS'S TABLES FOR MEASURING; or, Practical Measuring made Easy, by a new set of Tables; which show, at Sight, the Solid Content of any piece of Timber, Stone, &c.; also, the Superficial Content of Boards, Glass, Painting, Plastering, &c., with copious Explanations of the uses and applications of the Tables. By E. HOPPUS.
London: Longman and Co.: F. and J. Rivington; Hamilton and Co.; Whittaker and Co; Sherwood and Co.: Simpkin and Co.; Dean and Co.; Houlston and Stoneman; and M. Taylor.

THE CORN AND PROVISION TRADES.—The deficiency of the Harvest, the failure of the Potato Crop, and the consequent serious effects upon commercial and monetary affairs, excite great apprehension. Under such circumstances, correct information as to the produce of the harvest, the extent of the failure of the Potato Crop, the state of the markets, the stock of grain on hand, on the continent of Europe, and in the United States, is of the highest importance. No trouble or expense is spared to furnish such information, which is brought down to the latest moment of going to press, in the MARK LANE EXPRESS, which has been for many years the authority in the Corn and Provision Trades in England and in foreign countries. Published every Monday in time for post, and may be had by order of all Booksellers, Newsmen, &c. Office, No. 24, Norfolk-street, Strand. Price 1*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* per annum

Just Published in Royal Quarto, Price 1*l.* 15*s.* bound.

RUSTIC ARCHITECTURE. PICTURESQUE DECORATIONS OF RURAL BUILDINGS, in the Use of Rough Wood. Thatch, &c. Illustrated by Forty-two Drawings; consisting of Plans, Elevations, Sections, and Perspective Views; the Doors, Windows, Chimney Shafts, &c. drawn Geometrically to a large Scale, with Descriptions and estimated Costs. By T. J. RICAUTI, Architect.

"We have repeatedly and strongly recommended this elegant and useful Work, and can safely say, that we think no gentleman who purchases it will be disappointed."—London's Gardeners' Magazine.

JAMES CARPENTER, Old Bond-street.

THE TENANT FARMERS' ADVOCATE.—It is abundantly manifest that the position of the Agricultural Interest as a class is undergoing and must undergo a great change. In such change the relative position of "LANDLORD AND TENANT" will form the most important feature, and the establishment of a sound system of "Tenants' Rights" will be a cardinal point for "Tenant Farmers." For 14 years THE MARK-LANE EXPRESS AND AGRICULTURAL JOURNAL has been the zealous and uncompromising advocate of the TENANTS' RIGHTS, and with the conviction that the interests of the Tenantry are vitally involved in the question, the columns of this Journal will be continuously devoted to its discussion and elucidation. Published every Monday in time for Post. May be had by order of all Booksellers and Newsmen.—Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand, London. Price 1*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* per annum.

HORIZONTAL WATCHES, very Flat. — A. B. SAVORY & SONS, WATCHMAKERS, 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank; price, in silver cases, three and a half-guineas each; or in gold cases, six guineas each. These Watches are accurate and durable, the horizontal escapement being peculiarly suited to combine these important requisites. They are jewelled in four holes, and continue going whilst being wound. A twelvemonth's warranty given with each.

News of the Week.

THE Cabinet Councils which had, last week, excited public expectation by the frequency of their meetings, have been suddenly broken up, and the Ministers have once more dispersed to their country residences, without any announcement of their intentions on the Corn-law question. Rumours, indeed, are current that a difference of opinion prevailed in the Cabinet during the recent conferences; and it is said that while Sir R. Peel was in favour of opening the ports, the Duke of Wellington, Lord Stanley, and the majority of the Cabinet were against the measure. This is probably nothing more than a mere rumour, but it has been sufficiently current to deserve notice; and we may also mention, in the same light, a statement originating with the Ministerial papers, that the Ministers are expected to return to town in the course of a few days, when a Privy Council will be held for the purpose of considering to what day Parliament shall be prorogued from the 27th, to which time it now stands adjourned.

The uncertainty which prevails respecting the policy of our Government on the Corn-law question has given rise to much discussion on the Continent, and the French papers still make it a prominent topic in their columns. There appears to be a universal opinion throughout France that some decided change is at hand, and the papers are therefore occupied in discussing the effects which a suspension of our Corn-law may have upon the interests of France. The Opposition journals contend that the Government ought to prohibit at once any exportation of corn from France until they are satisfied that they have enough for their own consumption; while the Ministerial journals believe that there is no immediate cause to apprehend a famine, but at the same time consider the Government bound to secure the means of subsistence to their own country. The Ministerial crisis in the French Cabinet is at length settled; General Saint Yon has been appointed Minister of War, and Marshal Soult is continued in office as President of the Council.—From Switzerland we learn that Lucerne is likely to become once more the scene of civil commotion. A man named Muller has confessed that he assassinated M. Leu, whose murder caused so much sensation a few months since in connection with the restoration of the Jesuits; and, under the influence, it is said, of torture, the same man has denounced some of the leading men of the canton as the instigators of the deed. Notwithstanding the suspicious character of this evidence, Dr. Pfyffer, a member of the Grand Council, who has been several times a Deputy to the Diet, and held the highest stations in the Law and the Confederacy, has been arrested and thrown into prison on the charge of having bribed Muller to assassinate M. Leu, to whose political principles he was known to be opposed. Dr. Pfyffer's arrest has produced great excitement throughout Switzerland, and the violent party feeling at Lucerne among all classes of the people, has compelled the Government to reinforce the garrison and adopt other decisive measures to maintain the tranquillity of the canton.—From Italy we have accounts of the arrival of the Emperor and Empress of Russia at Palermo on the 23d ult. The Empress, we regret to say, is in a very precarious state of health, and the Imperial family on this account have refused all public honours, and live in the most retired and unobtrusive manner.—From Turkey we have advices to a recent date, which announce that the Porte, contrary to all expectations, has granted the demands of the French Ambassador, and that some important changes, caused doubtless by these concessions, have taken place in the Turkish Cabinet.

Home News.

COURT.—The Queen, Prince Albert, and the Royal family continue at Windsor Castle. Their Royal Highnesses Duke Ferdinand and Prince and Princess Augustus of Saxe Coburg, and his Serene Highness Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg, attended by their suite, arrived at the Castle on Friday evening from the Continent, on a visit to Her Majesty. During the week the royal party have taken various excursions and rides in the neighbourhood of Windsor; and Prince Albert with the Princes of Saxe Coburg have hunted with Sir John Cope's fox hounds, and shot two or three times over the royal preserves. Monday was the birthday of the Prince of Wales, and the day was kept with the usual honours. The visitors to the Queen this week, to meet the Saxe Coburg Princes, have been the Duke of Cambridge, Count and Countess Jarnac, Sir Robert and Lady Peel, the Earl of Aberdeen, Count Dietrichstein the Austrian Ambassador, and Countess Dietrichstein, the Earl of Liverpool, the Marquis of Salisbury, and Sir James and Lady Graham.

The Cabinet.—Sir Robert Peel left Whitehall-gardens on Saturday afternoon for Windsor Castle; Lord Wharncliffe left town on Saturday for Wortley Hall, Yorkshire; Lord Stanley left town on Saturday for Knowsley Hall, Lancashire; the Duke of Wellington left town on Friday for Walmer Castle; and the Earl of Aberdeen left town on Saturday on a visit to Her Majesty at Windsor Castle. It is understood that the Earl of Lonsdale has resigned the Postmaster-Generalship, and that Earl St. Germans has been appointed his successor.

Parliamentary Movements.—The nomination and election for Windsor took place on Saturday. Mr. Walter, finding it impossible to resist the influence brought to bear against him on behalf of Colonel Reid, withdrew from the contest. On the day of nomination

Mr. Rupert Kettle, a barrister of the Oxford Circuit, made his appearance as a candidate on the Radical interest, but declined going to the poll. Colonel Reid was then declared duly elected.—The death of Mr. Irvine, which took place on Monday, causes a vacancy in the representation of the county of Antrim.—Mr. Alderman O'Brien is announced as the Repeal candidate for Cashel, which Mr. Serjeant Stock is about to resign.

The Church.—The confirmation of the election of Dr. Bagot, the new Bishop of Bath and Wells, took place in Bow Church on Wednesday, with the usual observances. Sir Robert Peel has bestowed the Deanery of Westminster upon Dr. Buckland, the well-known Professor of Geology, and at present canon of Christchurch, Oxford. The canonry will, in consequence of an arrangement under the Ecclesiastical Commission, devolve upon the archdeacon of the diocese.

The Colonies—It is stated that Sir George Gipps has been recalled from the Governorship of Australia, at his own request, and that Sir Charles Fitzroy has been appointed to succeed him.

Knighthood.—The Queen has been pleased to confer the honour of Knighthood upon John Augustus Francis Simpkinson, Esq., one of Her Majesty's Counsel, and Treasurer of the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn.

Pensions.—It is stated that Her Majesty has been pleased to bestow a pension of 200*l.* per annum on Lady Shee, the wife of Sir M. A. Shee, president of the Royal Academy, and a pension of 200*l.* per annum on Mr. Alfred Tennyson, the author of "Locksley Hall," "The Lotos Eaters," "Ulysses," "The May Queen," and other poems.

Death of Lord Stuart de Rothesay.—This distinguished diplomatist died on the 6th inst., at his seat, High Cliff, New Forest, Hampshire. For some time past the noble lord's health has been on the decline. It was owing to this circumstance that he resigned the embassy to the Court of Russia, to which he was appointed in 1841. He was formerly minister at the Hague, and as an acknowledgment of the diplomatic skill he displayed during the war with Napoleon, he received from the Prince Regent, in 1812, the Civil Grand Cross of the Bath. Charles Stuart, Baron de Rothesay, was the son of Lieut.-General the Hon. Sir Charles Stuart, K.B., fourth son of John, third Earl of Bute, by Mary, only daughter of Edward Wortley Montagu, Esq., M.P. He was born in the Isle of Bute in 1779. In 1816, he married the daughter of the Earl of Hardwicke, and had issue, 1. Charlotte, who married Viscount Canning; 2. Louisa, who married the Marquess of Waterford. The deceased was raised to the peerage, for his great public services at various courts, in January, 1828. His lordship was a Privy Councillor, and a Knight Grand Cross of the Bath. As he has left no male issue the title is extinct.

Foreign.

France.—The Paris papers are still occupied with the Corn-law question in this country, and particularly with the uncertain movements of the British Cabinet in respect of it. In general these journals display little apprehension of the impending evil; but if it be true that the Potato crop of France is already injured to the extent of one-third, and that the corn harvest in some of the departments has been deficient, the moment is not distant when our neighbours will sympathize in the wants of less favoured portions of Europe. The mystery that on Tuesday rested on the measures to be taken by Sir Robert Peel and his colleagues is treated by the Paris papers as little favourable to the reputation of those statesmen for wisdom or patriotism. The answer given by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland to the address of the meeting of the citizens of Dublin is deemed by the Paris press as "cold, evasive, and every way unsatisfactory." Throughout France the opinion is universally entertained that, from the unhappy condition to which Ireland is reduced by the failure of the Potato crop, it is impossible for the English Government to delay the opening of the ports for the importation of foreign grain, and the leading journals are consequently deeply engaged in discussing the effects which that measure may have upon the interests of France. The Presse, in a leading article, recommends that the Government should forbid the exportation of corn from France before the ports in England are opened for the admission of grain free of duty. "We approve," adds the Presse,

"The determination which it appears the Government has adopted to enforce the power entrusted to it by the customs' laws, to prevent any imprudent exportation. We confess that we are but little affected by the complaints which will not fail to be expressed by the growers of corn whose interest cannot be seriously compromised by such a measure. Some persons advise that the corn over and above what may be necessary for the consumption of the country may be permitted to be exported. We answer this observation by a single question. Are we certain of our next harvest, and do we know whether we may not want next year the superabundance of this? Moreover, the harvest has not been good throughout France, and it will become necessary that the departments most favoured should supply the deficiency of the others. We cannot depend this year on foreign corn to supply the deficiency in the south. Was Odessa possessed of the fabulous fertility attributed to it, it could not suffice for the demands of England as well as ours, and those of less favoured countries. It is therefore to the northern departments that our southern provinces must have recourse. What our agriculturists cannot carry to Dover they will send to Marseilles, which can only with difficulty compete with England in the markets of the Crimea, and all interests will be safe. If the opposition to the export of corn possessed no other advantage than that of giving an impulse to our internal commerce, it would be in our eyes a great benefit for the country."

The Ministerial Journal des Débats is apprehensive that the opening of the English ports may cause a panic on the other side of the Channel, and it endeavours to show that there is at present no real cause of alarm of famine, or even of a great rise in the price of provisions from the opening of the British ports. It compares the present time with the year 1839, when the whole of the country between the Gironde and the Loire was in a state of the greatest excitement, and scenes of violence broke out at La Rochelle, Luçon, Brault, and other places, on account of the exportation of corn, which although not unusually large, and although the prices did not become extravagantly high, excited indignation and produced serious disturbances because the people were at the moment under all the terrors of a famine. It says that the circumstances were then identical with the present, and expresses a hope that the ultimate consequences will now not be more serious than those that followed the momentary crisis of 1839. The Débats then continues:

"In England, in Ireland, in France, and also in some parts of Germany, the harvest of 1838 was a very indifferent one, and as always happens in such circumstances, England, whose wants in general exceed its produce, was obliged, as usual, to make considerable purchases abroad. The price of corn had risen in England to 73*s.* a quarter (about 33 francs per hectolitre), a price higher than it had attained since 1816, and at this price the moveable scale of duties allowed a pretty large foreign importation. Was that importation excessive? It amounted to 7,312,428 hectolitres, that is to say, only double what in ordinary years England requires from foreign countries. Seven millions of hectolitres is, at most, but one twenty-fourth part of the corn of France. Had all this been bought in our markets, the country would certainly have suffered, but it would have run no serious danger of famine. The Government, nevertheless, to calm the public fears, thought it its duty, by the ordinance of the 29th January, 1839, to suspend the exportation of grain, and this was economically, as well as politically, a wise measure, for political parties on the one hand, and speculators on the other, were endeavouring to turn the popular fears to their own profit. Experience soon showed that these fears were exaggerated, and at the end of some months the ordinance was withdrawn, and the trade in corn in our ports resumed its free and regular course. The exportation of our corn during the last six months of 1839, did not amount to more than 870,124 hectolitres, that is to say, double the amount in ordinary years; for let it be remarked that this great foreign commerce of corn which is carried on by France, operates on the re-exportation, one of the most active branches of the trade of Marseilles. The produce of France itself is hardly ever interested in it. But where then did England provide herself? In these very places where speculation will naturally direct itself. In those countries where grain is usually one-third or one-half cheaper than in France. And what was the result even at the moment when speculation and fear combined to raise the prices? At Odessa, Riga, and Dantzic, those great entrepots of corn, the quotations for ordinary qualities remained at 12f., 15f., and 17f., whilst with us the price was driven up to 21f., and in London, at the end of October, the price was 55*s.* 4*d.* per quarter, that is to say, 24f. per hectolitre. If we now calculate the latitude existing between the prices of the Baltic and the Black Sea, even in adding freight and commission, and our present prices—if, besides, we take into account the export duty of 2f. as soon as the price should, by large purchases, be driven up to 25f., it will be seen that French corn would come to 27f. per hectolitre in England, which is a strong protection for home consumption. We are aware that all these calculations would fall to the ground if there were to be at the same time penury in our markets, and a free admission of foreign corn into the ports of England. But the first of these hypotheses is ill-founded. In the first place the wants of England do not appear to exceed, even if they are equal to those of 1839. The price of wheat in England is at 24f., and not at 33f. per hectolitre; and if, on the other hand, the potato crop has failed in Ireland, in Flanders, in certain provinces of Germany, and in some of our departments, the last corn harvest in France, Germany, Poland, and Russia, was, as well as in the south of Europe, generally satisfactory. The entrepots of the north contain large quantities of corn, and it is worthy of remark that it is not more expensive now for the merchants of New York than for those of Riga to send corn to Liverpool. We can affirm that England has given orders for large purchases in America, where wheat and flour are at a very low price. The United States possess immense stores, and that country, which is making rapid progress in agriculture, will certainly offer this year vast resources to those parts of Europe which may be menaced with scarcity and high prices. Having stated this, we willingly admit that, if the English Cabinet should allow foreign corn to enter the English ports free of duty, the event will have a marked influence on the commercial economy of Europe, especially of those countries which export corn extensively, such as Russia and Prussia, and that as far as we are concerned, it will be right to inquire whether any alteration may be made in our corn tariffs. We acknowledge that the question is worthy of serious examination, and that the Government will do well to turn its attention to the preservation of the means of subsistence for the country. Furnished with all the sources of information, it must be correctly acquainted with the state of things, and we are convinced that in case of need it will know how to exercise the power that it possesses. Let us have confidence in its prudence, and not call hastily for extreme measures, the mere announcement of which creates or exaggerates in the minds of the mass a danger which is frequently imaginary."

The Moniteur contains Royal ordinances, appointing General Saint Yon Minister of War, in the room of Marshal Soult, resigned, and creating him a Peer of France. Another continues Marshal Soult in the Presidency of the Council, and attributes his resignation to the state of his health. It is however asserted and believed that the Marshal remains at the head of the Cabinet to obviate the difficulty that his retirement would occasion; and that the proceedings of Marshal Bugeaud have led to his retirement from the War department. One of the journals says that in throwing up the office Marshal Soult passionately exclaimed—"I am not the King of Prussia's Minister of War, and I shall no longer be obliged to have their Bugeaud's despatches copied by my son-in-law, to prevent my clerks from seeing the insolence he is permitted to indulge in."—Some of the papers assert that an expedition on a large scale was about to leave France for Madagascar, but the statement is said to be incorrect. The French and British Governments feel that there is no necessity for any increase of the naval forces in the neighbourhood of that island, and are in perfect accord upon the measures to be taken in the emergency. The legitimist print La France says, "Yesterday, at 10, A.M., in all the churches of Paris, numerous of the faithful crowded round the altars to thank God and send up their ardent prayers. Religious faith and monarchical faith possess mysteries of consolation and hope." This paragraph refers probably to the marriage of her Royal Highness Mademoiselle, the Duke de Bordeaux's sister, which was to have taken place on the 10th at Frohsdorff. Her consort [illegible] Hereditary Prince of Lucca, will become Duke of Parma and Placencia on the death of the Archduchess Maria Louisa, and the Lucca dominions will be annexed to Tuscany.—The Duchess D'Aumale was on May 4 safely delivered of a Prince.—The success of Lieutenant Waghorn's journey from Alexandria by way of Trieste gives great uneasiness to the French Government, and it is probable that steps will be taken to accelerate the passage by way of Malta and Marseilles. The Débats says—

"Whatever may be the ultimate results of this enterprise in itself a serious fact, which ought to awaken all the solicitude of our Government, and induce it to take the most prompt measures to prevent the consequences which would ensue to it to our commerce, should it succeed. The presence of Count Stadion, the Aulic commissioner, and the directors of the Lloyd's company, on the arrival of Mr. Waghorn's boat, the congratulations given to him, the earnest zeal with which Austria lent her aid to him, facilitating by all possible means the success of this his first attempt, the incessant efforts of Trieste to aggrandise itself at the expense of Marseilles, disputing with our port the trade with the richest markets of Asia, disclose a well-conceived and concocted plan in forming and establishing this league of rival interests. To these indications of an indefatigable competition it is advisable to oppose an equally strenuous opposition. It is at this price alone that we can maintain our rights as a great nation, and make our strength and power manifest."

The latest news from Algeria is rather unsatisfactory. It appears that Abd-el-Kader has carried away several of the disaffected tribes from the territory of Algiers and established them in the Morocco territory, where, according to the French accounts, they are preparing to make war in favour of Abd-el-Kader against the Emperor of Morocco. There seems to be no doubt that Abd-el-Kader is gathering together as many of his own subjects as will follow him, for the purpose of founding a sort of wandering sovereignty within the Morocco frontier.—In addition to Mehemet Ali and the Bey of Tunis, on whom "grand crosses" have been conferred, the Mandarin, who has concluded with the French Envoy, M. de Lagréné, the commercial treaty between France and China, has been made a member of the Legion of Honour.—The 20 Jesuits who recently quitted Avignon, on account of the closing of their establishment, arrived at Genoa on the 2d, and took possession of the house which had been prepared for them.—A fusion of six of the companies proposing to bid for the Strasburg Railroad line is announced.

Spain.—The Madrid Gazette publishes a royal ordinance convoking the Cortes on the 15th December next. Before that period no less than 45 elections must take place, to replace members who, since the last session, have vacated their seats, either by death, by voluntary resignation of their functions, or by the acceptation of offices under the Crown. The Madrid Government papers state that several of the elections will be keenly contested, and in some places no less than five or six candidates have already started. It is not believed, however, that there will be anything like a real contest. The Espectador states that the British Cabinet had forwarded a note to the Spanish Government protesting against the marriage of the Infanta with the Duke de Montpensier, at least until the Queen should be married, and have given birth to an heir to the throne. According to El Globo, Ministers had announced to their friends that, previous to the meeting of the Cortes, the negotiations with Rome would be brought to a satisfactory termination, and that Queen Isabella would be explicitly recognised, and the sale of the national property formally sanctioned by the Pope.

Portugal.—We have accounts from Lisbon of the 30th ult., but as usual they contain very little of public interest. The Government has published the basis on which it is prepared to treat with established companies for the formation of railways, and to grant concessions to them; but these conditions contain no novelty except that one of them requires every company which contracts with Government for the formation of any line to deposit with the junta of public credit, as a guarantee for the fulfilment of its contract, bonds in the Four per Five per Cent. Portuguese Funds, in the ratio of [illegible] contos to a league. The new national theatre, recently constructed in the Ionic style, was opened on the 2[illegible] ult. with great ceremony by the King and Queen in person.

Germany.—A letter from Bonn, of October 20th, says:—"All the Catholic archbishops and bishops of Germany have just received an invitation from Rome, to have celebrated with pomp the approaching three-hundredth anniversary of the opening of the Council of Trent. These prelates have addressed to the curés circulars on this point, and to each circular they have adjoined for distribution a great number of copies of a catechism printed at Rome, at the end of which is found the text of the bull, anathematising Luther and his followers. These are significant acts, at a moment when religious questions assume each day greater gravity throughout the whole of Germany."—The Mannheim Gazette mentions a report from Berlin, that an arrangement has been made by the Government with the Protestant States of Germany, for putting an end to the disturbance that has arisen on religious questions. The Abbé Ronge presided on the 30th ult. at a meeting of the members of the Catholic Church of Stuttgard. He congratulated the persons present on their firmness in resisting the menaces of the Roman Catholic priesthood, and declared that the rumour of his having an intention to attack Protestantism was utterly unfounded. All that he required, he said, was a more free constitution for the Catholic Church, a spirit of general charity, love for the members of other sects, and the extension of intellectual and moral education.

Belgium.—The Belgian Chambers were opened on Tuesday with the usual ceremonies. The Queen arrived at the Chamber of Representatives first, and was followed by the young Princes. In about ten minutes after His Majesty arrived, amidst the enthusiastic cheers of the assemblage. Shortly after ascending the throne, he delivered a lengthy speech, in which he took a detailed review of the state and prospects of the country. The speech announced the conclusion of a treaty of commerce and navigation with the United States, and stated that by virtue of a recent arrangement, which will soon be finally sanctioned, Belgian commerce, so far as China is concerned, will be placed on the footing of the most favoured nations. In regard to the Corn question and the recent order for prohibiting the exportation of grain, the Speech says:—"The agricultural interest continues to be the object of the constant attention of the Government. The corn harvest has been on the whole a good one, and although one of the most valuable articles of consumption for the poorer classes has been in a great part destroyed, the resolutions which you have adopted during your extraordinary session have already led to favourable results. They will alleviate that effects of the visitation, and, moreover, afford the means of providing for the wants of the [operative classes, by encouraging useful public works. The state, the provinces, and the rural districts have devoted considerable sums to the formation of roads. The measures proposed by government for the propagation of the best method of cultivating land, for the extension of agricultural information, and the reclaiming of waste soils, will exert a salutary influence upon that grand national interest." In regard to railways, it observes that—"Ever since the national railways have reached the French and German frontiers, the conveyance of goods and passengers, and the amount of the receipts, have rapidly and unceasingly progressed. The results obtained this year have surpassed my expectations. Your last session was distinguished towards its close by the vote of several projects of railways and canals. The favourable reception given to foreign capitalists has led to many demands for the concession of lines. Some of those demands, after being examined, will be submitted to your deliberation. In order to increase the means of affording employment during the winter, the formation of ordinary and useful roads will be zealously undertaken."

Holland.—The Second Chamber, in its sittings of the 8th, adopted the project of law for paying off part of the public debt in 1845, by a majority of 38 to 1. On the 7th, His Majesty, accompanied by his sons, inspected the great steam-engine for draining the lake of Haarlem. The president and two members of the commission for directing and superintending the operations attended His Majesty. This steam-engine acts in a perfectly satisfactory manner. With its 11 pumps it brings up, with five or six strokes of the piston, 360 cubic ells of water in a minute. While the King was there, the pumps gave seven strokes per minute. The King and the Princes expressed their entire satisfaction; and the numerous spectators were much gratified with the scene. The Council of the Grand Duchy of Luxemberg has prohibited the exportation of potatoes by the western frontier of the Grand Duchy, from and including the custom-house at Saegemuhl, to the Prussian territory. The Courrier of Luxemberg observes on this decree:—"Though the situation of our country with respect to subsistence is not such as to occasion any alarm for the future, it is, nevertheless, certain that the prohibition to export potatoes on the part of frontiers above, will at least have the effect of putting an end to the proceedings of speculators, who, by bringing up enormous quantities to send abroad, would have occasioned a rise in the price even at a time when the produce had been more abundant."

Italy.—Letters from Rome state that the recent troubles and the ferment which still prevails do not appear to have determined the Government to make the ameliorations in the Government which the great Powers, and especially France and Austria, have often invited it to make. It seems, on the contrary, exclusively intent on increasing its means of resisting fresh disorders. At a congregation of Cardinals it was recently resolved to contract a new loan for the purpose of forming two new Swiss regiments. The number of foreign troops will by this step be increased to 10,000 men, and the Swiss will replace the national troops in all the great cities of the Roman states.—The Grand Duke of Tuscany, in spite of the protestations of the Papal Government, ordered on the 30th ult. the liberation of the seven chiefs of the late insurrection in the Roman States—viz., Count Beltrami, Biancolli, Pasi, Vettiloni, Renzi (a barrister), Andrini, and Grandi. They arrived at Marseilles on the 31st ult., and were full of expressions of the warmest gratitude towards the Grand Duke and all the Tuscan authorities, by whom they were continually treated with great kindness.—Ibrahim Pasha, who is greatly recovered in health, was to quit the baths of San Quillian on the 28th October, in order to visit Florence, Rome, and Naples. In the early part of January he will go to the Pyrences by advice of his physician. The French Ambassador in Tuscany had arrived at Pisa for the purpose of thanking Ibrahim for the flattering reception which the Duke de Montpensier had met with in Egypt.—The railroad from Pontedera to Florence was opened on the 19th ult.—The Emperor and Empress of Russia arrived at Palermo on the 23d ult. The telegraph having announced their disembarkation, the King of Naples, accompanied by the Count and Countess of Aquila and the Count of Trapani, embarked from Naples, on board the Tancredi steamer, to pay a visit to his imperial guests. The presence of the royal party has completely changed the appearance of Palermo, and from one of the dullest it has become one of the gayest places in Europe. The Emperor and Empress have refused all kinds of public honours, and live in a very retired and unobtrusive manner. The Emperor is to be seen daily in the streets, accompanied only by a valet de place, who has the honour of acting as his cicerone. All the accounts concur in representing the health of the Empress as in a very critical state. The Emperor was expected to leave Sicily shortly for Naples, Rome, and Florence, on his way to Vienna, where it is said he will arrange the preliminaries of a marriage between the Grand Duchess Olga and the Archduke Stephen, son of the Palatine of Hungary.

Switzerland.—The State Gazette of Lucerne, of the 1st inst., contains the following:—"Last evening Jacques Muller, of Stechenzain, confessed that he had assassinated M. Leu with a fowling-piece, in which he had placed a carbine bullet. He told where he had hid this weapon, which was found where he pointed out. He acknowledged besides that he had twice watched M. Leu for the purpose of shooting him. This confession agrees with the result of the official investigation. He declares also that he did not act through a spirit of vengeance, but from being promised a sum of money by M. Leu's political enemies. Dr. Casimer Pfyffer was arrested immediately, by order of the Judge d'Instruction, other arrests have also taken place, and great agitation reigns in the town. Troops have been sent for. The Grand Council is convoked for the 3d inst. It is believed that this confession was extorted from Muller." Great agitation has been excited throughout the whole of Switzerland by this incarceration of Dr. Pfyffer, who is not only a member of the Cantonal Grand Council, but has been several times elected a Deputy to the Diet, and has held the highest stations in the Courts of Law of the Confederacy. The Grand Council of Lucerne have appointed a committee of nine to investigate the charges adduced against the Doctor, whose innocence is upheld with extreme warmth by all the radical papers. Notwithstanding the violent party feeling prevailing at Lucerne the Jesuits were installed there, on the 1st inst., and had taken possession of the old Franciscan convent, and the seminary, without creating any disturbance. The Lucerne Government had, however, reinforced the garrison and adopted measures for the maintenance of public tranquility. General Sonnenberg, who had just returned from Naples to Lucerne, in order to reside there, had been immediately appointed a member of a grand council.

Russia.—Accounts from Warsaw, of the 25th ult., state that in consequence of the fear of a scarcity of corn, the Council of Administration of the kingdom of Poland has resolved to maintain in force till further orders the prohibition to export rye, barley, and oats, and likewise to forbid the exportation of peas, oatmeal, straw, and hay.—The Emperor of Russia has just ordered the promulgation of a new penal code, drawn up with great care by four different committees. Whilst conforming to the tendency and general principles of the legislation of the empire, this code is to contain all the complementary enactments which have become necessary from the modifications that have arisen in the social and moral situation of Russia. It defines more exactly than all preceding codes the quantum of punishment to be inflicted for the various offences, in order to leave as little latitude as possible to the judge. Four years have been devoted to this work, which is to come into operation on the 1st May, 1846.

Turkey.—The Journal des Débats announces the receipt of letters from Constantinople of the 23d ult., which state that the Turkish Government, frightened by the threatening position taken by the French Ambassador at Constantinople, has yielded to all his demands, both in respect to the punishment of the Druse chief accused by the French consul at Beyrout of the murder of a French priest in the Lebanon, and with respect to the order issued by Chekib Effendi for the removal of all strangers from the mountain during the time the Porte was taking measures to pacify that country. The following are the terms in which the affair is announced in the Débats:—"We are happy to be able to announce that the differences which have arisen between the Porte and the ambassador of France have been settled, and that entire satisfaction has been given to the demands made by the Baron de Bourqueney. The ambassador had demanded the punishment of the murderers of Father Charles, a priest placed under the protection of France, who was massacred in the Lebanon, in the month of May last, and had also protested against the order given by Chekib Effendi, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and commissioner of the Porte in Syria, for all European subjects to quit the mountain. The Baron de Bourqueney had given in an ultimatum to the effect that French subjects should be immediately replaced in their establishments, and that an indemnity should be granted to those who had been compelled to quit them in consequence of the refusal of protection—that the sheik Hamoud should be summoned to Constantinople, and that he should be tried for his conduct in the events of May—that the guilty parties should be sought out, and that the Porte should pay indemnities for the sack of the convents of Abey and Solima, and that the officer who commanded the detachment of troops present at the sacking of the convent of Abey be punished. This ultimatum has been accepted entirely by the Porte. The necessary orders were sent to Chekib Effendi two days after, and M. Bourée, consul of France, started immediately for his post to watch over the execution of these orders." Accounts from Constantinople of the same date also mention that some important changes have been made in the ministry. Redschid Pacha, at present ambassador in Paris, is appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs, an appointment which is likely to give satisfaction. Sarim Effendi, a present ambassador in London, goes in the same capacity to Paris, and Chekib Effendi, the late Minister of Foreign Affairs, and at present commissioner in Syria, goes as ambassador to London.

West Indies.—By the Avon steam-ship, we have accounts from Jamaica to the 9th ult. The news is favourable, though scanty. The weather was fine, with an abundant supply of rain in most places. The sugar crops were looking well. The best description of coffee would yield badly, having suffered more by the drought than the ordinary and inferior qualities, which are less damaged. A growing feeling in favour of free labour is expressed, and it is the opinion of many that if they had a better supply of labourers they would not fear being able to compete with Cuba-grown sugar. They have not, as formerly, to lay out a large sum of money in the support of slaves, having been compelled to maintain them whether able to work or not. They find it now more advantageous to pay the negro 1*s.* 4*d.* or 1*s.* 6*d.* for his day's work, and only hire him when he is wanted on the estate. The Hill Coolies continue to give great satisfaction to their employers. Montserrat had come to the determination of seeking for an abrogation of its charter of constitution, and connecting themselves with Antigua, both legislatively and judicially. The new House of Assembly of Antigua had assembled and received an address from Sir C. Fitzroy, to which a lengthy answer was returned. While Montserrat is seeking to get rid of its Legislative Assembly, Trinidad, which has always hitherto been governed by the Governor and Council alone, is stirring itself to get a popular representative body. Great excitement at present prevails on the subject, and a petition has been got up to the Queen praying for the establishment of a representative Legislature.

City.

Money Market, Friday.—Three per Cent. Consols, 96¼ to ⅜; for the Account, 96¼; New Three-and-Quarter per Cent., 97⅛ to 97; Bank Stock, 202 to 200½; India Stock, 260; Exchequer Bills, 21*s.* to 24*s.* prem.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK.

TUESDAY—BANKRUPTS—T. Miller, Mansell street, Goodman's-fields, Oil and Colourman—S. Stocker, sen., St. John-street, Clerkenwell, Hydraulic Engineer—C. H. White, Gravesend, Linendraper—J. Challen, Odiam, Southampton, Brewer—G. H. Watton, New Bond-street, Tobacconist—W. Ward, Belton Rutlandshire, Farmer—G. Abraham, Great Prescott-street, Goodman's-fields, Watch Manufacturer—W. R. Parsons, Limehouse-causeway, Middlesex, Baker—J. Kirkby, Shop-lane, Kirkeaton, Yorkshire, Fancy Manufacturer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATION—J. Walton, Aberdeen, Merchant.

FRIDAY—BANKRUPTS—J. L. Boorman, Gravesend, Silversmith—J. Smith, Crescent, Jewin-street, City, Wholesale Hardwareman—G. Clayton, Queen's-place, Queen's-road, Hornsey-road, Holloway, Builder—D. Frenchen and S. Paica, Dover-street, Piccadilly, Tailors—W. H Boxo, Bow-lane, Cheapside, Ale Merchant—T. Svanden, Maidstone, Brewer—G. Davis, Borough, High-street, Southwark, Saddler—J. Emmins, Princes-road, Nouinghill, Builder—L. Lang Charterhouse-square, and Charterhouse-street, Private Boarding-house-keeper—J. Newsham, Oxton, Cheshire, Joiner—R. Bentley, Liverpool, Hosier and Small-ware-dealer—H. Lewis, Birkenhead, Cheshire, Builder.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Lord Mayor's Day.—On Monday, the inauguration of Alderman Johnson, as Lord Mayor for the ensuing year, took place with the usual ceremonies and procession. After the formalities at Westminster Hall had been gone through, the corporation returned to Guildhall, where the usual dinner in honour of the event was given with great splendour and liberality. After the loyal toasts had been duly honoured, Sir G. Cockburn responded to the toast of the Navy. It gave him great satisfaction to acknowledge that compliment on the part of the profession to which he had the honour to belong. He was satisfied that all around him felt how intimately connected the character of British sailors was with the general interests of the nation; and he felt pleasure in assuring them that the navy was in a most efficient state, and that they would be always found ready when their services were required to vindicate the honour of the country. Sir J. Graham returned thanks for the toast of Her Majesty's Ministers. He said that on the part of Ministers he felt great pleasure in returning thanks for the toast which had just been proposed. In the first place, he hoped they would permit him to offer an excuse for his right honourable friend at the head of the Government, who was unavoidably absent, and whose presence on that occasion nothing but severe indisposition, from which he had now partially recovered, could prevent. For his right hon. friend who was absent, for himself, and for his colleagues, he could state that it was an object of the most sincere pleasure and satisfaction to receive the invitation of the Lord Mayor and the citizens of London, to be present at that assembly, for they felt that, as had been truly stated by the Lord Mayor, the prosperity and interests of the city of London were intimately connected with the trade, the welfare, and the spread of the domestic prosperity of the country generally. The administration of the public affairs of such a great country as this must necessarily be always an arduous task, for from time to time occasional difficulties must arise which no human prudence could anticipate, and which no human wisdom or power could avert. The Lord Mayor had said that the present Government possessed the confidence of the country. Of course he (Sir J. Graham), however he might agree in that statement, could not presume that in so large an assembly as that which he saw around him, some difference of opinion should not prevail; but when he looked around him and saw the important meeting then assembled, and when he perceived those whom he recognised as the representatives of the wealth, the intelligence, and the enterprise of this great nation, he felt that whatever difficulties Ministers might encounter, they would be supported so long as they persevered in maintaining one honest purpose of—without favour or affection—devoting their abilities to the welfare of the nation. They must feel great encouragement in receiving such a compliment as that which had just been paid to them; and, for himself, he would say that he was, from the office which he held, intimately connected with the civil authority of the country, and he had pleasure in acknowledging that in all circumstances and on all occasions he had met with the cordial assistance and co-operation of the city of London, in upholding the authority of the law, and maintaining that peace and order which were so necessary in such a country. He congratulated the chairman on arriving at the highest civic honour, and he would conclude by proposing to them the health of "The Right Honourable the Lord Mayor." The Lord Mayor returned thanks, and proposed, among other toasts, "The Foreign Ministers," "The Lord Chief Justice Tindal and the Judges," "The Court of Aldermen," "The Attorney-General and the Bar of England," and "The Sheriffs," &c.

Elopement of Lady Adela Villiers.—Last week a great sensation was caused in fashionable circles by the announcement of the sudden disappearance of Lady Adela Villiers, youngest daughter of the Earl of Jersey. The young lady, who is only 17 years of age, was remaining with her father, the Earl of Jersey, at East Lodge, Brighton, the Countess of Jersey, accompanied by Lady Clementina Villiers, and Prince and Princess Nicholas Esterhazy, having gone on the day previous to Arundel Castle on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk. At dusk on Wednesday Lady Adela was in the drawing-room with Lord Jersey, and affectionately took leave of his lordship to, as she stated, go to the nursery, but at the dinner-hour she was nowhere to be found, and on inquiries being instituted as to the cause of her absence, it was ascertained that her ladyship had some time previously passed through the lodge-gate with a small bundle in her hand. It subsequently transpired that shortly after 5 o'clock on Wednesday evening, as Lady Adela left the lodge-gate, a public fly was in readiness, by which her ladyship, in company with a gentleman, was conveyed to the railway terminus, and proceeded to town by the half-past 5 o'clock train for London. On their arrival in the Metropolis, they must have gone direct to the Birmingham Railway at Euston-square, and left by the mail train for Newcastle, en route to Carlisle, on their way to Gretna-green; so that when it was discovered at Brighton, that Lady Adela had so unaccountably disappeared, the lovers were on the road to Scotland. It was also ascertained that her ladyship remained in the fly at the station till the bell rang for the train to start. The Hon. Captain Frederick Villiers having heard on Thursday morning of the absence of his sister, immediately started by express to Gretna, it having then been only surmised that Lady Adela had eloped. On his arrival at Carlisle he there gained the information that a young lady, answering exactly in description to her ladyship, and a gentleman, had passed through that place. On his arrival at Gretna Green, he was informed that on Thursday afternoon, at four o'clock, a marriage was solemnized and lawfully concluded between Captain Charles Parke Ibbetson and Lady Adela Villiers. Thus within 23 hours after their departure from Brighton the ceremony was performed. It appears that various adventures happened to the fugitives during their rapid flight. On arriving at Gretna they learned from the landlord of the inn, who is also the officiating Minister on these occasions, that the Duchess of Sutherland and family had changed horses only a few hours previously on their way to the north, so that they had a narrow escape of being recognised at the moment when they thought everything secure. The landlord, as we have stated, unites the somewhat irreconcileable characters of Boniface and Priest in his own person. At the moment of the arrival of the fugitives he was presiding at a dinner, the guests at which consisted chiefly of a staff of engineers, who are just now pursuing their avocation in this hitherto peaceful neighbourhood. A very short interval occurred, however, before a person entered the room, who delivered what appeared to the guests to be a sort of mysterious message to the chairman, but which in reality was simply a summons to attend "a lady and gentleman who had just arrived from London, and were waiting his presence in 'the saloon' up-stairs." The landlord immediately vacated his post at the head of the table, and forthwith proceeded to perform the ceremony. The curiosity of the engineers and other gentlemen of the party above alluded to, was of course excited by the sudden disappearance of their host from the dinner-table, and subsequent whispers rather increased than diminished the same. When the period arrived for the departure of the newly-married pair, these gentlemen had congregated near the entrance of the hotel, and having gratified their wishes, so far as a view of the parties was concerned, they gave three hearty cheers as the carriage drove away. A farmer's boy was placed upon the leading pair of horses, owing to a lack of postilions; but despite this inconvenience, and not very first-rate cattle, the party reached Langholme, a distance of 16 miles, and the first stage upon the old road to Edinburgh, before 6 o'clock. Relays of horses were here provided, and the travellers again proceeded onwards, arriving about 8 o'clock at Moss Paul, a lone hostelrie, the property of the Duke of Buccleugh, situate about midway between Gretna and Hawick. At this place they rested for the night, intending to proceed early the next morning on their way to Edinburgh. Captain Charles Parke Ibbetson entered the 4th Dragoon Guards as cornet, in 1835, and in 1837, purchased a lieutenancy in that regiment. He subsequently changed into the 11th Hussars (Prince Albert's Own), in which regiment he holds the commission of a captain of the date of June, 1843. The gallant officer is son of Mr. Henry Ibbetson, of the firm of Ibbetson and Son, proctors and notaries of Great Knight Rider-street, and of Chester-terrace, Regent's Park. He first met Lady Adela Villiers at Almack's during the last season. The plans of the elopement were so well arranged that, with the aid of the railway, to overtake them was an impossibility. It seems that unknown to the Earl of Jersey's family a clandestine communication has been maintained for some months past by the youthful lady and her gallant admirer, but so secretly that not the slightest suspicion was excited even among the closest attendants of her ladyship. The Earl's family were not personally acquainted with Capt. Ibbetson, but on application to the Horse Guards, the Duke of Wellington gave Lord Jersey satisfactory assurances of the high character of Capt. Ibbetson as an officer, and thus removed much of the distress caused to the family by the first announcement of Lady Adela's elopement with a stranger.

St. Stephen's, Walbrook.—A parish meeting was held last week in the vestry-room of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, "to consider the state of the church and other business." The chief business of the meeting consisted of the account given by the churchwardens of the probable result of the actions at law against Alderman Gibbs. There was little novelty in the facts stated, and the proceedings appeared to excite little interest, for there were not more than 20 persons present. The chair having been taken by Dr. Croly, the rev. gentleman proceeded to say that they were called together for the purpose of ascertaining, at the end of 12 months, what had been the result of the legal proceedings instituted by the parish—the action at law and the bill in Chancery.—The Clerk of the Parish said that the Master in Chancery had prepared a report, which would be finally settled in the coming term. One of the results of that report would be a considerable deduction in the large amount for law charges demanded by Alderman Gibbs; and that there were other questions now open for discussion before the master, from the settlement of which he anticipated a considerable reduction, if not the total annihilation of Alderman Gibbs's claim. With regard to the common law action, the parish authorities had had a vast amount of difficulty; but he had attended last night a conference with their counsel, when the special case, so far as they were concerned, was finally settled. In the opinion of their counsel there was the strongest probability, almost certainty, of the restoration of the rights of the parish. They were anticipating a settlement of the question in dispute in the ensuing term. Dr. Croly then made a long speech severely condemning Alderman Gibbs's conduct in withholding his accounts, and stated that his own stipend, and the salaries of the organist and other officers of the church were still unpaid.

Opening the Ports.—On Tuesday evening a numerous meeting of the parishioners of St. Paul's, Covent-garden, was held in the vestry-room, to petition the Queen for the admission of foreign corn and provisions, duty free. Resolutions, expressing the feelings of the meeting, that it was their duty as men and as Christians, to endeavour by every means to avert the coming danger of threatened famine, and that the most effective means would be to open the ports, were passed, and a petition to the Queen, to that effect, agreed upon. —We learn also from the country papers that a similar feeling in favour of the measure prevails in all the leading towns of the kingdom. The corporations of Manchester, Liverpool, Edinburgh, Sunderland, and Newcastle-on-Tyne have adopted memorials to the Government or the Privy Council praying for the immediate opening of the ports, in order to save the country from the dangers of the threatened famine.

The Assam Company.—On Tuesday, a special general meeting of the proprietors of this Corporation, established to promote the cultivation of the tea plant in Upper Assam, was held for the purpose of declaring a dividend, for the receipt of a report from the directors, and other affairs. The chair was taken by Sir G. Larpent, Bart., who read the report of the directors, after remarking that, since the report had been drawn up, more satisfactory accounts had been received. The following are the material points in the report:—"In the first place they have to congratulate you on the attainment of an object, which, from the commencement, they have always deemed of paramount importance, viz. the incorporation of the company. The last advices received from Calcutta have brought us the gratifying intelligence that the act incorporating the Assam Company had just been passed by the Governor General in council, and we have the pleasure to inform you that the act itself is perfectly satisfactory. By this measure the Assam Company has become a corporation, your liability, as shareholders, has been limited, and the business of the company will henceforth be carried on with all the facilities which the corporate character affords. Your directors have not received an account of the produce of the current year, and are unable to inform you of its probable amount. But in consequence of an unusual and extraordinary drought in the province, during the months in which the first pickings are gathered, which retarded the vegetation of the plants, they have reason to believe that the produce will fall somewhat short of their expectations, but to what extent they have no means of knowing. The only accounts of the manufacture that have been received, are up to the 30th June, including four months out of the eight of the tea-making season, to which period about 100,000 lbs. of tea had been made. Great attention is now being bestowed in India on the classifying, sorting, and packing of our teas, and your directors hope that an improvement in these important details will give the produce of the current year a higher character and greater value in our market. The greater part of the produce of 1844 has now been received, and a sale took place on the 5th inst. Your directors believe that the concern is now being worked to profit, although to what extent they will probably not have the means of ascertaining with accuracy until they have seen that the expenditure continues to be kept down to the present amount. They consider, however, that by making a dividend of 10*s.* a share out of the profits of the company they will be on the side of safety, and will have ample funds remaining in their hands to carry on the concern for the ensuing year. Accordingly they have declared a dividend of 10*s.* a share to be payable to the shareholders who shall stand registered in the company's books on the 1st January next."—Sir G. Larpent said, that the act of incorporation had, as passed in India, received the approval of the legal advisers of the company. There would, after paying the amount of the dividend, and after providing for the expense of the crop of 1846, including home charges, remain a considerable balance. The directors had enforced the necessity of strict economy in Assam, as that was the best policy in all establishments, especially in the infancy of such a one as this. It was not contemplated that the whole expenses in Assam would exceed 1000*l.* a month. The attention of the court had been directed with earnestness to the improvement of the quality of the teas. The prices realised at the last public sales of Assam teas were as follow:—For 221 chests from 2*s.* to 2*s.* 6*d.* per lb., for 31 chests 3*s.* per lb., for 306 chests 1*s.* 6*d.* to 2*s.*, for 356 chests 1*s.* 3*d.* to 1*s.* 6*d.* per lb., and for the lower breaks reduced rates. The Assam Company's teas were now taken by the trade currently throughout the country.—Mr. Tite considered the report most satisfactory. The produce of last year was 186,644 lbs. It was expected that the crop this year would be much more considerable, but the drought that had prevailed would, as he understood, prevent the yield coming much above that of last year. Was that the case?—The Chairman replied in the affirmative; but the returns of this year's crop only embraced the pickings of a few months.—In reply to some remarks respecting the dismissal of Mr. Bruce, the secretary, Mr. Prideaux remarked that that gentleman had been engaged at the outset of the concern for 10 years. The directors had not been satisfied with his administration, and had compromised his claim for one year's salary, or 1250*l.* It was incidentally remarked, that the charter of the Assam Company in India was for nine years only, but that there was no doubt of its renewal, as no other company had a standing there but the Assam Company. —After the adoption of the report, a vote of thanks was passed to the directors.

Early Closing of Shops.—On Tuesday night a meeting, promoted by the Metropolitan Drapers' Association, was held at Exeter-hall to advance the objects of that body, viz., an earlier termination to the hours of labour in all businesses. Lord R. Grosvenor on taking the chair said, the meeting had been called to devise some means of checking a most serious evil. Since 1814 a great indifference had grown up to the wants of the producers of that wealth which was the glory of this country. The fruits of this feeling were to be found in the prolonged hours of labour of the agriculturist and the artisan. Men act now-a-days as though the country could go on and prosper by itself. But there was no such security, and the hardening and corrupting influence of the mania for money-getting, at this present moment so prevalent, seemed to be inflicted as a punishment for former ingratitude. That mania would, if not speedily counteracted, sap and undermine the foundations of the country. The Metropolitan Drapers' Association had been working on behalf of an abbreviation of the hours of labour firmly, but properly, and in a conciliatory manner. Many of the large establishments had already acceded to the desires of the working community; but he (Lord Grosvenor) regretted to say that in the majority of shops in this metropolis the old debasing system was continued. This was to be attributed to two causes—one the vis inertiæ, or disinclination of persons to adopt any new mode of business, the other reason was the want of energy on the part of those assistants who still held aloof from the association. Were all the assistants to join, the objects of the body would be gained for all trades. The following resolution was then moved by Mr. Grainger, and carried unanimously, "That this meeting, being impressed with the conviction that the late hour system is fraught with numerous physical and moral evils, fully sympathises with the efforts of the Metropolitan Drapers' Association to obtain its abolition; and hereby pledges itself individually aad collectively to use every means in its power to co-operate with the association in carrying out its object."—Mr. Wakley, M.P., in a speech of some length, which was loudly cheered, moved a resolution "That this meeting, believing the mainstay of the late hour system to be the habit on the part of the public of evening shopping, and that it is above all things necessary to point out to the public the nature of the evil they are thus unconsciously upholding, cordially approves of the plan of the Metropolitan Drapers' Association to send a prize address to every house in London, and hereby records its willingness to assist, by such contributions as each can afford, to raise the fund requisite for so important a step."—Mr. Bennock seconded the resolution, and stated that the association intended to publish tracts to be distributed in every house throughout the metropolis. The resolution was carried unanimously, and several donations were announced. The meeting was so crowded that it filled the entire of the enormous hall.

The Eclair Steamer.—In the absence of any further report on the state of the Eclair steam-sloop by the Superintendent-General of Quarantine, the following summary of the fatality on board that ill-fated vessel, which is as correct as the absence of official documents will allow, may be interesting to our readers:—Out of a complement of 146 officers and men, 110 have been attacked with fever, of whom 71 have died (exclusive of Mr. Saunders, the pilot), and 39 only have recovered—a fatality greatly exceeding that of the late Niger expedition, where more persons were attacked, but less died by nearly one-half. The results of that expedition were that out of 145 whites, 130 were attacked with fever, and 40 died, or 1 in 3.25 of the attacked. Only 15 persons escaped the fever; but some of them afterwards suffered from disorders, which were probably brought on by the voyage. In a second attempt to ascend the river by one steamer, out of 8 white persons, 7 were attacked, and two died. As an indication of an acclimating influence, it is remarkable that out of 158 blacks, 41 only were attacked with fever, and not one died. In the case of the Eclair the Kroomen have entirely escaped the fever. The deaths at the different epochs were as follows:—up to the 23d July, from the common coast fever, 9; on the voyage from Sierra Leone to Buena Vista, 14; at Buena Vista, between the 21st August and the 13th September, 32; on passage to Madeira (arrival 19th September), 3; on passage from Madeira to the Motherbank, 5; at the Motherbank (arrival 28th September), 2; at Standgate-creek (arrival 28th October), including Mr. Saunders, the pilot, 7; total, 72.

Seizure of Illicit Spirits.—A seizure of almost an unprecedented character was on Saturday last concluded by Mr. Davis, one of the detective officers of Her Majesty's Customs. In July last the same officer made a capture in the Globe-road, Stepney, of a most complete and extensively-fitted distillery, with upwards of 1000 gallons of spirits, 52° over proof, and the materials alone, exclusive of the spirits, amounted to 40 waggon loads. In the course of his search certain documents fell into the hands of Mr. Davis, from which a clue was obtained that several thousand gallons of spirits had been recently removed from the premises; and from that time to the present his exertions have been unceasing to discover where this immense stock had been deposited. It appeared that, in 1844, this officer found a large still on the premises of persons going by the name of "Berkeley and Co.," of Grove-lane, Holloway, but in consequence of the still being unset he could not legally seize it, but before leaving the house he wrote his name upon it. This still was afterwards found on the premises in the Globe-road. The solicitor of Berkeley and Co. threatened the officers with actions for trespass, but none were ever entered. On searching the premises in Globe-road several documents were found from the same solicitor to the parties there, clearly showing that Bayley Brothers (the name they went by in the Globe-road) were identical with "Berkeley and Co.," of the Holloway-road. The solicitor had drawn up certain legal documents, by which Bayley Brothers, had been enabled to mortgage the spirits to various persons for large sums of money. After watching the removal of the spirits from place to place, Mr. Davis proceeded to the premises of Mr. George Firmin, tartaric acid maker, in Rupert-street, Goodman's-fields, where he found 57 carboys, containing 18 gallons each of spirits of nitre, which he seized. He also found 36 empty carboys, which, from marks upon them, proved to have been received from the same source. He then went to the warehouses of Foote and Co., of Battersea, where he got 19 carboys of the same kind of spirits. From Foote's he went to Price's, also of Battersea, where he found nine carboys more. As each seizure in some degree assisted the officer in his search, he proceeded from place to place with the fullest confidence. In the stable of a man named Smith, in the Maze, Tooley-street, concealed in some straw, he found ten carboys, and two casks of molasses; and from thence he proceeded to St. John's-wood-road, where in a stable belonging to Abraham Grey he found a similar number. At the house of a corn-chandler named Hastie in Wapping, he added 12 carboys to his already valuable prize, consisting of 12,510 lbs. of the costly spirit, which exclusive of the duty, has been valued at no less a sum than 2000*l.* Proceedings are already commenced by the Excise against the parties for penalties to an enormous extent, for harbouring this illegal article. Had the duty been paid on merely what has now been seized by Mr. Davis it would have amounted to upwards of 800*l.* To avoid suspicion in the removal of the spirits from the distillery, the carboys were taken out separately and deposited in the warehouses of a common carrier, near the City-road basin, and from thence removed by the carrier's carts, as ordered by Bayley himself, the more securely to ensure their delivery unobserved by any district officers. To show that a visit from the Crown officers had been anticipated, as a precautionary measure, each workman employed upon the premises of the distillery was provided with a blank letter, with the exception of the signature of the holder, and the receipt of it was at once understood that the sender was "in trouble," or detected in an illegal act; and if either bail or money was required for his liberation, he had nothing else to do but to date the same, and send it to the before-named member of the legal profession, when every assistance would be rendered him, the advocate ostensibly only attending in his professional character. It is said that other most important details of this organised system of smuggling will appear in a few days compromising some of the largest firms in London. It is right to add that the solicitors of Messrs. Foote have addressed a letter to the Times stating that their clients "received the carboys from Messrs. Bayley and Co., in the regular and open way of business, the facts relating to which were immediately after the seizure, and without disguise, laid before the Commissioners of Excise."

The New Overland Route to India.—Mr. Waghorn has addressed a letter to the Times containing the following particulars of his recent journey:—"In the first place, the Semiramis steamer was 19 instead of 17 days between Bombay and Suez, thus a loss of two days to my express. Again, we were six days and a half between Alexandria and Trieste, in consequence of head winds and heavy seas the whole way (the common passage is five days), hence again a loss of one day and a-half; thus three days and a half have been lost in this express upon the sea passage, by which the express should have reached London in 26 days, instead of 29½ days. It is generally supposed that I arrived at Trieste in the Austrian steamer; such is not the fact. I steamed to the extreme finish of the Adriatic, viz., Dwino, which is 12 miles nearer London than Trieste, and a steamer can reach within 20 yards of that place. I may now mention an extraordinary instance of Austrian alacrity and attention. His Excellency the Governor of Trieste, Count Stadion, Chevalier de Bruck, the head of the Austrian Lloyd's Company, and all the élite of the merchants, &c., of Trieste, were waiting for me at Dwino, though at the hour of half-past 12 at night, and one of the darkest I ever experienced: we were guided only to Dwino by the rockets sent up by them. My passport was given by order of the Emperor of Austria, and countersigned at Vienna by the representatives of Belgium, Prussia, Baden, and Bavaria, countries through which I passed; indeed I was not asked a question throughout the journey. I shall shortly be in a position to offer to Her Majesty's Government and East India Company a series of trials again by this route for three or six months certain, as they may think proper, in order to take away those doubts which may yet remain about the Trieste route. My opinion is, that the three or six trials, when determined upon, will average 25 days between Bombay and London; and again I have to mention, that when the present steam ships for the Bombay line, now in course of completion in the Thames and Clyde, are placed between Suez and Bombay, the route via Trieste will then be brought down to five days less; and, ere two years, I feel convinced that despatches will be in London on the 21st day from Bombay."

Lincoln's Inn Fields.—A deputation from the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn had an interview on Tuesday with Lord Lincoln, for the purpose of obtaining the sanction of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests to a proposition for throwing down the wall between Lincoln's Inn Fields and the new hall, and opening an ornamental road in front of the hall. The result did not transpire, but a refusal on the part of the Commissioners is scarcely to be anticipated.

Improvements at the Penitentiary, Milbank.—The ditch which used to surround the Penitentiary has been filled up, as well as the low ground by the side of the road; and it is said that it will now be used as a florist's garden.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Nov. 8:—West Districts, 153; Northern, 129; Central, 195; Eastern, 218; Southern, 249; Total, 944; males, 448; females, 496. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1226; males, 630; females, 596.

Provincial.

Ampthill.—On Tuesday week, the Bedford, Ampthill, and London coach, the Civility, was upset near this place, in consequence of coming in contact with a carriage from the Leighton station. Mr. Greene, auctioneer, sustained a compound fracture of the right arm, and a fracture of the collar-bone; Mr. Brown, stonemason, of Bedford, fracture of the thigh; Mr. Ward, the coachman, a fracture of the ribs and severe injuries of the head; and Mr. Emery, of Kempston Hardwicke, severe bodily contusions. Several other passengers escaped unhurt.

Andover.—At the meeting of the guardians on Saturday, Mr. Blyth, as master, and his wife, as matron, officially entered upon their respective duties, their election having been confirmed by the Poor-law Commissioners. The suspension and dismissal of the medical officer, Dr. Westlake, is not sanctioned by the Poor-law Commissioners, the reasons given by the guardians not being deemed sufficient to warrant them in doing so, without further proof of his inefficiency. They, however, suggested to Mr. Westlake the propriety of explaining to the guardians such portions of his evidence as had given offence; and Mr. Westlake accordingly has explained that his remarks applied solely to the case of Mr. M'Dougal, and were not meant to express a general want of confidence in the guardians.

Birmingham.—On Thursday evening a public dinner was given in this town to the Hon. C. P. Villiers, M.P., by about 700 gentlemen of Free-trade principles, including many who, in party politics, are considered Tories, Whigs, Radicals, and even Chartists. Mr. Smith, the Mayor of the borough, presided, and speeches in favour of Free-trade were delivered by Mr. Villiers, Mr. Cobden, the Earl Ducie, Mr. Bright, and other gentlemen.

Carmarthen.—On Monday week an accident happened to the Gloucester down mail when about midway between this town and Neath. It appears that the fore carriage axle suddenly giving way, the wheel became disengaged from the coach, and rolled off with a portion of the axle in the box. The suddenness of the jerk thus created threw the driver into the road, and the guard likewise became disengaged from the vehicle, while the horses made off at a gallop. The coach continued running on three wheels for upwards of half a mile, when one of the horses pulling rather stronger than the others, caused both coach and horses to fall into a ditch on the road side. The animals now commenced kicking violently until they disengaged themselves from the coach, the front of which they had completely battered in. Previous to this the passengers, with a single exception, jumped off the coach one by one, all sustaining more or less injury, but none to any great extent. The passenger most seriously hurt was J. Johnes, Esq., of Dolcothy, who had his shoulder dislocated in leaping from the inside. The person who stuck to the coach was the only individual who came off unscathed.

Crewe.—A special petty session was held in this town last week, to hear informations against several flour-sellers and millers in the vicinity, who were charged with adulterating their flour with alum. The first case called on was against Mr. Jas. Cookson, of Warmingham, for having in his possession, at the Crewe-green mill, a quantity of alum for the purpose of adulterating flour. It was clearly proved that about 44 pounds of alum were found in the defendant's mill, together with a quantity mixed in the grain, with beans and wheat, and which were there being ground into flour. On the part of the defence a great number of witnesses were examined, and, after a patient investigation, which lasted nearly the whole of the day, the defendant was convicted in the mitigated penalty of 40*s* and costs. A second information being preferred against him, and 15 or 16 others, the magistrates adjourned till Monday, when Mr. Brown, miller, of Shavington, was fined 10*l.* and costs for having 329 lbs. of alum, for the purpose of adulteration with flour; and several minor cases fell through, in consequence of some informality.

Jersey.—The authorities of this island have been engaged in investigating the circumstances connected with the death of a young lady, Miss Emily Bond, at St. Mark's-terrace, Jersey, which have created an intense and painful feeling amongst the inhabitants of all classes. The death of the young lady was clearly her own act, but the following facts, connected with the melancholy transaction, may help to elucidate the cause. It appears that Miss Bond had met, on one or two occasions, a Lieut. Teed, between whom and herself there passed nothing but the ordinary courtesies which a slight acquaintance approves. A short time after the commencement of their acquaintance, Mr. Teed left Jersey for Paris, where soon after he received the following extraordinary epistle:—"Sir,—Necessity must be my only excuse for addressing you; the chief object I have in doing so is, to request that you direct to me (if you have occasion to write) M. M., Post-office. I wish to be concise, and would be so did not my tortured heart cry out that ours beat in unison. Your secret is not such to me. I can scarcely write, yet cannot quit my pen at present. 'Tis not cold calculating custom that can fetter me. Forgive me, yet tell me that you have been the aggressor, or I can never forgive myself. How long must I suffer thus!—surely no longer than this reaches you, could I but know it reached you. I am doing violence instead of justice to my feelings by subscribing myself only, yours, with sincere esteem, Emily Bond. Tuesday, July 29."—There is hardly a doubt, says a Jersey Paper, that some heartless persons had previously written to Miss Bond a letter, purporting to come from Mr. Teed, and that this letter was intended as an answer. Mr. Teed, taking this view of it, allowed it to remain unanswered; and some five weeks after a second letter, in a similar train, but alluding also to a previous letter from Mr. Teed, was received from Miss Bond, to which a few days after Mr. Teed sent this reply:—"St. Servan, Sept. 2—Dear Miss Bond—Your letter of July 29 I received at Nantes, and from the incomprehensible contents contained therein, after a mature deliberation, I determined to leave it unanswered. Your second letter I received two days since, and my surprise was considerably increased by its contents. I never wrote you a line in my life—nor has my acquaintance with you exceeded the half hour's walk from the place I met you on the Pier-road. I regret exceedingly you should have been selected as a victim for those vile practices so often used in Jersey. I hope to return to the island in October next, when I will use all my endeavours to discover the criminal. In the meantime I should be glad if you will send me the letter, or a copy of the letter, as purporting to come from me. Be assured I will not compromise you, and as a caution I have erased your name from the notes. Yours, very truly, R. M. TEED."—Mr. Teed did return in October, when he had an interview with the lady. He inquired for the first letter purporting to come from himself, and she timidly acknowledged she had destroyed it; and on inquiring if she had received the above reply, she answered in the negative—a proof that the parties who had first written to Miss Bond had obtained possession of this letter, and in all probability they had intercepted the letters of Miss Bond addressed to Mr. Teed. The worst part of this case, however, is to be told. Shortly after, an account of the whole transaction appeared in the Jersey Times, written in a style well calculated to wound the young lady in her most sensitive part, and concluding in this manner—"She now sits moping by the fire-side with her finger in her mouth, and it will probably be long before she becomes awake to life and love!" This appeared on Friday, and on Saturday at two o'clock, upon an entrance into her bedroom being gained, the unfortunate girl was found suspended by the bed-post, quite dead! A judicial investigation into all the circumstances of the case was immediately commenced, and after a variety of evidence had been offered, the Jury delivered the following verdict:—"We are of opinion that Miss Emily Bond caused her own death by hanging, whilst labouring under temporary insanity; and, from the evidence before us, it appears she was naturally a weak-minded person, and we cannot but strongly censure the conduct of the editor of the Jersey Times for having written and inserted in that paper, on the 24th October last, a paragraph entitled 'A Cruel Love Hoax'—a hoax having evidently been played off upon the said Miss Bond by some person or persons unknown."

Oxford.—A correspondent, under the signature of a "Clerical Subscriber," thinks it desirable to correct an error in our last week's Paper respecting the secessions at Oxford. It would appear from that list, copied from a weekly contemporary, that the 19 gentlemen named therein had followed the example of Mr. Newman, in going over to the Roman Catholic Church; whereas our correspondent says that, "of these 19 persons, no less than five (Messrs. Smith, Talbot, Parsons, Lockhart, and Seager) quitted the English Church as long ago as 1843, and at least three out of the remainder (viz., Messrs. Tickell, Capes, and Ward) preceded Mr. Newman, the first by a year. Mr. Wingfield, I believe, is not one of the seceders; for, in a letter to the English Churchman (October 16, 1845, page 663), he speaks of himself as having only 'withdrawn from ministerial duties in the Church of England at the present crisis;' thus implying that he still continues in our communion."—The daily papers state that it is currently reported that the Rev. R. A. Coffin, M.A., student of Christchurch, and vicar of St. Mary Magdalen, in this city, has followed the example of his late curate, the Rev. C. H. Collyer, and joined the Church of Rome. Mr. Coffin has not officiated in his church for several Sundays.—The remains of a Roman villa, of considerable extent, have been recently discovered near Wheatley, in this county, and some excavations have been made under the direction of Dr. Bromet, a member of the Committee of the Archæological Institute. All that has yet been made out is a hypocaust and a bath. These remains are distant about a mile and a half from the Episcopal palace at Cuddesden. Bishop Bagot has taken much interest in the excavations, and has requested Dr. Buckland to superintend the continuance of them.

Preston.—On Saturday week a serious accident occurred on the Preston New Road, by the upsetting of Whalley's coach, whereby several persons were injured, and the whole of the passengers, 18 in number, more or less hurt. It appears that the coach left Preston on Saturday evening, having 13 passengers outside, including three females, and five inside. On coming to Brockholes Brow, a very steep descent leading to the wooden bridge across the Ribble, the horses became unmanageable, and started off at full gallop down the hill. The coach rocked to and fro in a frightful manner, and the females shrieked loudly for help. The coachman, seeing the coach must turn over, let go the reins, and threw himself off, and the coach proceeded at this desperate pace for about 30 yards further, when it fell over, scattering the unfortunate passengers in all directions, and throwing some of them to a considerable distance. The horses instantly freed themselves from the traces and dashed over the bridge, and were not stopped until they arrived at the Five-barred Gate, a mile and half from where the accident occurred. The coach having turned over about a dozen yards from the toll-bar, assistance was quickly rendered, when the passengers were mostly found lying about the road, stunned with the effects of the fall. One man, an outside passenger, was picked up with his leg severely fractured, and his body otherwise cut and bruised. Another outside passenger was found with his leg broken in three places, and other parts of his person much cut and bruised. A third was hurt in the back and elsewhere, and doubts are entertained of his recovery. The coachman, who had thrown himself from his seat, was seriously injured. Mr. Ainsworth, bookseller, of Blackburn, was pitched upon his head, and much hurt; and nearly all the passengers suffered from the accident, those inside escaping with the least injury. The accident occurring when it was quite dark added to the confusion and suffering which prevailed. The coach was knocked to pieces nearly, but the horses escaped with very little injury.

Plymouth.—The necessary repairs of the Battery on Staddon Heights will be completed in the course of the next week. This battery is 151 feet in length, and is to be supplied with 14 68-pounders, instead of 10 guns, as formerly, when the battery was in use. Immediately under this battery, it is proposed to construct another of 300 feet in length, and supplied with ordnance of similar dimensions. The new fortifications at Bovisand are also progressing rapidly.—On the 31st ult. the last stone of the beacon erected on the eastern extremity of the Plymouth breakwater, was laid by Admiral Sir John West, K.C.B., the Commander-in-Chief at this port. The height of the granite part of the beacon is 25 feet, into the centre of which a mast of African Oak will be fixed, and at its top there will be a globe of bell-metal. The diameter of the globe will be 6 feet, and its entire height 48 feet from the top of the breakwater.—A new scheme has been started for providing a capacious wet dock, with ranges of wharfage, warehouses, &c., at Millbay. The committee, of which Mr. Charles Russell, M.P., chairman of the Great Western Railway, is at the head, state that Plymouth, as the terminus of the South Devon, is essentially the great western port in the British Channel, and by the completion of the South Devon line, it will, in the course of a few months, be brought within six hours' distance of the metropolis. The distance of the port from Birmingham is somewhat less than from London; and by means of the proposed new railways there will be an immediate connection with the whole of north and central Devon, and the ports in the Bristol Channel. Millbay, a part of which is proposed to be used for this purpose, encloses an area of upwards of 80 acres, half of which is excellent anchorage in from one to ten fathoms' water, at the lowest state of the tide. The basin is to be upwards of 20 acres in extent, and the Millbay branch of the South Devon is to extend along its sides.

Sheffield.—On Wednesday week, about 10 P.M., a serious accident occurred to the Sheffield and Worksop coach, at Darnall, as it was returning to Sheffield. On arriving at the bottom of the hill the horses shied at some bonfires on the roadside, and ran the coach upon a heap of stones intended for the repair of the road. The coach was consequently overturned, and the passengers precipitated upon the heap of stones. One of them, Mr. Spurr, farmer, of Worksop, was severely injured about the head, and others received severe contusions. The coachman himself was much injured.

Windsor.—After the election on Saturday last, a disturbance took place between the town's-people and the soldiery from the barracks. The blame is thrown by each party upon their opponents, and an inquiry into the circumstances has been proceeding for some days before the magistrates, and is not yet concluded. The facts however, as disclosed by the evidence, are not of very general interest.

Railways.

The event of the week in Railway affairs is the Prime Minister's performance of the ceremony of cutting the first sod on the Trent Valley line, which took place, on Thursday, at Tamworth. The town was, of course, the scene of unusual bustle and excitement. Sir R. Peel made a long speech on the occasion, of which we hope to give an abstract in our next. Although he stated that he appeared there as one of the representatives of the borough, still the compliment paid to railway enterprise by the first Minister of the Crown, was not lost on the vast crowds who had assembled to witness the ceremony. Sir Robert was loudly cheered, but he looked ill, and was very lame from the effects of his late attack of gout.—Shortly after day-break, on Sunday morning, an accident happened on the Eastern Counties (Cambridge) line, a few yards distant from the Waltham station. It appears that the ordinary night goods train from Bishop's Stortford, &c., which was due at two o'clock on Sunday morning at the Waltham station, arrived rather behind its time. Having stopped a short time for the receipt of goods, it recommenced its journey to town, but had not proceeded many yards before the driver of the engine finding the progress of the train somewhat impeded, stopped to ascertain the cause, when it was found that the axletree of one of the trucks, which contained several tons of flour, was broken. An accident of this kind would occupy a great length of time to repair; and owing to the time of night, some difficulty arose in getting sufficient workmen and labourers to assist in the operations. However, every effort was made to complete it before the night fish train from Yarmouth came up, four o'clock being its time at the station. It could not, however, be accomplished, and the usual signals being sent up the line, the fish train was stopped with safety. In addition to the common trucks used for the conveyance of fish, there was attached to the train a second-class carriage, in which were Captain Lawrence, R.N., a director of the Norfolk railway, and a drover who had charge of some sheep that were in a truck next to the carriage in the rear. The most active measures were then in force in endeavouring to replace the broken axle, and it was confidently expected that it would be effected before the Norwich mail train arrived, which was due at five o'clock at the station. To prevent accidents, however, and in compliance with the company's rules, a messenger was sent by the station-master down the line with a red signal-light to warn the engine driver of the mail train of the danger. The porter states that he went down the line about 400 yards, and on the approach of the train he held up the lamp in the most conspicuous manner, but the foggy state of the atmosphere prevented the engineer from observing the light in time, although every effort was made to arrest the train the moment the light was perceived. The train, however, almost immediately afterwards ran into the rear fish van that was standing a short distance from the station. The mail train was to have stopped at that station, and therefore when the accident occurred it was going at a very slow rate. It was, however, of that character as to have caused the following injury:—The last carriage, a cattle truck, which was filled with sheep, was almost demolished, and 20 sheep killed. The next carriage, a second-class one, was broken in, and the body of it thrown some feet in the air, with Captain Lawrence and the drover inside, and precipitated a few yards distant, near a ditch. The engine and tender, weighing 18 tons, of the mail train were, by the force of the concussion, thrown off the rails of the up line to the down one, where they pitched nearly bottom upwards, and tore up the permanent road some distance. Captain Lawrence and the drover were soon extricated, and removed to a neighbouring tavern, when it was discovered that Captain Lawrence had his collar-bone dislocated, and sundry bruises about his body. The drover was much cut and bruised, but fortunately he was not seriously hurt. The driver and stoker of the mail train escaped without a bruise, and neither passengers nor carriages were in the least injured. The most prompt exertions were used to raise the engine and tender off the down line, and to replace the permanent roadway which had been torn up, while the superintendent of the line was as actively engaged with the disabled goods and fish trains. After the lapse of about four hours, the injuries were made good and both lines thrown open to the regular passage of the trains.—An accident occurred recently on the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway, whereby a gentleman named Cooley lost his life, and for which the superintendent and engineer were committed for trial. This trial took place in the High Court of Justiciary on Monday, when William Paton, Superintendent of locomotives to the Company, was sentenced to be confined for twelve months in Glasgow gaol, and M'Nab, the engineer, for nine months.—At a special meeting of the London and Birmingham Company last week, the report of the directors, recommending the adoption of the agreement of amalgamation concluded between the London and Birmingham and Grand Junction Boards was unanimously adopted, with two others, to the effect that the Birmingham and Manchester and Grand Junction Companies be considered as one and amalgamated as to capital and in all other respects. Mr. Entwistle, M.P., was the only dissentient. The terms of the agreement are as follows:—In the case of the Grand Junction, the London and Birmingham capital is taken at 8,653,750*l.*, and the Grand Junction at 5,788,560*l.*, making together a consolidated fund of 14,442,316*l.*; and, for the future, dividends of the amalgamated companies are to be calculated; and for this purpose the receipts are, from and after 1st July last, to constitute one common fund. For the first five years, there is to be one mutual Board, whose meetings are to be held monthly, or as may be found convenient, to consist of members selected in the first instance from the present direction of each company, in the proportion of eight London and Birmingham directors to six Grand Junction; the united board to discuss and settle all matters of general policy. The London and Birmingham line proper being worked, in respect of all details, under a committee sitting in London, composed of 24 directors, and the Grand Junction line proper being worked, as respects all details, under a committee sitting in Liverpool, and composed of 18 Grand Junction directors, or sub-committees of either respectively. In the case of the Manchester and Birmingham, the terms are that the capital of the Manchester and Birmingham shall be taken at 2,800,000*l.*; 700,000*l.* of which is not to be entitled to any dividend before 1st February, 1849, but may be capitalised at any time. The powers of the Manchester and Birmingham, under the acts to raise an additional capital, are not to be exercised without the consent of the London and Birmingham. The London and Birmingham are to guarantee to the Manchester and Birmingham a dividend of 8 per cent. from 1st February, to the 31st July, 1846, on their paid-up capital of 1,440,000*l.* From that date to the 1st February, 1847, at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum on the portion paid up of the capital of 1,800,000*l.* from the 31st July, 1847, at the same rate, and the portion paid up of the capital of 2,100,000*l.*, and from and after 1st July, 1848, a dividend on the same capital at a rate equal to what may be paid out of the united property of both companies to the London and Birmingham proprietary. On the 1st February, 1849, the capital of 700,000*l.* will be placed on the same footing as the capital of the 2,100,000*l.*, making the total capital of 2,800,000*l.* Another resolution was carried at the close of the meeting, giving the directors authority to apply to Parliament for power to carry these amalgamations into effect.—A special meeting of the Great Western Company was held last week, at which it was determined to carry out their London and Exeter project, by Yeovil, &c., as already stated in this Paper, and likewise to confirm the agreement relative to the Bristol and Exeter Railway. The Bristol and Exeter proprietors, however, at their meeting on the same day repudiated the agreement, and insisted on better terms, leading, after a certain period, to an equalisation of the stock of the two companies. The feeling of the meeting was almost unanimous on this point, the confirmation of the agreement being negatived by an immense majority, only 20 or 30 hands being held up in favour of it.—The long-pending treaty for an amalgamation of the Leeds and Dewsbury, the Leeds and Thirsk, and the Huddersfield and Manchester Railways, although at one time promising so favourable a result, and which would have been beneficial to the West Riding of York, from the combination of the interests of these important lines of communication and their contemplated branches, has entirely failed.—The conversion of the Regent's Canal into a railway will, it is said, be opposed by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, on the ground that its construction would prove injurious to the ornamental waters and villa properties of the Park.—The Board of Ordnance have published a list of 64 persons hitherto employed in that Department who have left the same for the purpose of assisting in the survey of projected railway lines and other works, and who have in their possession appointments from the Board of Ordnance, enabling them for the purpose of Government surveys to enter lands without being deemed trespassers. The Board give notice that these persons, having ceased to be employed by the Department, such appointments have become cancelled, and any use being made of them, for the purpose of entering lands after this notice, subjects the offender to a penalty of 50*l.*; and all persons to whom any such appointments may be presented are authorised to detain them, and forward the same to the Secretary to the Board of Ordnance.

PRICES AND TRAFFIC, by permission, from the List of Messrs. HILL, FAWCETT, & HILL, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

NAME OF RAILWAY. Those marked thus * are not yet opened.	GROSS RECEIPTS OF TRAFFIC. Week ending between Nov. 5. & Nov. 12.	Corresponding Week. 1844.	6 Mos Dividend Per Share. † 3 Mos.	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid up.	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock.
	£	£	£ s. d.	£	£	£
Birmingham, Glo'ster		2,249	2 0 0	100	all	134-6
Bristol, Birmingham
Bristol, Exeter			1 8 0	100	70	80-5
Bristol, Glo'ster			1 0 0	50	30	32 4
Chester, Holyhead	*	*		50	15	16½-17
Eastern Counties	6,105	3,845	0 3 0†	avr.	14¾	20½-1
Eastern Union				50	20
Do. Extension				25	1¾
Edinburgh, Glasgow		2,153	1 5 0	50	all	68-72
Grand Junction	14,206	7,783	2 10 0†	100	all
Great North of England		1,636	3 0 0	100	all	212-17
Great Western	17,521	14,567	3 4 0	100	80	130-3
Gt. South. & Western (I.)	*	*	*	50	15	19-21
Do. Extension	*	*	*	50	2½	11½-13
Hull, Selby				100	all	101-3
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*	*	50	25	50-2
Liverpool, Manchester		4,540	4 10 0	100	all
London, Birmingham	19,749	14,509	5 0 0	stk.	100	213-18
London, Blackwall	798	680	0 3 0	avr.	16¾	0-½
London, Brighton	5,054	4,278	1 10 0	50	all	60½-1
London, Croydon	1,551	388	0 8 0	avr.	13¼	20½-1
London, Greenwich				avr.	12½	9-10
London, South-Western	6,196	5,181	2 0 0	avr.	41¾	71-6
Manchester, Birmingham	3,933	2,822	1 0 0	40	40	73-6
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	950	824	2 14 0	123	93
Manchester, Leeds, Hull	5,317		2 16 0	100	73	136-46
Midland	16,715	9,520	2 2 6	stk.	100	142 7
Do. Birmingham, Derby				stk.	100	110-15
Newcastle, Carlisle	1,660	1,610	2 10 0	100	all
Newcastle, Darlington	2,658	1,603	4 0 0	25	all	55-8
North British	*	*	*	25	15	21-3
Northern, Eastern			1 2 6	50	45	66-8
Norwich, Brandon				20	14	21 2
Preston, Wyre	446	293		50	all
Sheffield, Manchester	1,142	579	5 p. Cent	100	95
South Devon	*	*	*	50	20	28 30
South-Eastern, Dover	6,356	4,034	0 13 4	avr.	33⅓	35 6
Yarmouth, Norwich			0 10 0	20	all	25-7
York, North Midland	4,907	2,194	2 10 0	50	all	100-5
Do. Scarboro' Branch	*	*	*	25	all	50-2
Do. Selby			0 12 8	50	20	74-6
FRENCH RAILWAYS.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*	*	20	8	9½-10
Orleans, Vierzon	*	*	*	20	10	17½-18
Orleans, Bordeaux	*	*	*	20	4	10½-11
Paris, Orleans	6,419	5,411	1 0 9½	20	all	46 8
Paris, Rouen	5,707	4,214	0 19 2	20	all	30 9
Rouen, Havre				20	14	29 30

Ireland.

Dublin.—The committee appointed at the meeting of the citizens of Dublin held another meeting on Saturday at the Mansion-house. Lord Cloncurry presided. About 15 members of the committee were in attendance including Mr. O'Connell and the O'Conor Don. After hearing reports from various parts of the country, generally of a very unfavourable character, as to the spread of the Potato blight, it was agreed that a communication should be addressed to Sir Robert Peel, stating the extent of the disease, and suggesting the necessity of opening the ports for the admission of grain, and advancing a loan for useful public works for the employment of the people during the prevalence of the distress. It was also suggested to the Premier that the exportation of Oats from Ireland should be prohibited, in consequence of the rapid decay of the Potato crop. On Wednesday the committee again met to receive Sir R. Peel's reply. In this document the Premier acknowledges the receipt of the communication made by Lord Cloncurry, on behalf of the committee, recites the various suggestions made by them, and adds that they involve questions of so much importance, that he deems it expedient to place the communication before his colleagues. Eighty-seven letters were read to the committee on the subject of the Potato rot.—The Mail of Friday says, "it is the intention of Government to appoint a commission of intelligent and experienced officers, to consider the measures which it may be proper to take, with a view to provide against the expected scarcity of provisions from the failure of the Potato crop. The selection of persons to form the commission has occasioned some delay; but the arrangements are now nearly completed, and we hope that, in a few days, the commissioners will be able to commence the arduous and responsible duties with which they will be entrusted."—Dr. Murray, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, has directed that all the clergy of the arch-diocese shall offer in prayer a pastoral collect, beseeching the Almighty to save the country from the awful visitation of a famine.—The appointment of Dr. Kirwan to the presidency of the New College at Galway has raised a perfect storm of controversy against the Government from the papers of all parties, some of which censure Sir R. Peel for selecting a Roman Catholic priest, while others condemn Dr. Kirwan as unequal to the duties of the office. This latter statement appears to be mere prejudice, since it is well known that Dr. Kirwan obtained honours at Maynooth, and took his degree of D.D. with great credit at the Sorbonne. The opposition, however, to Dr. Kirwan's acceptance of office is not confined to the journals of either party. Bishop O'Donnell and the priests of the diocese of Galway have come out with their solemn "protest" against the Government system, just one week after the selection of one of their own body to fill the most honourable post in the Ministerial gift. It is also stated that Dr. Kirwan cannot officiate as president of the College without the express sanction of his ecclesiastical superior, Archbishop M'Hale, of Tuam, and it is more than doubtful if that permission will be granted by a dignitary whose hostility to the College scheme is known to be inveterate and bitter. The salary of president is fixed at 800*l.* a year.—The Dublin papers announce that Bishop Murphy, of Cork, and Bishop Kennedy, of Killaloe, have arrived at Rome to obtain the sanction of the Pope to the Charitable Bequests Act and the Provincial Colleges Act, and to ascertain by appeal to the Vatican if there is anything contrary to "faith and morals" in one or the other.—It is stated that Edward Berwick, Esq., barrister-at-law, and nephew to the late Right Hon. Henry Grattan, has accepted the appointment of vice-president of the New College at Galway. It is also rumoured that Government, on the recommendation of the Commissioners, have selected Belfast for the Northern College, and that Dr. Henry, of Armagh, has been appointed its principal.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association was held on Monday, in Conciliation Hall. Mr. O'Donnell, of Carrick-on-Suir, in the chair. Mr. S. O'Brien, M.P., made his appearance for the first time after his long absence, and was received with vehement cheering.—Mr. O'CONNELL having handed in remittances, observed that with regard to the differences existing between the Repealers of Waterford, he wished it to be understood that those persons who used disrespectful language to the bishop of the diocese and certain clergymen, should not be allowed to remain members of that Association, unless they retracted their gross insinuations. Within the ensuing fortnight it was his intention to proceed to Waterford, for the purpose of ascertaining, in person, the actual state of things, but he would announce at once that neither Mr. Wyse nor Sir W. Barron would represent Waterford in the next Parliament.—Mr. SMITH O'BRIEN, M.P., had hoped that he might have had it in his power to meet them under circumstances of a more cheering nature; but, unfortunately, he was compelled to tell them that he shared that despondency which was felt throughout the entire country at the present prospects, which threw a gloom over Ireland. He could not conceal from himself that the awful calamity was impending, and that nothing but the merciful intervention of Providence could protect them from the most disastrous consequences resulting from the failure of the potato crop. He did not allude to this topic with a view to encourage the sentiment of despair. On the contrary, he called on the Irish nation upon that occasion to show themselves worthy of the high character they were seeking to attain amongst the nations of the earth. He called on them to exhibit a constancy, a firmness, a manliness of determination, such as the exigence of the case required; and he congratulated them that the universal sentiment hitherto exhibited upon that subject had been that they would accept of no English charity. The resources of this country were still abundantly adequate to maintain their population; and until these resources should have been utterly exhausted, he hoped there would be no man in Ireland who would degrade himself to ask the aid of a subscription from England. Already they had been given to understand by the English press that, in the event of their accepting any relief, however trifling, from England, they would regard them as ungrateful if they did not abandon the efforts they were making to achieve the legislative independence of their country. Let them be prepared to meet whatever difficulties, whatever calamities might arise, in the spirit of men contending for freedom, and relying on Providence and themselves. That Association had been censured for not having taken an earlier part with reference to the present calamity; but he did not think such censures justifiable. For his part, he did not hesitate to say that he felt there would be much danger in their pointing out anything which might have a tendency to mislead, and that was the reason why he for one did forbear to give any expression of opinion on the subject until they should have made up their minds on what was the best course to be pursued. He had himself suggested the propriety of offering a prize for the best suggestion having in view prevention of the extension of the potato disease; but he was afraid that such suggestions would scarcely prove efficacious at that moment. It would, however, be the duty of the committee to watch over that subject with the most intense anxiety, and to adopt from week to week and from day to day whatever course appeared most conducive to the interests of the country; and he felt certain that the committee would not shrink from the task they had so long performed of being the friends and advocates of the Irish people. He had himself arrived at the conclusion that remedies were almost useless, and that they should trust in Providence for averting the consequences of the calamity. It was on the present occasion that they felt the absolute necessity for a domestic legislature. Such a legislature could call into action the combined wisdom of the nation for the purpose of mitigating the evils with which they were threatened. What was the conduct of the Government? A deputation, headed by the chief magistrate of the city, and formed of the leading noblemen and gentlemen of the country, waited upon the Lord-Lieutenant for the purpose of impressing on his Excellency the necessity there existed for taking immediate measures to arrest the famine to which they were exposed. How was the deputation received? It was received with contumely and contempt. It was supposed that Parliament would have been called together, and that some means might be devised whereby the people would be enabled to procure food; that they would promote the extension of public works, and that they would facilitate private enterprise. But expectation had been disappointed. Had the suggestions laid before the House of Commons during the last session with reference to the relations between landlord and tenant been adopted, an ample opportunity for the employment of labour could now be exercised in draining and other improvements. He (Mr. O'Brien) was a representative of the Irish people, and his voice ought to be as powerful in that hall as in the House of Commons, and he would assert that the Government would commit a sin against God and a crime against man unless they called Parliament together before Christmas, to take the state of the country into consideration. The hon. gentleman then proceeded at some length to advert to the foreign relations of England, and commented upon the many dangers which threatened her from without, and upon the absolute necessity of conciliating Ireland, as the only means of escaping the perils which environed her. The conduct of the various governments of England since the period of union was stated such a nature as ought to induce the people to be satisfied with that hateful measure. A war with France might arise in a moment, and then to whom could England look? He would tell her—to Ireland——and to Ireland alone. Let not England then talk of coercing Ireland. He did not say all this to excite hostility to England. No; he only said it to show the obligation that England was under to conciliate Ireland. This country possessed all the elements of national greatness; and if the aristocracy would but join them, they would soon have all they needed. Measures which were boasted as being those of conciliation, were yet coupled with some unfortunate clauses, which rendered them unpalatable. He adverted to the Colleges Act, and though he was the friend of mixed education, he censured the Government for not paying more attention to the remonstrances of the Catholic prelates who were unanimous in condemning the measure.—Mr. O'CONNELL said, that a more useful speech than that just delivered he never heard. The gentleman who had spoke it had come into that room most popular, but he was sure he would leave it still more so. The manner in which the executive here had treated the committee appointed to watch over the progress of the potato rot had compelled them to address the prime minister on the subject, which would throw on him the entire responsibility. The Irish people, it appeared, were asking for bread and they received but a stone. He (Mr. O'CONNELL) feared that some outbreak would be the result of the present scarcity, but he warned the people against resorting to violence. He then drew a comparison between the condition of the Irish in 1782, as related by Arthur Young, and their present situation, showing that the population of Ireland was the most miserable on the face of the earth.—Mr. J. O'CONNELL, in reference to the expressions of Mr. O'Brien with regard to the Colleges Bill, repeated his usual arguments against that measure, and pronouncing it dangerous to faith and morals, and at the same time expressing his non-concurrence with some of Mr. O'Brien's observations.—Mr. SMITH O'BRIEN considered he had studiously avoided giving utterance to any sentiments which he thought might prove displeasing to the hon. gentleman.—Mr. O'CONNELL considered that Mr. O'Brien's observations did not bear the construction put upon them by Mr. J. O'Connell. While on that subject he could not avoid referring to the admission of Dr. Kirwan to the system. That rev. gentleman was his friend, and he could scarcely believe he would have countenanced a scheme which had been unanimously condemned by the hierarchy. God help the people of Ireland observed Mr. Connell); but I trust the thought will not cross their minds that their clergy would be accessible to bribery. Had any man told me that Dr. Kirwan would have taken a situation under the Colleges Act, I would have said I would as soon believe that a stream could return to its source.—The rent for the week was 300*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*

Galway.—"We regret to state" (says the Galway Mercury), "for the credit of our town, that on Monday last, as the engineers and surveyors employed by the Midland Extension Company were engaged in taking the levels, near the new docks, a number of persons, calling themselves the friends of a rival line, gave every obstruction in their power, and actually forced the professional gentlemen off the ground."

Enniskillen.—We regret to state that Mr. Barton who was shot last week by some unknown assassins, as stated in our last, still remains in a very precarious condition. One of the balls has penetrated his right chest. "The greatest excitement," remarks an Enniskillen paper, "exists in the district, the outrage having been perpetrated on a gentleman who has ever proved himself the poor man's friend, and who, as a grand juror of the county, has been always anxious to keep down county taxation, even at the expense of public convenience. As a landlord, Mr. Barton has been most solicitous for the humble farmer, always resident, and engaged in every plan of agricultural improvement; a constant employer of a large body of the labouring class, and a liberal encourager of the industrious. At the present time, fearful for the poor under threatened want from the prevailing reports against the Potato crop, he was engaged in the preparation of storage for something about 200*l.* worth of corn for the benefit of his locality: and no later than the very day of the melancholy occurrence—as we learn from a gentleman who spent the previous night and part of that day with him—he visited several farms in the neighbourhood, examining the potatoes in the course of digging out, and, during his visits, distributed money to some poor families likely to suffer from the failure. From every circumstance connected with this charitable and humane landlord our heart sickens at the barbarous act, and most heartily do we pray that the guilty parties may be brought to a just and speedy punishment. When such a man as Mr. Barton has fallen, well may the alarm reach every other gentleman in the county. Lord Enniskillen on Tuesday presided at a meeting of the magistrates of the county, when a plan of active measures was adopted, both for the apprehension of the guilty parties, and the destruction of the system of Molly Maguireism. Other meetings are speedily to follow, which, we trust, will prove effectual for the protection of life and property, and the permanent establishment of peace and good order among us."

Tipperary.—The Nenagh Guardian mentions another attempt at assassination, of the same nature as that which resulted in the death of Mr. Patrick Clarke. A few days ago Mr. Lloyd, of Frosty-hall, near Templemore, was fired at from behind a rough wall and hedge, near his own gate, whilst riding quickly homewards. The only cause to which Mr. Lloyd can attribute this attempt upon his life is, that he prosecuted two persons at the petty sessions for some trifling matter relating to a road.

Belfast.—On Thursday week the ceremony of raising the first sod on the line of the Belfast and Ballymena Railway took place on a field in the neighbourhood of the Whitehouse, about three miles from Belfast, on the Carrickfergus-road. The field was crowded by a large assembly of people; Lord Massereene officiated on the occasion, accompanied by a number of the directors.

Scotland.

Edinburgh.—The monument to the memory of Muir, Palmer, Gerald, Margarot, and Skirving, the Scottish political martyrs of 1793, erected in the Old Calton Burying-ground, has recently been finished. The monument is in the form of a plain obelisk, about ninety feet in height, and standing as it does on an elevated site, has a very prominent, though not very elegant appearance from the North Bridge. The Witness says it has more the appearance of a factory chimney than of anything else.

Glasgow.—The site of the University of Glasgow has been purchased by the Caledonian and other railway companies, in order to erect a spacious terminus in the most convenient part of the city; and the Woodlands estate in the western suburbs has been purchased as the site of the new University. The price paid was nearly 29,000*l.*, subject to a fen-duty of 187*l.* 10*s.* per annum.

Dunfermline.—At the High Court of Justiciary in Edinburgh, on the 7th inst., before the Lord Justice Clerk, John Coutts, John Gibson, and William Smith, weavers, who had been found guilty on the previous day, in connection with the late riots at Dunfermline, were brought up in order to have sentence passed on them, when Gibson was sentenced to seven years' transportation, and Coutts and Smith to twelve months' imprisonment.

Law.

Court of Queen's Bench.—The Queen, v. the Judge of the Arches Court of Canterbury.—The Solicitor-General moved for a rule to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue to the Judge of the Arches Court of Canterbury, to prohibit him from proceeding in a suit entitled, "The office of Judge promoted by Barnes against Shore." The object of this application was to prevent the Ecclesiastical Court from proceeding to exercise a jurisdiction which he submitted it did not lawfully possess. The Rev. James Shore, who was a minister of the Church of England, was, in 1832, duly appointed to the office of minister of the chapel of Bridgetown, in the parish of Berry Pomeroy, in the county of Devon. The chapel was built, the congregation had formed itself, and the vicar of the parish was applied to for the purpose of nominating an assistant minister to the chapel. At that time Mr. Edwards was the vicar of the parish—he made the appointment—he was succeeded by Mr. Brown, and during that gentleman's incumbency, Mr. Shore went on with his duties without any nomination during the whole period, from the year 1834 to 1843. Mr. Brown then exchanged livings with Mr. Cousins, who thereupon became the vicar of the parish. It seemed that it was then suggested, and insisted on by the Bishop of the diocese, that a new nomination of the minister of Bridgetown chapel should take place. Mr. Shore contended that such new nomination was not necessary. A correspondence ensued upon the subject, in the course of which it appeared that there were many points in the doctrine and discipline of the Church of England of the correctness of which Mr. Shore was not convinced; and ultimately that gentleman (in his, the Solicitor General's, opinion) most unfortunately seceded from the Church of England with his whole congregation of 2000 persons. It was of course well known to Mr. Shore, that having seceded from the Church of England, he could no longer exercise the offices of that church in that chapel. He did not, therefore, continue to perform service in that chapel, but he proceeded to a chapel which had been regularly licensed as a dissenting chapel, where he officiated as a dissenting minister, with the full concurrence of the Duke of Somerset, the proprietor of the chapel, and of the congregation, the whole body of which went over with him. This chapel was registered under the 52d of Geo. III. c. 155, as a dissenting chapel, and from that time to the present Mr. Shore had officiated as a dissenting minister. That being the state of things, an inquiry was instituted by some one, which ended in this suit, in which it appeared that the Ecclesiastical Court was taking proceedings against Mr. Shore for performing the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and other offices of the Church of England, in an unconsecrated chapel. It was clear that the Ecclesiastical Court had no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit. The chapel was not a chapel for the performance of divine service according to the rites of the Church of England, nor did Mr. Shore act as a minister of that Church. He had quitted it, his congregation had done the same, and he now officiated solely as a Protestant Dissenting minister, performing service, not according to the rights of the Church of England, but according to what he and the congregation deemed a proper manner.—Mr. Justice Coleridge: The affidavits show that divine service is performed in the chapel, but they do not show that it is a different performance of the service from what Mr. Shore and the congregation had been used to before.—The Solicitor-General said that Mr. Shore no longer considered himself to be a minister of the Church of England, nor had he officiated as such.—Mr. Justice Coleridge thought that this suit was not for any temporal pains and penalties, but an ecclesiastical proceeding pro salute.—The Solicitor-General contended that no such suit could, under the circumstances of this case, be instituted against Mr. Shore. There was no doubt that if he continued to be a minister of the Church of England he would be liable to the jurisdiction of the Bishop, should he do anything which was contrary to his duty as a minister of that church. But here he had given up that character, he had a right to act as a dissenting minister, and he did so; he was not bound to state in his affidavits on this application, what was the form of divine service which he used in his chapel; but it was sufficient for him to show that he was a dissenting minister, officiating in a dissenting chapel, and as such not liable to this suit in the Ecclesiastical Court. The Court after some further discussion as to the allegations in the affidavits, granted a rule to show cause.

Police.—Charge of Piracy and Murder.—On Wednesday Mr. Broderip, the magistrate of the Thames Police Court was occupied for several hours in hearing an extraordinary charge of piracy and murder brought by Capt. Johnstone, of the ship Tory, against 14 of his crew, during the voyage of that vessel from Hong-kong to London. The evidence, though given at great length, was of a very incoherent and contradictory character. It appeared, however, that the crew were at different times in a state of revolt. On the first occasion, off the island of Ascension, the men, when ordered to go forward, went aft, and threats were sworn to have been made use of. That affair appeared to have been overlooked, but it was attended with the suicide of the chief mate. The crew returned to their duty, and continued quiet enough till the ship reached Fayal, when another disturbance occurred, and a life was lost. There was a calm for a few days longer, and then came the third disturbance, off Plymouth, and the captain was wounded. After hearing all the witnesses, the magistrate said that the case was involved in a great deal of mystery. The question was whether the crew had been in a state of mutiny, and the captain, in suppressing it, had inflicted wounds on the men, or whether he had not, when drunk, been in the habit of using a cutlass, and committing the most wanton and barbarous assaults on his men. It was charged on the one hand that the crew, headed by the mates who had died, one of them having committed suicide, and the other killed, had a design on the captain's life, and intended to run away with the ship. On the other hand it was alleged that the captain, while he was in a drunk and excited state, cut the men about with a cutlass, and that he caused the death of two men, while another, to escape from his violence, jumped overboard and drowned himself. The carpenter, who came as one of the captain's witnesses, admitted that the captain was frequently drunk, and wounding the men with a cutlass. The captain, on the other hand, made out a prima facie case of mutiny in three instances. Allowing for a good deal of exaggeration in the defence of the men, there was a good deal in what they had said which demanded the strictest attention. He remanded this case for a week, and directed the police to take care that Captain Johnstone was forthcoming at the next examination.

Miscellaneous.

New Fresco by Raphael.—The Académie des Beaux-Arts at its last sitting, had an interesting piece of intelligence communicated to by M. Raoul-Rochette, its perpetual Secretary, and received by him from M. Jesi, the celebrated engraver. It was that an immense fresco by Raphael, in admirable preservation, has been discovered at Florence, in the refectory of a convent, suppressed at the close of the last century. This work, which represents the "Last Supper," was generally attributed to Perrugino, but, on its being lately cleaned, Raphael's name was found on the robe of one of the apostles, with the date of 1514, when the great painter was in the 21st year of his age. This is the period of his life of which Vasari and other writers on art seem to know least, and this discovery fills up the chasm which has hitherto existed in Raphael's history.—Galignani.

Railroads and Turnpikes.—Notwithstanding the railroad mania and building, turnpikes continue to bring their prices. The Montrose turnpike, for instance, was last week put up for letting, and brought an advance of 100*l.* beyond what its tolls let for last year.

Union of the Atlantic and Pacific.—We have received, says the New York News, the Grenada Chronicle of the 6th ult., which contains intelligence of the highest interest to the world. It appears that, while efforts are making in Europe to cut a canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific, through the isthmus of Panama, or to construct a railroad across the country to Tehuantepec at an enormous expense, the Americans have achieved the great work in the most simple way, and at comparatively little or no cost. They have discovered the Amazon to be navigable for steamers from its mouth, on the Atlantic, to Lima, in Peru, and within eight miles of Callao, one of the principal ports on the Pacific. To this the Richmond (U. S.) Enquirer adds:—"The expedition was made in September, 1844, by Captain John S. Klause, of Philadelphia, up the river Maranham, as far as the port of 'Banos,' in the republic of the Equador. Captain Klause says he was truly amazed at the quantity of minerals, dyewoods of various sorts, and other valuable woods, coffee, cocoa, white and common, of excellent quality; cotton, very fine and long, like wool; spices, balsam, raisins, wax, and other rich productions, which he met with in great abundance everywhere during his travels."

BIRTHS—On the 23d ult., at Malta, the lady of Capt. Tidy, A.D.C., of a son—1st inst., at the Vicarage, Arlingham, the lady of the Rev. John Lloyd Crawley, of a son—6th inst., in Eaton-square, Lady Bruce Chichester, of a daughter—6th inst., at Brockdish Rectory, in the county of Norfolk, the lady of the Rev. George France, of a son—7th inst., at 2, Hyde-park-place, Cumberland-gate, the lady of J. Fletcher Fletcher, of a daughter—7th inst., at Diptford Rectory, near Totnes, Devon, the lady of the Rev. William Cooper Johnson, of a daughter—7th inst., at Cheltenham, the lady of Major-General R. Tickell, C.B., Bengal Engineers, of a son—8th inst., at 69, Westbourne-terrace, Hyde-park, the lady of Thomas Faulconer, Esq., of a son—8th inst., at Brompton, the lady of Edmund Bryan, Esq., of a daughter—9th inst., at Kensington, the wife of Richard Valpy, jun., Esq., of a son—9th inst., at Morden Rectory, the wife of the Rev. W. C. Raffles Flint, of a daughter—9th inst., at Hither-green, Lewisham, the Hon. Mrs. Spring Rice, of a daughter—10th inst., the lady of Capt. Hathorn, Royal Navy, of a daughter—11th inst., at Walthamstow, Essex, Mrs. Albert Savory, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES—On the 27th ult., at Gothenburg, Count Charles Pontus Rosen, son of the late General Count Rosen, Governor of Gothenburg, to Caroline, only daughter of James Dickson, Esq.—6th inst., at Gretna-green, Captain C. P. Ibbetson, 11th Hussars, to Lady Adela Villiers—6th inst., at Northendon Church, the Hon. and Rev. John Thomas Pelham, Rector of Bergh Apton, Norfolk, to Henrietta, second daughter of the late Thomas William Tatton, Esq., of Withenshaw Hall, in the county of Chester—8th inst., at the British Embassy in Paris, William Frederick Baring, Esq., to Emily, eldest daughter of Sir Richard Jenkins, G.C.B.

DEATHS—On the 3d inst., Sir John C. Mortlock, one of Her Majesty's Commissioners of Excise, aged 68—6th inst., at his seat, High-cliff, near Christchurch, Hants, Lord Stuart de Rothesay—7th inst., in Windsor-barracks, Captain the Hon. William Henry Leicester, of the 1st Regiment of Grenadier Guards, aged 32—10th inst., the Rev. Joseph Procter, D.D., Master of Catherine Hall, Cambridge, aged 84—10th inst., John Irvine, Esq., M.P.—24th of September last, at Bellary, East Indies, Robert Penbice Ford, Lieutenant in Her Majesty's 63d Reg., and youngest son of Capt. Robert Ford, R.M., aged 23—26th ult., at St. Alban's-house, Ryde, Mary Sophia, the beloved wife of Henry Fawcett, Esq., and youngest daughter of the late Colonel H. Sullivan, C.B., 6th Foot—27th ult., on board the steamer City of Aberdeen, during her passage from London, on his way from Calcutta for the recovery of his health, Peter, youngest son of Alexander Mackie, of Aberdeen, aged 23—28th ult., at Cilrhiw, Pembrokeshire, Lancelot Baugh Allen, Esq., aged 71—4th inst., at Paris, aged [illegible] Dugard Webb, Esq., late of New College, Oxford, [illegible] the Rev. Willoughby Brassey, of Weymouth, aged [illegible] inst., in Philadelphia-place, Hackney-road, Thomas Carlile, Esq., formerly of the Coal-Exchange, and lately of Montpellier, in France, aged 62—7th inst., at Staffield-house, Lichfield, aged 25, Christiana, wife of the Rev. Henry Blackstone Wilkinson, Fellow of New College, Oxford—8th inst., at Canterbury, Georgiana, widow of the late Rear Admiral Joshua Sydney Horton, [illegible] inst., Charles Badham, M.D., Professor of Medicine in the University of Glasgow.

KING'S EVIL OR SCROFULA EFFECTUALLY CURED BY HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—Very lately, some of the most surprising cures in this terrible complaint have been made by the powerful virtues of these Universal Medicines; if space would admit, the particulars of some few cases might be cited, which would, no doubt, astonish our greatest medical men. Suffice to say, that many who had been cripples for years have been restored to the use of their limbs, their wounds being completely healed, while perfect health by means of the Pills has been the portion or blessing of all who have been so fortunate as to use these admirable medicines. Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's Establishment, 244, Strand, London.

FOR NOTHING.—A Pamphlet on Nervous or Mind Complaints, with Cases and Testimonials.—The nervous are invited to send to the Rev. Dr. Willis Moseley, 9, Bloomsbury-street, Bedford-square, for a small pamphlet, just published, on his new and most successful TREATMENT of NERVOUS or MIND COMPLAINTS, by which he now cures these diseases as certainly as water quenches thirst, and the pamphlet will be returned free if one stamp is sent.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, OR PEARL DENTRIFICE, patronised by Her MAJESTY, H.R.H. Prince ALBERT, the Royal Family, and the several Courts of Europe. A FRAGRANT WHITE POWDER, prepared from Oriental Herbs of inestimable virtue, for strengthening, preserving, and cleansing the teeth. It eradicates the factitious formation of tartar, and, by the removal of that extraneous substance, lends a salutary growth and freshness to the gums. It removes from the surface of the teeth the spots of incipient decay, polishes and preserves the enamel, substituting for discolour and the aspect of impurity, the most pure and pearl-like whiteness; while, from its salubrious and disinfecting qualities, it gives a sweetness and perfume to the breath, bestowing at once cleanliness, and the appearance and reality of health. Price 2*s.* 9*d.* per box duty included.

Caution.—To protect the public from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of Her Majesty's Stamps have authorised the Proprietors' Signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus,—A. Rowland and Son, 20, Hatton Garden, which is affixed to each Box. Ask for Rowland's Odonto. Sold by them, and by Perfumers and Chemists.

 All others are SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.

HEAL AND SON'S LIST OF BEDDING containing a full description of Weights, Sizes, and Prices, by which purchasers are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to make a good set of Bedding. Sent free by post, on application to their Establishment, the largest in London exclusively for the manufacture and sale of Bedding (no bedsteads or other furniture being kept).—Heal and Son, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, opposite the Chapel, Tottenham-court-road.

PATENT PORTABLE SUSPENSION STOVES, of which more than Four Thousand were sold last winter, are admirably adapted for Greenhouses and Conservatories, their principle of Ventilation effectually carrying off all those gases which are injurious to plants. Prospectuses may be obtained, and the Stoves seen in operation, at George & John Deane's, opening to the Monument, 46, King William-street, London-bridge.

TO SEEDSMEN.—WANTED immediately, a person well acquainted with the SEED BUSINESS. If possessing a general knowledge of the Nursery Business, it would be desirable.—Applications to be made in own hand writing, stating age, experience, whether married or single, and salary expected, to Messrs. Veitch & Son, Exeter.

SEED TRADE.—WANTED an ASSISTANT SHOPMAN, to live in the house.—Address, stating age and last situation, to B. Z., at the Office of this Paper.

EXOTIC NURSERY, KING'S ROAD, CHELSEA.

MESSRS. KNIGHT AND PERRY are in want of an Intelligent GROUND FOREMAN, who is practically acquainted with the culture and nomenclature of Fruit Trees, hardy Ornamental Trees and Shrubs, and Nursery Work in general. He must be of active, methodical habits, and be able to produce satisfactory references, not only for professional skill, but also for unimpeachable private character. Wages liberal.—Applications to be made by letter only.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS GARDENER, OR GARDENER AND BAILIFF.—A highly respectable married Man, without incumbrance, who has had extensive practice in Kitchen and Flower Gardening, including the Forcing of Fruit and Flowers, the cultivation of Greenhouse, Stove, and Orchidaceous Plants; also Landscape Gardening, the erection of Horticultural Buildings, and the management of Woods. Unexceptionable references will be given from noblemen of distinction where he has lived for nine years.—Direct to J. R., Botanic Garden, Chelsea.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man from the country, aged 25, who understands the management of the Kitchen and Flower Garden, Greenhouse, Pits, Frames, &c., and whose character will bear investigation. No objection to a single-handed place. Direct to A. B., Mr. Day's, Grocer, Samford-street, Portman-market.

TO NURSERYMEN, SEEDSMEN, AND OTHERS.

AS ASSISTANT IN A NURSERY OR SEED-SHOP.—A Youth, aged 17, who has a knowledge of the Seed Business, having been with a respectable Wholesale London Seedsman for upwards of two years. Salary not so much an object as a comfortable home. Country not objected to.—Direct to H. G. B., at the Office of this Paper.

TO SEEDSMEN.

AS SHOPMAN, OR ASSISTANT.—A person who has had many years' experience in first-rate establishments both in England and Scotland, where the Garden and Agricultural Seed Trade was conducted on a very extensive scale. He has a thorough knowledge of the various kinds of Grass and other Farm Seeds, the quantities and sorts suitable to be sown on the different descriptions of land, &c. Satisfactory references will be given.—Direct to A.B., care of Mr. Maund, Bromsgrove, Worcestershire.

FIVE POUNDS will be given to any person procuring a situation as UNDER-GARDENER for a young Man, who can have an eight years' character from his last employer. He has a good practical knowledge of Pines, Forcing, the Kitchen Garden, and Walling.—Direct to A. D., at Mr. Ayars's, New Hampton, Middlesex.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1845.

SCOTTISH WIDOWS' FUND AND LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

Constituted by Act of Parliament. Head Office, No. 5, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh. The Earl of ROSEBERY, K.T., President.

The Funds of the Society now accumulated and invested amount to One Million Five Hundred and Twenty Thousand Pounds sterling. The annual revenue is upwards of Two Hundred and Thirty-five Thousand Pounds sterling per annum.

The septennial investigation into the affairs of this Society takes place on the 1st of January, 1846. The constitution of the Society is such, that all persons becoming members previous to the 31st December next, derive a greater benefit than those who delay doing so till the following year.

No better proof of the estimation in which the Society is held can be afforded than by stating the fact that, in two years alone the amount offered for insurance was no less than 1,584,681*l.*, being upwards of one million and a half; and as to the advantages offered by the Society, the best and most practical evidence on this point is to be found in the following statement, from which will be seen the amount that would be payable six months after the death of a Member, insured for 1000*l.*, in any one of the years 1815, 1820, 1825, 1830, and 1835, in the event of the death happening previous to the close of this year and after payment of the premium for the current year :—

Year of Entry.	Benefit Assured.	Benefit with Bonus Additions at 1st Jan., 1839.	Amount payable if becoming a Claim in 1845, after Payment of the Premium for that Year.
	£	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
1815	1000	1587 4 6	1809 8 7
1820	1000	1345 4 0	1533 10 7
1825	1000	1259 14 0	1436 1 2
1830	1000	1174 4 0	1338 11 9
1835	1000	1080 0 0	1231 4 0

The principles upon which the Society is founded are those of the strictest equity, and such as to relieve Members as much as possible from anxiety as to whether the sums to be paid under the policies will be greater or less according as they may happen to die before or after the period of investigation.

As it is a matter of so much importance, and indeed essentially necessary for any society desirous of placing all the members upon an equal and just footing, to maintain the system of paying a proportion of the profits, in the way of contingent prospective additions, and as the principles and working of this system are by many not duly considered, and by others not understood, the Directors have prepared a short and simple "Explanation of the Principles upon which the Profits of the Society are ascertained and allocated amongst the Members," which may be had on application to the Manager, at the head office, or to any of the agents of the Society.

JOHN MACKENZIE, Manager.
WILLIAM GEORGE, Chief Clerk.
LONDON-OFFICE, 7, PALL-MALL. HUGH M'KEAN, Agent.

SILVER-PLATED DISH-COVERS.—A. B. SAVORY & SONS, MANUFACTURING SILVERSMITHS, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank of England, submit for choice in their Plate-rooms many patterns of SILVER-PLATED DISH-COVERS, of Sheffield Manufacture, from 15 to 20 Guineas the set, viz. :—

DOUBLE DOME PATTERN.	Size.	£ s. d.	THE MELON PATTERN.	Size.	£ s. d.
Plated Dish-cover,	20 in.	5 13 6	1 Pltd. Dish-cover,	20 in.	5 17 0
,, Dish-cover,	18 in.	4 7 6	1 ,, Dish-cover,	16 in.	4 14 6
,, Dish-cover,	16 in.	5 12 6	2 ,, Dish-cover,	14 in.	6 6 0
Per set . .		£15 13 6	Per set . .		£16 17 6

The above have Silver Handles and Mountings, and Silver Shields for engraving the Crest or Coat of Arms. A Price Current, illustrated by drawings, and containing every information relative to the purchase of Silver or Sheffield Plate, may be had on application, or will be sent into the country free of postage, in answer to a paid letter.

News of the Week.

THE rumour which was current last week respecting the return of Ministers to town preparatory to the assembling of a Privy Council, has proved to be correct. All the members of the Cabinet arrived in town from their country residences during the week, with the exception of the Lord Chancellor who has been seriously indisposed, and Lord Granville Somerset who is absent with his family abroad. On Wednesday another meeting of the Cabinet took place, which was protracted, it is understood, to an unusually late hour; and on Thursday, a Privy Council was held at Windsor Castle, at which it was ordered that Parliament be further prorogued from Thursday the 27th inst., to Tuesday the 16th of December.

The news from the United States is daily becoming more important, and the excitement prevailing in all parts of the Republic on the Oregon question is a sufficient indication of the anxiety with which the forthcoming message of President Polk, so far as it affects the question of peace or war, is looked for on the other side of the Atlantic. The advices brought by the two steamships which have arrived this week, do not conceal the precarious state of the relations of the two countries. Even the most moderate organs of public opinion, while they deprecate war, are at a loss to suggest any effectual means for overcoming the difficulties of the case; and nothing is at present certain, except that the negotiation has made no progress, the claims of the two parties being apparently irreconcilable, and neither being disposed to yield. In the meantime, the journals indulge in various conjectures and declamations, among which it is difficult to gather any authentic facts on which we may rely. It is, however, confidently stated that Mr. Pakenham, our Minister at Washington, has recently proposed to Mr. Buchanan, the American Secretary of State, that the Oregon question should be submitted to some European power for arbitration. Mr. Buchanan, it is said, was disposed to receive this proposition in a favourable light, but the President objected to it on the ground that the Western States, whom nothing short of 54° 40′ latitude will satisfy, would never consent to such an arrangement. It is also stated that on the failure of this proposal, Mr. Pakenham, finding there was little hope of adjusting the question either by compromise or arbitration, proposed to leave the whole territory in its present condition for 20 years, under the joint protection of England and the United States, and with the stipulation that at the end of the said period its then inhabitants may attach themselves to either country, or erect themselves into an independent sovereignty, as they may prefer. This proposition appears to be acceptable to the majority of the American papers, which consider that the effect of such an arrangement would be to give the whole tract eventually to the United States, since, by opening the Oregon to settlers from both countries on equal terms, the territory will, in their opinion, at the end of 20 years, contain ten Americans to one Englishman. The proposition, however, appears to be nothing more than an expedient to gain time, during which the relations of the two countries will still be kept in jeopardy by the uncertainty of tenure; and for this reason it is considered unlikely that such a proposal ever emanated from our Minister. A few weeks will put us in possession of the President's Message, and remove many doubts that now obscure the question; but in the meantime we may mention a current rumour at New York that the President will maintain, in stronger language than he employed in the message of December last, the right of the United States to the territory, unless in the meantime some conciliatory propositions emanate from our Government.—From the River Plate we have accounts of the capture of Colonia by the French and English squadron, and of the occupation of the island of Martin Garcia by the Monte Videan forces. Rosas had prohibited all communication with the English and French ships, and as the effect of this interdict was to cut off their supplies, it was generally believed that the city of Buenos Ayres would be blockaded forthwith by the allied squadron.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal family continue at Windsor Castle, and are quite well. On Saturday Prince Albert and Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg, came to town, and attended the amateur performance at St. James's theatre. On Monday the Duke Ferdinand and Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg left by the Great Western railway for Exeter and Plymouth, at which place they will embark for Lisbon. On the same day Prince Hilal, son of the Imaum of Muscat, was presented to Her Majesty by the Earl of Aberdeen. On Tuesday, Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Prince and Princess Augustus of Saxe Coburg Gotha, left the Castle in the char-a-banc, to visit to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, at Richmond Park, and afterwards returned to the Castle. On Thursday the Queen held a Court and Privy Council at the Castle, which was attended by Prince Albert, the members of the Cabinet, and the great Officers of State. Viscount Hawarden has succeeded Lord Byron as the Lord in Waiting, and Capt. the Hon. A. Duncombe has succeeded Major General Sir F. Stovin as Groom in Waiting to Her Majesty. According to present arrangements, Her Majesty and Prince Albert will take their departure on Tuesday next, for Osborne House, accompanied by the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal.

ARRIVAL OF THE ARCHDUKE CONSTANTINE OF RUSSIA.—His Royal Highness the Grand Duke Constantine, second son of the Emperor of Russia, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Saturday morning, shortly before daybreak, on his way to Italy. His Royal Highness was on board the Russian frigate Ingermanland, bearing the flag of Admiral Bruhl, which vessel, accompanied by a corvette, came to anchor within the breakwater at an early hour. At 8 o'clock his Royal Highness was saluted by Her Majesty's ship Queen, the flag-ship, and by the Citadel. The Russian vessels shortly afterwards returned the salute, but his Imperial Highness was desirous to avoid any formal recognition upon the Sunday, and therefore landed privately at Plymouth, after sunset, and proceeded to the suite of apartments prepared for him at the Royal Hotel. On Monday, his Imperial Highness received Admiral Sir John West, and all the naval and military authorities of the port; and having returned their visit, was present in the evening at a ball at Government House, given by the Port-Admiral. On Tuesday, his Imperial Highness viewed every portion of the Dockyard, accompanied by Baron Brunnow, the Russian Minister, and the superior officers of the Ingermanland. His Imperial Highness in the evening attended the Plymouth Theatre, where the performances were immediately under his patronage. On Wednesday the Grand Duke received a visit from the Saxe Coburg Princes, after which he proceeded to the dockyard for a second inspection. In the evening he dined with the Earl and Countess of Morley, at Saltram, where he slept the night. On Thursday he was engaged hunting and shooting on the grounds of the noble earl, at whose mansion a ball took place in the evening, for the gratification of His Imperial Highness. Yesterday (Friday) the Grand Duke dined with General Sir H. Murray, at Government-house. The corvette which accompanied the Ingermanland has been brought into harbour for the purpose of undergoing some necessary repairs, which will occupy several days.

Death of the Earl of Verulam.—The death of this nobleman took place on Sunday morning, at Gorhambury, the ancient family seat, near St. Albans. The deceased, James Walter Grimston, Earl of Verulam, was only son of the first Lord Verulam, and third Viscount Grimston in Ireland, and Henrietta, only daughter and heir of Mr. Edward Walter. He was born in 1775, and was, therefore, in his 71st year. The late Earl married, in 1807, Lady Charlotte Jenkinson, only daughter of Charles, first Earl of Liverpool, and sister of the present Lord Steward. His lordship leaves a family of nine children, of whom the eldest, Viscount Grimston, M.P., born in 1809, succeeds to the title. The deceased was Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of Hertfordshire.

Death of Lord Hartland.—We have to record the death of Lord Hartland, who died on the 11th inst., at Stokestown House, county Roscommon, Ireland. The deceased nobleman was third son of the first Lord Hartland, by Catherine, daughter of the first Viscount Mountcashell. His lordship, who was in holy orders, was born in 1772, and succeeded to the title on the decease of his brother in 1835. He married, in 1813, the third daughter of Mr. William Hume, of Hume-wood, by whom he had no issue. The title, therefore, becomes extinct. Major Mahon, cousin of the deceased lord, will inherit the whole of the landed property.

Death of the Dowager Lady Holland.—The Dowager Lady Holland expired on Sunday morning, at her residence in South-street. Her ladyship was taken seriously ill on Sunday se'nnight, and since that day has gradually sunk. Her ladyship, who was daughter and heir of Mr. Richard Vassal, of Jamaica, was in her 76th year. She married the late Sir Godfrey Webster, Bart., of Battle Abbey, but that marriage was dissolved by act of Parliament, and in 1797, she married the late Lord Holland, by whom she leaves issue Lord Holland, our minister at the court of Tuscany, Lady Lilford, &c.

Death of Viscountess Canterbury.—The Viscountess Canterbury died at Clifton on Sunday evening, after a long and painful illness, in the presence of the Countess of Blessington, Captain and the Misses Home Purves, and the Hon. Miss Manners Sutton, son and daughters of her ladyship. Lady Canterbury was the second daughter of Mr. Edmund Power, of Clonmel, and married, first, John Home Purves, Esq., brother to the late Sir Wm. Home Purves Bart., and, secondly, Viscount Canterbury, whom she has survived scarcely four months.

Death of the Right Hon. Wm. Dundas.—The right hon. gentleman died at Quarry House, his residence at St. Leonards-on-Sea, on Friday last. He was second son of the Right Hon. Robert Dundas, lord chief baron of the Court of Exchequer in Scotland, by the eldest daughter of the first Viscount Melville. The deceased was bred to the English bar, and in 1800 he was nominated one of the commissioners of the India Board, when he was appointed a privy councillor. In 1804 he was appointed Secretary at War, in the room of the Right Hon. Charles Bathurst, by Mr. Pitt, and discharged the duties of that office until 1806. He represented Dain and Dingwell in the House of Commons, and up to the election in 1831, had sat for Edinburgh in several Parliaments. The deceased gentleman held, at his death, the office of Lord Clerk Register, Keeper of the Signet, and Register of Sasines, in Scotland. He received a sum of little short of 4,000*l.* annually from the public purse.

Parliamentary Movements.—The death of the Earl of Verulam, and the consequent accession of Lord Grimston to the House of Lords, will cause a vacancy for Hertfordshire.—It is said that another vacancy will shortly occur at Windsor, Mr. Neville being about to receive the appointment of Commissioner of Customs.—Mr. Daniel O'Connell, jun., is to succeed Mr. Pigott as the Repeal Member for Clonmel, Mr. Pigott's resignation being expected.—Mr. Alexander M'Carthy has come forward as the new Repeal candidate for Cork.—The Hon. George Handcock, and Mr. Macartney, of Lissanoure, are spoken of as the probable candidates for Antrim, vacant by the death of Mr. Irving.

The Church.—In compliance with the Queen's congé d'elire, which appeared in the Gazette of Friday, Dr. Samuel Wilberforce, the new Bishop of Oxford, was on Monday elected with the usual formalities by the Dean and Canons of Christ Church.—At the Court at Windsor Castle on Thursday, Bishop Bagot did homage to her Majesty on his translation to the See of Bath and Wells.

Lord Lieutenancy.—At the Privy Council on Thursday, Lord Viscount Hill took the oaths on being appointed by her Majesty Lord Lieutenant of Shropshire.

Winter Assizes.—Mr. Baron Parke and Mr. Justice Williams will hold a winter assize at Liverpool, and Mr. Baron Platt at York. No other assizes are to be held this winter.

Poor Law Commission.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Edward Turner Boyd Twisleton, Esq., to be the Fourth Poor-law Commissioner, to carry out the objects of the Commission in Ireland.

Foreign.

France.—The affairs of this country still occupy the Paris papers to a much greater extent than domestic polities or events. The Corn-law question and the potato question are the chief objects of their attention. Some of the journals regard Sir Robert Peel as triumphant over the Duke of Wellington, and as lording it over his other colleagues. Oddly enough, however, they arrive at these conclusions on opposite assumptions. One party will have it that the Premier proposed throwing open the ports instantly to the admission of foreign corn, and thus affording prompt relief and prospective security to the poor of England and Ireland. Another portion of the Paris press is persuaded that "regard for consistency" induced Sir Robert Peel to set at defiance the representations of the other members of the Cabinet, and refuse acquiescence in their recommendations to anticipate the evil day. These journals regard with surprise the confidence expressed by certain English papers in the sufficiency of the harvest, after the demonstration of the fact, that two-thirds of the exclusive food of six millions of the people of Ireland has been destroyed.—It appears that in the course of last week a definitive arrangement took place between the companies proposing to bid for the Paris and Strasburg and the Tours and Nantes lines, which are to be adjudicated on the 25th inst. In each case a fusion of all the companies puts an end to further competition; one party only will appear to bid for each line. The proportion of shares to be subsequently distributed among all is fixed, so that even the most hopeless of those associations will receive a number of shares sufficient to indemnify the founders of the schemes for their trouble in forming and advertising them. These combinations are condemned in no measured terms by some of the journals which regard them as "forbidding all idea or hope of real bonâ fide competition in future." They are, however, in conformity with the professed desire of Government to have respectable, firm, solvent contractors for undertakings of such importance. It is understood in Paris that if a similar coalition or fusion shall not take place in the cases respectively of the Paris and Lyons and the Creil and St. Quentin lines, to be adjudicated on the 20th December, the Minister of Public Works will adjourn the adjudication of each indefinitely, and apply to the Chambers for a law to authorize the letting of them and of all other railroad lines by the Government direct.—The Moniteur publishes a Royal ordinance convoking the session of the General Councils of Agriculture, Manufactures, and Trade, for the 15th of December next.—The Minister of the Interior has just addressed to the prefects of the departments a circular calling on them to draw up, according to the wish expressed by the committee on the budget of receipts of 1846, a statement of the mortmain property belonging to the several charitable establishments in each department. The minister also directs the prefects to collect detailed information relative to the property of every kind belonging to the hospitals and other charitable establishments within their districts.—The Minister of War has received a report from General de Bar, dated Algiers, the 7th; two reports from Marshal Bugeaud, one dated the 3d, and the other the 5th; and a report dated the 5th, from General Reveu. They contain details of some razzias on the 30th ult., and the 1st and 5th inst., in which the French arms obtained some success. In one of his reports Marshal Bugeaud says, "We have nothing more to fear from Abd-el-Kader, who has probably re-entered Morocco, having failed in his attempt at a general insurrection." The Sud of Marseilles, of the 13th, says a report was current there from Oran, of the death of Abd-el-Kader. There is nothing, however, from any other source to induce us to attach the least credit to this statement.—All the vessels destined for the western coast of Africa have received orders to leave France as soon as possible. The Caraibe, steam-frigate, which bears the admiral's flag, is to proceed, in the first instance, to Cadiz, to come to some understanding, it is said, with the officer in command of the English squadron, relative to the object of their joint mission.—The Duchesse d'Aumale gave birth to a son (the 11th grandson of King Louis-Philippe) on Saturday evening last. The young prince was created by the King "Prince of Conde."—The Duke of Sault Tavannes, peer of France, has put a period to his existence. One of his friends, upon entering his chamber on the morning of the 12th inst., discovered him suspended by the neck; he immediately cut him down, and ran for medical aid, but the vital spark had long fled, and the body was quite cold. This act of despair is attributed to personal griefs, and a variety of conjectures are afloat as to the real cause. The Duke of Sault Tavannes was quite a young man, tall and powerful, and of a most vigorous constitution.—The marriage of the sister of the Duke de Bordeaux to the hereditary Prince of Lucca was performed on the 10th, at Frohsdorff, in the presence of the Duke of Lucca, the Empress and Empress-mother of Austria, and all the Archdukes and Archduchesses at Vienna, attended by their Court.

Spain.—Accounts from Madrid of the 13th ult. state that an insurrection had broken out at Valencia, in which several soldiers of the garrison had taken part. The movement, however, was speedily put down, and a court-martial had been held at which 12 of the soldiers had been sentenced to death, and, by the latest accounts, 10 of these unfortunate persons were on the way to the place of execution. It appears, also, that several of the most respectable citizens of Valencia had been banished from that place on 24 hours' notice, without trial, or any known proof that they had been implicated in the affair at all. The dissatisfaction in the country at the conduct of the Government is daily on the increase, and there is a strong feeling that soon after the meeting of the Cortes a change must take place in the Cabinet.—The magnificent Alcazar of Seville, built in the 11th century for the Moorish King Abdurrahman, upon the ancient site of the Roman Prætor's palace, is being repaired and decorated under the Intendent of the Queen's palace. It is said that her Majesty intends visiting Seville next year. — General Oribe has been appointed Captain-General of Madrid instead of General Cordova, whose resignation has been accepted. The Heraldo has a letter from Algesiras, stating that two Gibraltar smuggling vessels with valuable cargoes have been captured by the Spanish steamer Vigilante, and their crews incarcerated at Algesiras.

Italy.—Letters from the frontier of Romagna, state that in the evenings of the 1st and 2d a sanguinary conflict took place at Bologna between the Swiss mercenaries and the Pontifical dragoons and the Custom-house guards, who have always been opposed to the Swiss. It is also said that disturbances have occurred at Perugia, towards which town a column of Swiss was on its march. The sentences of the commission at Ravenna, anterior to the late disturbances, have been confirmed at Rome. More than 40 persons have been condemned to the galleys for various periods.—A letter from Ancona of the 18th Sept., signed by an Italian Catholic, states that the church festivals had just terminated in commemoration of a pretended miracle performed by a painting of the Madonna in the cathedral church of that town, in opening and moving its eyes, and that "the severance of M. Ronge in Germany is but a foreshadow of what will inevitably occur in Italy on a large scale on the first occasion; for the mass of the population is now irresistibly travelling to two extreme points, viz.—fanaticism and infidelity,—driven thereto by the excessive corruption of the church, now no longer Catholic, but Roman, from which calamitous condition we hope to behold it ere long raised by skilful and curative hands."—A letter from Florence, of the 6th inst., says "Ibrahim Pacha has met with a cordial reception here from the upper circles of Tuscan society. Yesterday his Highness passed the evening at the house of Lady Normanby, where a large party had been invited to meet him. He rendered himself very agreeable, and talked a great deal with the ladies. Before leaving Pisa, the Pacha was invited to a grand banquet offered to him in the name of the Grand Duke and the principal authorities. On his health being given, he acknowledged the toast as follows:—"Not to the prosperity of Tuscany, because she is prosperous; not to the happiness of her people, because they are happy; but to the preservation of the good Prince who governs them." His Highness was to leave Leghorn on the 13th in the Nile steam-frigate for Genoa. After visiting that town, Ibrahim Pacha will proceed to Toulon, the arsenal of which he has a great desire to see. He will arrive at Marseilles about the end of the month, and, after a short sojourn at that town, he will pursue his route to the baths of Vernet, where, it is supposed, he will pass the winter months.

Greece.—The last accounts from Greece state that Lord Aberdeen has written a despatch to Sir E. Lyons, and desires him to communicate it to the Greek Government, in which he declares that, on the part of England, he will insist on the strict execution of the treaty of 1832, which sets aside the revenues of Greece to the payment, before anything else, of the interest of the loan contracted by that Government, and guaranteed by Great Britain, France, and Russia. In the course of the despatch Lord Aberdeen makes some severe comments on the vicious financial administration of M. Coletti and his colleagues generally, and points out in particular the War Department, in which the expenditure has been most lavish. The Presse says that the effect of Lord Aberdeen's note has been so great, that the Coletti Ministry, which by its violence and maladministration had previously lost so much of its influence that its existence was doubtful, is now on the point of expiring.

Turkey and Egypt.—Letters from Constantinople of the 28th ult. bring the imperial firman dated the 22d, appointing Redschid Pacha Minister for Foreign Affairs, in the room of Chekib Effendi. The latter was not to proceed to London until he had completely terminated his mission in Syria. Selim Bey, one of the Secretaries of the Sultan, sailed on the 27th for Tunis. He was the bearer of presents for the Bey, and of a firman confirming him in his functions. A fire took place at the town of the Dardanelles on the 25th, which consumed all the Greek and Hebrew houses, 40 Turkish and 70 Armenian, a number of stores, a synagogue, and two mosques.—Letters from Alexandria of the 26th ult. announce that the portrait of Queen Victoria was presented to the Pacha, at Cairo on the 24th by the British Consul, Col. Barnett. The Consul was met at the entrance of the citadel by an entire regiment under arms, and Artim Bey and Edhem Bey introduced him to Mehemet Ali, who stood up to receive the picture, and raised it to his head as a mark of respect. The gift of Her Majesty appeared to have produced a deep impression on the Egyptians.—The Prime Minister, Artim Bey, issued a notice on the 22d that his Highness had decided on prohibiting for the present the exportation of all grain and pulse in consequence of the short crops. Prices have, therefore, risen considerably; lentils, which only a short time ago were at 35½, are now being sold at 75 piastres the ardeb, equal to 30*s*. the quarter, free on board, without freight. Beans from 50 have risen to 60 piastres the ardeb, equal to 25*s*. the quarter. Wheat is equal to 28*s*. the quarter. It is supposed that the prohibition will last about three months, but no one can tell with certainty, as it depends entirely on the pleasure of the Pacha and his Minister.

United States and Mexico.—The Great Britain steam ship arrived at Liverpool on Monday night, from New York, and the Hibernia steam ship arrived on Tuesday morning from Boston and Halifax. The Great Britain experienced very severe weather after she left New York, on the 28th ult., so much so that her propellers lost all except one fan six days after she left, and for the last 14 days she sailed under canvass only. It is gratifying, even under this disadvantage, to find that she made the voyage in 20 days in perfect safety, although the weather was very rough. She brought 23 passengers. The Great Western arrived at New York on the 28th, the day the Great Britain left. The Hibernia, which also made a long voyage, brought upwards of 60 passengers. The unusual duration of the passage was caused by her having struck upon a rock off the southernmost point of Cape Race on the 5th inst., during a dense fog, and amid strong currents. Her engines were immediately reversed, and the vessel having been freed, she proceeded to St. John's to repair the slight damage which had been received. She sailed thence on the 9th inst. The chief feature in the advices bears upon the Oregon question, which is the subject of universal discussion amongst the journals. The following article is from the New York Herald, and some credit appears to be attached to the statement which it contains:—

"The relations between the United States and England are becoming more and more interesting and intricate every day. The sensation that pervaded both countries in the matter of the annexation of Texas, has been finally settled—that is, as far as this country is concerned—and the spirit that is now predominant among the American people, is that of further acquisition of territory, and this brings us into immediate collision with the European cabinets. Now let us see. During the last few days in particular affairs have reached a highly interesting point, and there have been rumours of all descriptions afloat, including all kinds of propositions, alternatives, and plans started with reference to the settlement of the Oregon question with England. One day the newspapers are full of statements, representing that the British Minister at Washington had proposed leaving the settlement of this affair with the American government to arbitration, which method had been declined by Mr. Polk and his Cabinet. Another day this is contradicted, and a plan is briefly alluded to for the settlement of it on entirely new principles, which would combine the operation of time and future events as the elements of arbitration.—On this subject the Journal of Commerce states, that 'Mr Pakenham, the British minister at Washington, finding that there is little hope of adjusting the Oregon question by compromise or arbitration, has proposed to leave the whole territory in its present condition for twenty years, under the joint protection of England and the United States, and with the stipulation that at the end of said period its then inhabitants may attach themselves to either country, or erect themselves into an independent sovereignty, as they may prefer.' Another journal gives the following, 'Great Britain now proposes to leave Oregon in the joint occupancy of the American and British authorities for 15 years, and after the expiration of that time, to submit the question of government to the inhabitants, leaving them to be Americans or British as they choose, or to be independent, and to form a government of their own.' These statements, however, are entirely erroneous and incomplete. That there has been a new proposition is indeed the case, but it comes from a very distinguished ex functionary of the British Government, who is now resident in Canada, and we hear that it has reached the consideration of the American Government, and that it will in a short time be also before the British Government, and may become the basis of future negotiations. The following is the plan in detail which has given rise to the rumours now flying about:—'That the President name four subjects of Her Majesty, therefrom to select two, and the Queen name four citizens for the President to select two, to whom the question is to be given, with authority to these four commissioners to choose an umpire, whose decision is to be conclusive. That in case the commissioners so selected do not come to an agreement, such as they would consider likely to be acceptable to the majority of the community of both Powers, that they should designate, as far as practicable, such portions of the territory in dispute, same to be regarded as neutral ground until the year 1860, or as soon after as the resident settlers thereon, for five preceding years, reached 100,000. That then the said resident settlers should have the privilege in convention, under terms to be fixed for holding the same, by said commissioners, and that upon two-thirds agreeing to form an independent government, or annex themselves either to the United States or to Her Britannic Majesty, but granting to each of said Powers equal privileges as to trade, &c. The lands in the meantime, to be open to actual resident settlers, to be extent of 200 acres if five miles from tide or navigable waters, 100 acres within five miles, and 50 acres if within one mile, one-fourth of said 50 acres clear to front the navigable waters—same to be regarded under such authorised agency as should be mutually agreed on by the commissioners.' It will be perceived that the general character of this proposition is of that nature, that it would go far to compromise the various difficulties that have hitherto presented themselves, and seems to embrace most of the peculiar features that would conform to the popular opinions of the American people, in fact it would fully support the opinion that Mr. Calhoun gave on the subject, as to the necessity of leaving time to determine many of the more detailed parts of the affair."

The Courier and Inquirer says:—

"There is a good deal of speculation afloat as to the actual posture of the negotiations between our Government and that of England respecting the Oregon territory, and some little uneasiness lest delay should breed discord. A general impression prevails here that a proposition to refer the whole matter to arbitration has been refused by this Government; and as the period approaches for the meeting of Congress, the first week in December, there is some feverishness manifested as to how the President may treat this topic in his message. On this point we hazard only this surmise, that the message will not be less decided in maintaining the claim of this country to the whole of Oregon than was the inaugural message delivered by the President, and to which exception was taken in England. Whether Congress will go any further than merely to re-echo in speeches the language of the message remains to be seen. We venture not to speculate upon what, in any mode in which it can be treated, will prove a ticklish affair."

A correspondent of the Commercial Advertiser writing on the 28th ult., from Washington says—

"I am informed, on what seems to be good authority, that Mr. M'Lane, the United States Minister in London, has written to some of his friends in Maryland that unless the United States shall recede from their position on the Oregon question war with England is inevitable."

It is also said that Mr. M'Lane dissatisfied that the President will not allow him to attempt any negotiation with the British Cabinet on the subject, has requested leave to return home; but the Government papers deny the accuracy of this statement, though there is said to be some foundation for it. The President and his Cabinet are said to be at issue not only on the Oregon question but also with respect to the tariff, and some changes are expected.—Some of the papers state that the true end and aim of Sir Robert Peel and his Cabinet has not been at all directed towards the acquisition of Oregon, but that California is the grand prize at which he aims. They contend that by creating an excitement in the public mind regarding two territories for which he cared nothing, he has been in hopes to withdraw attention from the territory which is to him of more importance than any of them, and under cover of the confusion created by diplomatising, quietly transfer it to the government of Great Britain. The Courier and Inquirer, of the 31st, usually so temperate in its tone, concludes an article upon the possession of California with the bold remark, —"We lay it down as an axiom, to be enforced by war if necessary, that when Mexico ceases to own California it must constitute an integral part of the American Union."—The religious movement in Germany has led to a corresponding one in the United States, and the Roman Catholics are almost in a body throwing off their allegiance to the Pope.—On the 26th ult., a sharp shock of an earthquake was felt through Long Island, part of New York state, and Connecticut. Houses were much shaken and some damage done.—The Mormon war may be considered as at an end. The Mormons have pledged themselves, verbally and in writing, to leave the state of Illinois next spring. Gen. Harden, in his letter, communicating the arrangement, says, it is the intention of the Mormons to locate themselves west of the Rocky Mountains. The St. Louis Republican states that Vancouver's Island, near the mouth of the river Columbia, is to be their final destination. A great meeting, held in their temple at Nauvoo, had issued a circular inviting their brethren in all parts of the United States, said to amount to 12,000 souls, to join them.—From Mexico we learn that on the 15th Sept., General Herrera was formally proclaimed President of the Republic, and upon the morning of the 16th took the oaths of office, in the presence of both Houses of Congress, assembled in the Chamber of Deputies. The President pronounced a discourse upon the occasion, in which he admitted that all the powers of Government are paralysed for want of means. In pointing out particular evils from this source the President said:—"The army cannot move; territory usurped will remain usurped; and the hope of recovering it being once lost, the usurpation will be successively and gradually continued until it embraces the whole republic, and (I shudder to confess it), Mexico, with so many elements of abundance and of greatness, will disappear from the number of independent nations."—Accounts from Montreal state that the afflicting malady under which the Governor-General has laboured for many years (cancer of the face), has now assumed a phagadenic character, by which a portion of the cheek has been destroyed. His Excellency's health, however, has not materially suffered, although it has been necessary for him to observe a very rigid abstinence.

South America.—The Hamburgh barque Laura and Louisa, arrived at Falmouth on Sunday, from Buenos Ayres, having sailed from that city on the 19th Sept. Prior to her departure, letters had been received by the mercantile establishments in Buenos Ayres, from Monte Video, earnestly entreating them, on the recommendation of Mr. Ouseley, to wind up their affairs, even at a sacrifice, in consequence of measures which most likely would be taken by the English and French. All intercourse between the opposing parties had been stopped. Colonia had been taken on the 31st August, by Garibaldi, with the Monte Video flotilla, covered by the French steamer Fulton, and English steamer Firebrand, having on board Admirals Lainé and Inglefield. A slight resistance was offered from three field-pieces on the beach; but subsequently Oribe's troops retired, and took up a position outside the town. The captors found everything moveable gone from the town, or destroyed, and not a single inhabitant remaining. Oribe had fired a part of the town before he left, but the flames did not spread far. The troops from Monte Video, consisting chiefly of Italian refugees, commenced a pillage, and, breaking open the storehouses, indulged in potations of strong liquors, leaving what they did not drink to run waste in the street. Even the church of Colonia was not respected, and the altar became a drinking table. None of the English and French sailors partook of these excesses, but applied themselves assiduously, after something like order had been restored, to the repair of the fortifications. This being done, and seven pieces of cannon from the ships being mounted, the allied squadron placed the town in the hands of a garrison of Monte Videan troops, and returned to Monte Video. Four days after, the island of Martin Garcia, which had already been abandoned by the troops of Rosas, was occupied by Garibaldi, and all the coast of Uruguay was placed in a state of blockade. In the meantime, Rosas had prohibited all intercourse with the vessels of the allied squadron, and was arming every individual capable of carrying a musket; even the oldest inhabitants of Buenos Ayres. It was calculated that the English and French inhabitants of Buenos Ayres and suburbs could not fall short of 12,000 persons, and in case the merchants broke up their establishments, they would have to sacrifice everything, from the poverty and hostility of the people, who were kept by Rosas in thorough ignorance of the real state of affairs between himself and the two Powers, and the most extravagant fabrications were circulated to engender enmity to the English and French. Provisions were getting very scanty among the squadron, by the severe interdict of the Buenos Ayrean Government.

West Indies.—By the Trent steamer, which arrived at Southampton on Tuesday, we have accounts from Jamaica to the 24th Oct. The papers give a cheering view of the prospect of affairs in the islands generally. The addresses of the Governors of Jamaica and Barbadoes on the opening of the Legislative Assemblies both refer with satisfaction to the position and progress of trade in their districts. The sugar crop at Jamaica is said to have been good, and the result of Coolie labour was as far as at present tested, beneficial to the estates on which it had been employed. Railways were still attracting attention, not only in respect to those started for the improvement of conveyance in Jamaica, but also in behalf of those connected with Barbadoes, Trinidad, and Demerara. According to the address delivered at the opening of the Legislative Council of Barbadoes, the treasury of that island is in an easy and comfortable condition. A want of rain, however, had been experienced, which had called forth some complaints from the planters.

City.

Money Market, Friday.—Three per Cent. Consols, 96⅛ to ⅜; for the Account, 96½; Three per Cent. Reduced, 94⅜; Bank Stock, 205; India Stock, 264; Exchequer Bills, 27*s.* to 28*s.* prem.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK.

TUESDAY—DECLARATION OF INSOLVENCY—J. Pearce, Uxbridge, Licensed Victualler.

BANKRUPTS—J. Cuthorpe, Brick-hill-lane, Upper Thames street, Colourman—W. Vickers, Moorgate-street, Bill Broker—J. Crane, Stamford-bridge, Fulham, Maltster—W. A. Darby, Charles-street, Westbourne-terrace, Paddington, Builder—B. Purnell, Rupert street, Whitechapel, Dealer in Vinegar—J. Lovegrove, Rotherhithe street, Barge Builder—T. Wilkinson, Quadrant, Regent-street, Ironmonger—B. Ware, Strand, Tailor and Draper—H. P. Price, Holywell, Flintshire, Linen and Woollen Draper—S. Abbott, Nether Stowey, Somersetshire, Linen Draper—T. Bailey, Bedminster, Bristol, Builder—T. Simpson, Stourbridge, Worcestershire, Stable Keeper—W. Ashton, Pickering, Yorkshire, Spirit Merchant—C. Robbins and W. S. Martin, Birmingham, merchants—J. O. Harvey, Newark, Nottinghamshire, Grocer.

FRIDAY—J. Brown, Hornsey-road, Middlesex, Builder—C. Bowen, Harp-lane, Tower-street, City, Wine Merchant—G. Pratt and J. Bodle, Addison-road, North, and Queen's-road, Notting-hill, Builders—J. Hammer, Vine-place, Tabernacle-square, Hoxton, Glove Manufacturer and Hosier—J. C. Kendall Canonbury Tavern, Islington, Tavern Keeper—G. Sawyer, Lewes, Sussex, Tailor and Draper—W. H. Blackmore, Dean-street, Soho, Plumber—J. Parr, South Wharf-road, Paddington, Coal Dealer—C. M. Harman, Millbank-street, Westminster, Veterinary Surgeon—R. Worley, Newgate-street, Provision Merchant—W. Atkin, Stockton-upon-Tees, Grocer—W. L. Kelly, Tewkesbury, Gloucestershire, Printer—W. Challoner, High-street, Lincoln, Tailor.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Late Elopement.—Captain and Lady Adela Ibbetson arrived at Mr. Ibbetson's residence, Chester-terrace, Regent's-park, on Friday evening, from Edinburgh, in order to concert measures for their marriage agreeably to the forms of the Established Church. All the arrangements for the marriage were completed in the most private manner possible, and on Monday the ceremony took place at St. Pancras Church, Lord Wriothesley Russell, canon of Windsor, being the officiating minister. Captain Ibbetson was accompanied by his father, Mr. Henry Ibbetson, and Lady Adela was attended by Mr. Ibbetson, jun. and Mrs. Ibbetson. Owing to the privacy preserved there were not more than 20 spectators of the proceedings. Lady Adela was given away by her cousin, Mr. William Russell (Accountant-general of the Court of Chancery), who was her only relative present. The ceremony having concluded, the gallant Captain and his bride passed to the vestry, accompanied by their respective friends, to attest the legality of the marriage in the register, and departed in the afternoon for the country, to pass a few weeks in retirement before the Captain rejoins his regiment in Ireland.

Grand Ball at Guildhall.—A grand dress and fancy ball, for the benefit of the City Ward Schools, took place on Wednesday night at Guildhall, at which the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress presided, supported by most of the aldermen and members of the corporation. The hall was brilliantly lighted, in a variety of fanciful devices, the various banners of the several companies waving overhead, as upon the occasion of a Lord Mayor's feast. By 11 o'clock the hall, concert-room, and all the avenues leading thereto, became densely crowded, so much so, indeed, that dancing with any degree of comfort was quite out of the question. There was a tolerable mixture of costume, some of the most gorgeous and tasteful description, and many of the characters were ably sustained. Amongst the company were Lord Seaham, Lord Munster, Count Noailles, Sir Moses Montefiore, Lord Dudley Stuart, &c. It was stated that there could not have been less than 2000 persons present, and that the subscription, exclusive of the sale of tickets, exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the committee.

British Museum.—At the meeting of the Institute of British Architects on Monday, a letter was read from Mr. Hawkins, of the British Museum, stating the intention of the trustees to appropriate a room exclusively as a collection for British antiquities, and for which a valuable nucleus had already been obtained in the collection of Lord Prudhoe, which his lordship had offered as a donation. The subject had been previously attempted; but it was now likely to be effectually carried out, so as to become in a few years most interesting to national art, and a faithful chronicler of British history.

The Bar and the Press.—With reference to the controversy which has been carried on between the Bar and the Press, the following announcement appeared in the Law Times of Saturday:—"We have learned from an authentic source, although we have as yet received no official intimation of the fact, that a meeting of all, or the greater portion, of Her Majesty's Counsel was held on Wednesday evening, at the residence of the Attorney-General, to take into consideration the subject matter of this controversy, with a view to an expression of an opinion as to the propriety or otherwise of circuit and other reporting by members of the bar, with a view to a settlement of the dispute one way or the other. We are not permitted to state the particulars of the discussion that there took place, nor the names of the parties and the sentiments they expressed, although some of them, as reported to us, sound passing strange after the language that had fallen from the same lips elsewhere. We can at present announce only the result, which was a decided expression of opinion that there was no objection to the practice of circuit and other reporting by members of the bar."

Suburban Railway Surveying.—At the Brentford Petty Sessions held a few days since, six railway surveyors were convicted on a charge of trespass on the grounds of Mr. Wilmot, gardener, at Isleworth, and sentenced to a fine of 1*l.* each, with a warning that the highest penalty would be enforced in case of future delinquency.

Singular Affair.—It was recently stated by the daily papers that Mr. Smith, the proprietor of a house called the Hope, in Blackmoor-street, Drury-lane, had found a number of coins, and papers, written and printed, relating to the rising in 1745, and which were alleged to have been found in a picture of Jack Sheppard and his mother, Mr. Smith having purchased them at a sale at the Bell, Willesden. Mr. Smith sold the paintings, and had made arrangements to send the papers to the Museum. Last week a respectable man, called Burdwell, accompanied by two gentlemen, called upon the landlord, and desired to see the paintings, which he immediately declared to be his property, asserting that he knew of the existence of the papers, as they had been with his family upwards of 70 years; that he had left them in the care of his brother-in-law, the proprietor of the Bell, Willesden, about four years since, when he obtained a situation in the Custom-house Dublin; that, upon his return to London a short time back, he could learn no tidings of his brother or his property until he accidentally saw the paragraph in the papers. This statement being corroborated by his two companions, he demanded that the paintings should be given up to him. This Mr. Smith refused to do, having already sold them to Mr. C. H. Merivale, the barrister, for 97 guineas; it was ultimately arranged to send for Mr. Merivale, when the latter declared himself so satisfied with Mr. Burdwell's statement, that he consented to give up the property. Mr. Smith immediately expressed his willingness to do so with the paintings, but the papers had never been sold, and he should not part with them. The conduct of Mr. Burdwell here became very violent; he declared the documents were invaluable; that there were several letters amongst them written by the Pretender with the pen he wrote with the night before the battle of Culloden, and many other articles not published in the papers; and ultimately Mr. Smith was compelled to call in the police and have him removed. Mr. Smith has since been served with legal proceedings by Mr. Burdwell's solicitor, and as Mr. Smith purposes resisting the claim, Jack Sheppard and the Pretender, after a rest of 100 years, will probably figure in a Court of Justice.

Southwark Bridge.—A special general meeting of the proprietors of Southwark-bridge was held last week to consider the agreement recently entered into with the promoters of the North Kent Railway for the purchase of the bridge. Sir Charles Price was called to the chair, and stated that the railway company had offered to purchase the bridge for the sum of 300,000*l.* A motion was made and seconded that the offer be accepted; but this was met by an amendment that a deposit of five per cent. be paid down by the North Kent Company, to be forfeited if the bill should be lost in Parliament through any fault on their part. After a good deal of discussion, the chairman put the motion and amendment, when about 20 hands were held up in favour of the motion, and about 40 for the amendment. A scrutiny having been demanded, the votes in respect of shares were found to be as follows:—For the motion, 150; for the amendment, 26. The motion was therefore declared to be carried, and the directors were authorised to take the necessary steps to assent to the Act of Parliament which will be applied for in the ensuing session.

The Opening of the Ports.—Meetings in favour of this measure continue to be held in the Metropolis and the principal towns. A meeting of the Manchester Town Council took place on Wednesday, at which resolutions were passed in the form of a memorial to Sir R. Peel in favour of the opening of the ports. On Thursday a public meeting was held in the same town and to the same effect, the memorial describing the harvest as "seriously deficient." On Wednesday, at a special meeting of the Newcastle Chamber of Commerce a memorial to Sir R. Peel, for the opening of the ports, was moved by Mr. Pollard, seconded by Alderman Brockett, and supported by Mr. Charles Rayne. Mr. Armstrong, a supporter of the sliding-scale, spoke against it. The Chairman, Alderman Wilson, then put the motion, and only two hands were held up in opposition. It was, therefore, declared duly carried.

Attempted Suicide.—Great excitement prevailed in the neighbourhood of Rochester and Gravesend, on Friday and Saturday last, in consequence of a report that another tragical event had taken place in Cobham-park, very near the place where the unfortunate murder of Mr. Dadd, by his maniac son, took place some time ago. On Friday morning two boys, sons of the park-keeper, found a brace of pistols, one of which had been discharged, the other loaded, and on full cock, covered with blood. The one that had not been discharged was lying on a silk handkerchief, also saturated with blood. and the leaves and grass about the spot were covered with blood. There were two sticks stuck in the ground at a distance of about 12 paces from each other, and a soda-water bottle was found lying near the pistols, about half filled with what appeared to be brandy and soda. The gamekeeper, on making the discovery, immediately hastened to the park-lodge, and obtained further assistance, so as to scour the domain. The ground was strictly examined, and after the spots of blood had been traced some distance, the track was lost; it was, however, in the direction of the main road. No tidings, however, were obtained until Saturday evening, when a tall, well-dressed man, about 40 years of age, who was one of the passengers on board the Waterman, Woolwich steamer to town, threw himself overboard. The engines were reversed as soon as possible, ropes were thrown out, and a life-buoy was also flung overboard. The man floated upon his back on the surface of the water, and made no effort to save himself, or to lay hold of any of the ropes thrown towards him. Two collier brigs were drifting down with the tide, and were hailed by the crew of the steamer. A boat was lowered from one of them, and two seamen entered it and pulled towards the man, who floated like a cork on the water, and never disappeared from the moment he fell overboard. He was again taken on board the Waterman, and appeared to suffer little inconvenience from his immersion. On the arrival of the vessel at the terminus, the captain (Mr. Smith) gave his passenger in charge to a policeman on the wharf, who said he would not detain him unless the captain proceeded to the Poplar station-house, and signed the police sheet. Mr. Smith declined leaving the paddle-box, as he had a great many passengers on board, who were proceeding to the Adelphi Pier, and said if the policeman thought proper to release him, he would do so on his own responsibility. The vessel proceeded on her voyage, and in the course of the evening, Mr. Smith had occasion to go aft to inspect some trifling damage, when he found a large pocket-book behind the steerage wheel. Curiosity induced him to open it, and the first thing he saw was a sealed letter, addressed "To the Captain," and found the contents to be as follows:—"Woolwich, Nov. 15, 1845, Two o'clock. Sir,—I, whom may the great God forgive, expect to be no more before you receive this. This is my second attempt at suicide. I am now suffering with a black eye, and part of face blown away through a pistol shot. I was not, it appears, to die with my own hands, with a pistol. I am now going to try water. Inclosed is a half-sovereign to defray any expenses you may be at in sending the inclosed letter to my house, and letting my unhappy wife know her husband's untimely end. I am, sir, yours obediently, J. P. Palmer. P.S. I say the inclosed letter, I mean another letter in my pocket-book, addressed to my wife. J. P. P." In the same pocket-book were many papers and memorandums, and three sealed letters of considerable thickness, all addressed "Mrs. Palmer, 3, Beauvoir-terrace, Kingsland-road, London," and upon each the following direction, which was written above the address—"To the Captain; deliver this with the other two." On the back of one of the letters there were three spots of red sealing-wax, and below them the following words were written:—"My dear wife, kiss the three wax spots, and you will know my lips have been there. I am in death, yours truly, P." Mr. Smith had no sooner read the letter addressed to himself and the address upon the other, than he proceeded with all possible expedition to the Kingsland-road, with great misgivings as to the fate of his passenger, whom he never expected to see alive again, supposing that he had been liberated by the policeman, and that he had sought his death some other way. On reaching the house Mrs. Palmer denied that her husband had reached home, and the captain delivered to her the letters and the pocket-book. She was much agitated on hearing that her husband had attempted to commit suicide, and then admitted that he had been brought home in the course of the evening by the police, and that he had informed her he had fallen into the water by accident. After some delay Mr. Smith was introduced, at the patient's own request, to Mr. Palmer, whom he found in bed, and labouring under delirium tremens. Mr. Palmer immediately recognised the captain of the steamer, thanked him for his kindness, and said that he had left Erith in the afternoon in a gig, and that on his way to Woolwich the horse had taken fright and the vehicle was dashed to pieces. Mr. Smith asked him if it was true he had shot himself with a pistol, and he said that he received a wound in a duel in Cobham-park on Friday morning. On being asked how the affair originated, he said he was dining with a party at an inn "the other side of Rochester," and that a gentleman gave him the lie, and he called him out. That he received his adversary's ball in the mouth, and that Mr. Coward, a surgeon in Beauvoir-square, had extracted the bullet since he came home. He also stated that he was a little excited when the wrote the letter addressed to the captain, and that he never had any intention of shooting or drowning himself. The statement that Mr. Coward had extracted the bullet turns out to be correct, but there is little doubt that the story about the duel and the accident is untrue, and that Mr. Palmer attempted to destroy himself while labouring under temporary insanity. How the unfortunate man managed to reach Woolwich in the exhausted state he must have been in from loss of blood it is difficult to imagine. It has been ascertained that he went into two or three public houses and reported that a duel had been fought in the park.

Fires.—Several destructive fires have occurred in the metropolis during the past week. On Sunday morning, shortly before one o'clock, a fire, attended with loss of life, occurred in the antique building known as the Baths of St. Agnes le Clair, in Tabernacle-square, Shoreditch, famed for many years for the medicinal virtues of the waters. The premises were full of timber. They possessed a considerable frontage, great depth, and the house consisted of not less than 12 or 14 rooms. The communication between this and the adjoining buildings was very slight, the only protectiou being a thin wainscoting of wood, which aided the progress of the destructive element. The residents were quickly aroused to a sense of their danger, and on attempting to make their escape by the staircase, found it impossible, owing to the dense body of smoke rising from the lower part of the building. They immediately hastened to the back windows that overlooked a narrow thoroughfare that led to the rear of the baths. Here their critical position was instantly discovered, and they were desired to wait a few moments for the arrival of the escape and other ladders which were on their way to the fire. Before they reached the scene several of the terrified inmates jumped to the ground, but those at the more lofty windows were persuaded to wait a few moments longer when they would be rescued. The ladders were at length brought to the spot, and after several had been got out of the burning property, active measures were adopted to save Mr. C. Moore, a son of the proprietress, his wife, and their little boy, who were supplicating for assistance at one of the uppermost windows. Mr. Moore threw himself out of the window, and fell senseless to the ground; his unfortunate wife however and child perished, the body of smoke being so dense as to completely overpower them. He states that he used every means to preserve them, and if he had waited a minute longer in making his retreat he must have perished also. The premises were totally destroyed, and several of the adjoining houses were much damaged. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of accidental death.—On Monday morning about two o'clock the utmost alarm prevailed amongst the inmates at the Bedford Hotel, in Covent Garden, by the discovery of a fire in one of the front bed-rooms on the second floor. The fire-engines promptly arrived with a strong body of brigademen, and succeeded in extinguishing the flames.—On Tuesday morning, shortly after 1 o'clock, a fire broke out in the extensive saw-mills of Mr. William Little, in Norway-place, Hackney-road. The firemen did not succeed in subduing the flames till 3 o'clock, and the damage done is very considerable, both to the machinery and the stock of wood upon the premises.

Cleansing of the Streets.—On Tuesday, a numerous deputation from the Association for the Promotion of Improved Paving, Cleansing, and Drainage, established in March, 1842, at the head of which was the president, Mr. Charles Cochrane, waited upon the Commissioners of Sewers, at Guildhall, and obtained permission "to demonstrate, at their own expense, for a period of two months, to what state of perfection the streets may be kept clean by the employment of a given number of men throughout the day, in the undermentioned places: the area surrounding the Bank and Royal Exchange to the extent of from 50 to 60 feet, Threadneedle-street, Throgmorton-street, Finch-lane, Tokenhouse-yard, King-street, Guildhall, Gresham-street, and 200 yards along Moorgate-street," giving employment, it is supposed, to about 30 men. The deputation at the same time, in order not to interfere with the interests of the scavenging contractors, engaged to convey the manure, and other dirt collected during the day, to such deposits as may be pointed out by the contractors.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Nov. 15:—West Districts, 143; Northern, 149; Central, 179; Eastern, 217; Southern, 253; Total, 941; males, 452; females, 489. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1228; males, 599; females, 629.

Provincial.

Lancaster.—The local papers state that the Duke of Hamilton has had as much turf cut this last summer, on Nateby Moss, near Garstang, for the purpose of being applied in the construction of drains on his Ashton estate, as would cover a drain from Lancaster to Preston, a distance of 22 miles. His grace has also built a tile-kiln at Cabus, so that his tenants can be supplied with either turf or pipe tiles, as circumstances may require.

Manchester.—A numerous meeting of the Public Parks, &c. Committee was held on Monday morning at the Town Hall, including his Worship the Mayor, the Hon. and very Rev. the Dean of Manchester, the Rev. Canon Clifton, Mr. Alderman Neild, James Heywood, Esq. and Malcolm Ross, Esq. Honorary Secretaries, &c. &c. The various designs which had been exhibited at the Town Hall, every day last week, were, by general consent reduced to nine competitors, viz.:—No. 8, James Pringle, York; 23, H. Bigland and Co., Manchester; 25, Richard Forest, London; 27, Thomas Diggles, Singleton, near Manchester; 29, Pim and Richardson, Higher Ardwick, near Manchester; 39, N. Niven, Dublin; 47, Robert Rea, Cirencester; 51, George Towers, Rose Hill; 52, Joshua Major and Son, Knowstrop, near Leeds; and a very lengthened and minute investigation of the respective merits reduced these further to three, viz.: Nos. 23, 27, and 52. The consideration of these three sets of designs, so various in their character and arrangement, took up a large portion of the time of the committee; but, eventually, on the motion of the Dean, seconded by James Heywood, Esq., it was resolved unanimously, that the design, No. 52, sent in by Messrs. Joshua Major and Son, Knowstrop, near Leeds, receive the first prize of 50*l.*, and that the second prize be awarded to the set of designs, No. 23, sent by Messrs. H. Bigland and Co., Manchester. The committee are now in correspondence with Mr. Major, respecting the laying out of the grounds according to his arrangement, as they are most anxious that no time should be lost in proceeding with the work; so as, if possible, to get the parks ready for the public early next year.—Manchester Guardian.

Portsmouth.—A general court-martial assembled on Friday at the head-quarters of Royal Marines, under the authority of the Lords of the Admiralty, to try Second Lieutenant George S. Dunbar, of this division, on a charge of "drunkenness." Lieut.-Col. M'Callam presided; First-Lieut. and Adjutant Langley officiated as judge-advocate, and Mr. Low, attorney of Portsea, defended the prisoner. The proceedings and sentence will be laid before the Commander-in-Chief before the result is known to the public. Lieut. Dunbar is a son of the late Captain Sir J. Dunbar, Bart., R.N., and has only been in the Marine corps since March, 1842.—Some interesting experiments have lately been made in this harbour, in order to try the effect of mortar firing on steam machinery. The vessel chosen for this purpose was the Scourge steam-ship. Commodore Chads, of the Excellent, was the commanding officer, and the hands employed in working the guns were exclusively the Excellent's seamen gunners. Capt. Stevens, R.M.A., was also on board superintending the firing; and Mr. Taplin, master machinist of this dockyard, was below, watching the effect the firing had upon the machinery. When about 2 miles outside the Nab, in the first experiment, the firing commenced from the mortar with the 200 lbs. shell loaded with sand, and a charge of 20 lbs. of powder; after 13 shells had been fired with the same charge, the vessel came to an anchor, and 42 shots from the long 56-pounder were fired at boats moored two miles from the vessel, with flags in them, at which the practice was admirable, with a charge of 14 lbs. of powder. The range of the shells could not be correctly ascertained, there being a light haze at the time they were fired; but the shot practice was considered perfect, and had a ship been where the boats were stationed, she would have speedily been sunk. In the second experiment, 14 shells, with a full charge of 20 lbs. of powder, were discharged from the mortar, the range being nearly 5000 yards. Two boats were also carried out 3000 yards from the vessel, and moored about 150 yards apart, and the practice at them with the 56-pounder gun commenced, the full charge of 14 lbs. of powder was used, and 42 shot fired with great precision, but without striking the boats, the shot pitching close to them at every fire. In both instances the effect of the firing was so trifling that only the very slightest portion of the fittings below were deranged; and in the engine-room no other sensation was felt from the discharge of the mortar than that produced by the sudden rush of air, which made those below feel as though they were struck with some soft substance. The experiments are considered highly satisfactory in every point of view. The speed of the vessel was ascertained to be from 12 to 12¼ knots. The concussion caused by the firing had no effect whatever upon the machinery, compasses, telescopes, or any of those articles and instruments so likely to be deranged by such a circumstance.

Sheerness.—The Eclair steam-sloop, steamed down from Standgate-creek last week, and was paid off at this port on Thursday. The Kroomen have been discharged to the Minotaur, the Ocean's hulk, to wait a passage to their native country. Lieut. Harston has been promoted to the rank of Commander. The Eclair is to remain at her moorings for some time with her hatches open, and the Ordinary shipkeepers are to be dispensed with on board in the meantime.—The Blenheim, 72, having been stripped of her copper and poop, was towed to Blackwall last week to be fitted by the Messrs. Wigram as a steam guard-ship. The La Hogue, 72, has also passed out from Chatham, in tow of two steamers, for Blackwall, where she is to be fitted for the same purpose.

Stafford.—A murder was perpetrated on Wednesday week, at a place called Alsager's Bank, in the parish of Audley, in this county, which from the shocking circumstances connected with it, has produced the greatest excitement throughout the county. The name of the murdered man was Adolphus Fielding, 49 years of age, respectably connected, living in Stoke-road, Newcastle. He was a potter by trade, but his sight declining, he became a hawker in small wares. The murderer is a stone-mason named James Dean. It appears that about noon on Wednesday Fielding went into the cottage where Dean lived, who had been ill during the week, and had not been at work. It does not appear that there was any one else in the house at the time, excepting Dean's son, a little boy five years of age. Shortly afterwards, the mother of this child was met in the road by the child, who told her that his father was beating the old man. On her hastening to the cottage, she saw the headless body of the unfortunate man on the floor, besmeared with blood, and Dean striking him with an axe. The alarm brought numbers to the spot; but, from the ferocious appearance of Dean, they were afraid to enter the cottage. A collier, named Scott, more resolute than the rest, then attempted to secure him, and received several wounds about the neck and face. Dean having armed himself with a pair of scissors and a knife. The infuriated man then barred the door, and having placed the head of his victim on the fire, commenced blowing it with the bellows. It appearing to be the intention of the murderer to consume the body, several people got on the roof of the cottage, and, by pouring water down the chimney, extinguished the fire. They then stopped up the chimney, and the force of the steam and smoke drove him to one of the upper rooms. The street door was then forced by the villagers, and the extent of the frightful tragedy was immediately apparent. The body still remained on the floor, and the head, when taken off the fire was so burnt that it scarcely presented a human aspect. The murderer was at length secured, and an inquest having been held, the jury returned a verdict of wilful murder against the prisoner, who was sent to the county gaol to take his trial. There is little doubt that the man is insane.

Windsor.—The magistrates, on Monday, closed their lengthy inquiry into the late election riots by committing two soldiers of the 2nd Life Guards, and a labouring man of the town, for trial at the next quarter sessions for riot and assault. The prisoners were afterwards admitted to bail.

Yarmouth.—The mystery which for 12 months has hung over the murder of Mrs. Candler in one of the principal streets of this town, is likely to be soon cleared up. It will be recollected that Mrs. Candler was a widow, and kept a small shop in the chandlery line. Whilst she was gone to a neighbouring public-house to buy her supper beer some persons entered her house for the purpose of robbing it. They not only did this, but fractured her skull in several places, and cut her throat. Her next-door neighbour, a man called Yarham, was suspected; he made a statement which proved him to be an accessory after the fact, but he was admitted evidence for the Crown against three others, Royal, Hall, and Mapes, who were all acquitted. From that time until within the last few days, little beyond mere conjecture existed as to the manner in which the murder was perpetrated. Mrs. Dick, however, the wife of a sergeant of marines, who found the money buried in the sand near her house by the sea-side, and who gave evidence at the trial, has now come forward and stated the particulars of a confession made to her by Yarham before he left Yarmouth. From this it appears that Hall and Royal fractured the poor woman's scull with a pair of pincers, that Mapes plundered the house in the presence of Yarham, and that after the rest of the party had left the house, Yarham heard groans, and finding, on re-entering the premises, that the poor woman was not dead, cut her throat with a knife. The man left the town after giving this information, and it is not known where he is residing.

Yeovil.—The annual dinner of the Somerset County Agricultural Protection Society took place in this town on Friday, Mr. Harbin, of Newton-house, in the chair. Speeches in opposition to free trade and deprecating any alteration in the present corn-laws were delivered by the chairman, Mr. H. W. Blandford, Sir Alexander Hood, Mr. Andrews, Mr. Sanford, the late Whig Member for Somerset, and other gentlemen. One of the leading features of the meeting was the adoption of a report from which the following are extracts:—"The declarations of Lord John Russell have been of so extreme a character, as to assure us that in the event of his party attaining office, he is wedded to free trade, and pledged to a total repeal of the corn-laws; and the declarations of Sir Robert Peel, although less explicit, are perhaps equally dangerous." * * * "The committee do not believe that at the present moment any minister could carry a repeal of the corn-laws were he to attempt it. Were such a proposition made in the House of Commons, they believe that every conscientious representative of an agricultural constituency would feel bound to resign his trust into the hands of those who confided it, before his consent would be given to so destructive a measure. Still less do they suppose that it can be carried after the sense of the country has been taken by a general election, as immediately after such an event it is probable that a united body of 300 protectionist members may ask such questions of any party attempting to form a government, as may very effectually moderate any predilection the intended minister may have for free trade in corn."

York.—The local papers state that in the year 1842, the dwelling-house of Mr. Marshall, farmer, of Goodmanham Wold, near Market Weighton, was entered by four ruffians in disguise, who violently beat Mr. Marshall and his man-servant, and then ransacked the premises of property to a great amount. Some time afterwards four men named Williams, Debney, Lonsdale, and Cant, were apprehended on the charge of having perpetrated the offence, and at the March assizes, 1843, were convicted, and sentenced to 20 years' transportation. Since that time part of a desperate gang of burglars have been captured upon various charges, including Thompson, alias Blueskin, found guilty at the late winter assizes of having committed the Hall Moor burglary, the Monk Moors of Clifton near York, was recently recognised. Amongst the burglars apprehended with him is a man named Hawthorn, of general under-sentence of transportation for a long period, and if his statement is to be relied on, Williams and the other men tried with him are implicated in the crime for which they have been hanging and [illegible]. Brooks, and two men called Winter and Jan, were the real perpetrators of the robbery. On Monday the evidence of Hawthorn and some other witnesses, who gave corroborative testimony, was heard at York Castle, but the prisoners, Winter and Jan, were remanded, in order that further evidence might be obtained.

Railways

THE Times of Monday published a very curious Table, under the name of "The Railway Interest of the United Kingdom," compiled, from official documents by Mr. W. H. Spackman. When printed in small type, it occupied five pages of the Times. Allowing for some few errors which have since been pointed out but which do not affect the general results, the compilation exhibits an extraordinary picture of Railway speculation. It appears that the number of Companies registered to the 31st of Oct. 1845 (including all those which have obtained Acts of Parliament and those which are now projects) was 1428, with an estimated capital of 701,243,208*l.*, and a deposit of 49,592,816*l.* The Railways completed, from 1832 to the end of 1844, are only 47 in number, and their mileage is only 2069 miles. Their capital, paid up by shareholders, is 43,043,360*l.*, their capital borrowed on debentures, loan notes, and mortgages, is 22,637,614*l.*; making a total of 70,680,877*l.*, which divided over the 12 years during which these lines were in progress gives an average expenditure of less than six millions a year. The Railways in course of construction, and for which Acts of Parliament have been obtained, are in number 118. Their mileage is 3343, being not far from twice as much as what had been completed in the 12 years to the end of 1844. Their estimated cost, or at least the whole sum which there has been granted authority to raise, is 67,359,525*l.* By adding, therefore, to the actual cost of all the completed lines (70,680,877*l.*), the estimated cost of all lines now in progress, we arrive at the aggregate capital of our present railway undertaking, viz., 138,040,402*l.* Of the cost of the lines in course of construction, the shareholders have paid up 6,432,155*l.*; and to complete the same according to the estimates, they will have to pay the further subscribed sum of 44,927,170*l.*; Parliament, however, having in all cases given the power to borrow one-third more, this will probably be further increased by the sum of 16,000,000*l.*, making together, as above, the sum of 67,359,325*l.*, which is nearly equal to that of all the completed lines, and when spread over three years involves an annual expenditure of more than 22,000,000*l.* The Railways projected amount to 1263, with a capital of 563,293,040*l.* Of 218 of these the amount of deposit stated in the prospectus is 5 per cent. and a per centage for expenses. A large proportion of this class received their deposits before the resolution of the Lords was passed, and others since, amounting to 11,171,727*l.* To comply with the resolution of the Lords, a further payment of 5 per cent must be made, amounting to about 9,595,164*l.* Of 402 projects a deposit of 10 per cent. is required, which many of them have received,—the whole, if paid, will amount to 38,369,167*l.* 643 new Companies have not registered their prospectuses. The total of deposits required is therefore 59,136,300*l.* being 10 per cent on 563,262,062*l.*, and 5 per cent for Parliamentary expenses. The Capital actually paid up and invested in railways completed is 48,043,360*l.* Capital paid up on railways in course of execution and sanctioned by Parliament, 6,432,155*l.* Capital required to pay the deposits on new projects, 59,136,300*l.* Total capital invested, 113,612,619*l.* The Liabilities show the following items:—Borrowed on the security of railways completed, 22,637,614*l.* Incurred in respect of railways in course of execution, 60,927,170*l.* To carry out the new projects, deducting the amount of deposits paid or required to be paid, 506,882,706*l.* Total liabilities, 590,447,490*l.* The Times adds to these figures the following remark:—"Here we have 1,428 railways, with an estimated capital of 701,243,208*l.*, with a deposit of 49,592,816*l.* Take away 140,000,000*l.* for railways completed, or in progress, exclude the most extravagant items, and divide the remainder by 10:—can we add a 10th of the vast remainder!—can we add 50,000,000*l.* to the railway speculation we are already irretrievably embarked in? We cannot, without the most ruinous, universal, and desperate confusion." We regret to state, that Serjeant Stubbs, of the Leeds police, who sustained a compound fracture of his leg in the late accident on the Midland Railway, by which Mr. Bateler lost his life, died on Wednesday last from the effects of the injuries he had sustained.—The Northern and Eastern Company last week held a special meeting to consider the propriety of agreeing to an arrangement proposed by the Eastern Counties Company with a view to the more distinct amalgamation of the two companies. After a protracted discussion it was evident that a large body of the proprietors did not coincide in the terms proposed to them by Mr. Hudson at the late Eastern Counties meeting, and at length it was resolved to adjourn for a fortnight, to give the directors further time to consider the subject.—The Bristol and Exeter shareholders have held another meeting to consider the state of their affairs in reference to the Great Western Company; and it was resolved, with only two dissentients, to call in Mr. Stephenson or Mr. Locke to give them a report on the present contracts and future prospects of the line, and to request the Bristol and Exeter directors to discontinue all efforts to carry any compromise with or interest in, or union with the shareholders of the Great Western Company.—The Lancaster and Carlisle Company held a special meeting last week, when resolutions were passed authorising the creation of 18,000 new shares of 10*l.* The 4*l.* to be offered to each registered proprietor. The agreement entered into with the Lancaster and Preston Company for the sale and transfer of their line to the Lancaster and Carlisle was ratified, and power given to the directors to take further land for the central station at Carlisle.—The Shrewsbury, Oswestry, and Chester Junction have agreed to amalgamate with the North Wales Mineral.—The Essex and Suffolk and the Chelmsford and Bury Companies have also amalgamated, having amicably arranged their differences.—A portion of the Whitehaven Junction extending about 5½ miles from Maryport to Workington, was inspected last week by Captain Coddington from the Board of Trade, who decided that the railway would be safe and ready for public traffic by the 20th inst.—The vestry of Marylebone have resolved to oppose the conversion of the Regent's Canal into a Railway and have appointed a deputation to wait on the Commissioners of Woods and Forests on the subject.—On Saturday, the ceremony of cutting the first sod of the Howth branch of the Dublin and Drogheda took place in a field in the vicinity of Howth. The Earl of Howth officiated on the occasion.—The London Gazette of Friday consisted of 344 pages, being occupied, for the most part, with notices of new railways intended to be applied for in the approaching session of Parliament.—The directors of the London and York have issued a notice to the shareholders, in which they state that, having ascertained the extent of their calls since consequent upon the contest of last session, they have found that, although the expenses have been great ample funds remain from the original deposit of 2*l.* 10*s.* per share to meet any call to be made in the existing session, and that it will therefore be unnecessary to make any further call upon the shareholders. The bill for the Wakefield Branch which, for want of time, was not heard last session, is to be renewed, and this branch is to be extended from Wakefield into the town of Leeds. Additional extensions are to be proposed from Stamford direct to Spalding; from Hatfield through St. Alban's, to Luton and Dunstable, and to Hertford. The cost of the Wakefield and other branch lines is to be provided for by means of 40,000 scrip extension shares of 25*l.* each.—Since the commencement of the month the directors of the Eastern Counties line have ordered third-class carriages to be attached to all the trains running on Sundays, excepting the mail-train. They have also set apart a carriage in each train for the accommodation of ladies travelling by themselves.—At a meeting held at Wells, Mr. Samuda, the patentee of the Atmospheric, reported on the practicability of traversing the Mendip hills by railway which are amongst the highest in the county. Mr. Samuda said he had inspected the ground, and was of opinion that an atmospheric line might be carried over the hills without cutting or tunnelling, and that trains could pass along at a speed of 70 miles an hour.—It is rumoured that the Gravesend and Rochester line is to be leased or purchased by the South Eastern Company.—The following official document has been forwarded by Sir Henry Ellis, principal librarian to the British Museum, to the various railway companies in actual operation or formation. It is understood that it has emanated at the request of Government, the object being to form a complete set of maps, plans, and diagrams, relative to the dividing England into railway sections. "British Museum, October 31, 1845. Sir,—Feeling it to be extremely desirable that as complete a collection as possible of the several prospectuses, plans, sections, surveys, and other printed or engraved documents relative to railways, either only as yet projected or already incorporated, should be preserved in this national institution, I take the liberty to request the favour of a copy of all the documents of this description which have been issued by the company represented by you, in order that they may be deposited in this library. I am, &c., H. Ellis."—The following is a summary of Sir Robert Peel's speech at Tamworth, which we promised in our last:—

The Premier commenced by stating that he had supported the Trent Valley Line, not only for local interests, but also from the conviction that the success of such an undertaking would be conducive to the public welfare. "I thought that the public welfare would be promoted by the establishment of a more direct and immediate communication between the metropolis on the one hand, and Dublin and a great part of Ireland on the other; between the metropolis and that great commercial and manufacturing district of which Liverpool and Manchester are the capitals. It is probable that on the completion of this railway Dublin will be brought to point of time within 14 or 15 hours' distance of London—that a letter posted in London in the morning of one day may be answered from Dublin on the morning but one afterwards—that is to say, that Dublin in respect of postal communication will be exactly in the same position as that town occupies at present. I have every reason to believe too that Manchester will be brought within six or seven hours of London. I said on a former occasion that Manchester might be brought within eight hours of London, and I remember the incredulity with which that statement was received, but I am sure that I am not guilty of exaggeration when I state that Manchester and Liverpool will soon be brought within six hours of London. It was a conviction therefore on my part that great public benefit would result from this undertaking, and that induced me to give it a warm and unremitting support. I gave it my support on account of my connection with this borough, and I supported it from the belief that it is impossible but that if you place a town on the immediate line of communication between London and the most important parts of Great Britain—the most important in point of wealth, population, and commercial enterprise—you must benefit that town. I know it is said that the passage of a railroad confers no immediate benefit on a locality—indeed, that the passage of a railroad may and does produce—and in this I cannot but agree—a certain amount of particular and personal disadvantage, that inns for example may complain of a diminution in their traffic, some retail dealers of a falling off in their profits. It is, I admit, impossible not to deny this, and equally impossible is it not to regret it. But what does all that amount to but saying that, for the great body of the community, you have substituted a cheaper and better mode of communication, at the same that you have opened to them a wider market? So far as the great body of the community goes, there is no question but that to be placed in the direct line of communication between London and Dublin, Liverpool and Glasgow, cannot be other than conducive to the prosperity of the place so circumstanced. There is another reason why I rejoice at being present here. I am about to commence an undertaking of which the object is to connect that locality, which is the seat of my property and the place of my residence, with that great district on which I look with those feelings of affection natural to us in contemplating the birth-place and the seat of one's family. I am about to establish a communication between this town and that great manufacturing district of which Manchester is the capital—a capital so worthily represented by the presence here of its mayor. And now, gentlemen, as I have an opportunity of addressing this company, I will take advantage of it to give some advice to the directors of the railway. I assure them that there are many persons in this neighbourhood who have not scrupled to sacrifice private feeling and comfort, by consenting to their land being appropriated to the Trent Valley Railway. They have given that consent from a conviction that this undertaking was one conducive to the public benefit, and that considerations of private interest should not obstruct the great one of the public good. But they have given their consent also in the confidence that this is not one of the ephemeral schemes proposed for mere gambling speculation, or from cupidity of gain. They have given their consent in the confidence and belief that the directors of this railroad are men influenced by the honourable ambition of conferring a public benefit on the district with which they are immediately connected, and that they look for reward not so much to immediate pecuniary gain as to the grateful acknowledgments of their fellow-citizens for a service rendered to them. On these grounds there has been accorded a willing consent to the passage of the railway through this locality. Now, the promoters of this scheme will be exposed to formidable competition. If this be not the best railway between London and Manchester—if this be not the most direct communication—I fairly say, in the face of my constituents, that no consideration of local benefit would prevent me from supporting another line. But the way in which the directors must establish their claim to a continuance of the privilege which they possess is by their being enabled to show that they combine the greatest degree of velocity in travelling with the greatest degree of safety to the traveller. They must show that they have neglected no precaution which can have a tendency to diminish the risk of those accidents, the frequent occurrence of which shakes public confidence in railway travelling. They must make the sacrifice, too, of pecuniary gain for the purpose of taking those precautions: they must show that they have consulted the comfort of all classes of railway travellers—of poor as well as rich. They must be able to show that their carriages are similarly provided with comfort and accommodation for all classes—the third class as well as the first; and if they are wise, they will, by moderate fares and comfortable accommodation, encourage that love of locomotion on which, after all, the real and permanent prosperity of railways must depend. I advise them to take this course on a comprehensive view of their own permanent interests, as well as for the sake of the public; and if they act on these principles then I shall, in turning the first sod on this day, not only be commencing a line of railway through the Valley of the Trent, but I shall be laying the foundation of a permanent and prosperous company, which can establish a claim to parliamentary support—more powerful than the union of great companies—more powerful than the canvassing of members of Parliament—that claim to public patronage and favour which will be founded on the proof that a privilege conferred on a company is exercised for the public advantage."

PRICES AND TRAFFIC, by permission, from the List of Messrs. HILL, FAWCETT, & HILL, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

NAME OF RAILWAY. These marked thus * are not yet opened.	GROSS RECEIPTS OF TRAFFIC. Week ending between Nov. 12. & Nov. 19.	Corresponding Week. 1844.	6 Mos. Dividend Per Share. † 3 Mos.	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid up.	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock.
	£	£	£ s. d.	£	£	£
Birmingham, Glo'ster		2,160	2 0 0	100	all	124-6
Bristol, Birmingham
Bristol, Exeter			1 8 0	100	70	80-5
Bristol, Glo'ster			1 0 0	50	30	52-4
Chester, Holyhead	*	*	*	50	15	15¼-16
Eastern Counties	5,631	2,676	0 2 0†	avr.	14¼	12¼-¾
Eastern Union				50	20
Do. Extension				25	1¼
Edinburgh, Glasgow	2,858	2,214	1 5 0	50	all	65-70
Grand Junction			2 10 0†	100	all
Great North of England		1,801	3 0 0	100	all	212-16
Great Western	16,548	12,976	3 4 0	100	80	145-50
Gt. South. & Western (I.)	*	*	*	50	15	20-22
Do. Extension	*	*	*	50	2½	11½-12
Hull, Selby				50	all	100-2
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*	*	56	25	46-51
Liverpool, Manchester		4,150	4 16 0	100	all
London, Birmingham	32,001	14,376	5 0 0	stk.	100	212-15
London, Blackwall	740	648	0 3 0	avr.	16⅔	93-9¼
London, Brighton	4,796	3,702	1 10 0	50	all	69½-¾
London, Croydon	1,859	327	0 8 0	avr.	13⅓	19½-20
London, Greenwich				avr.	12½
London, South-Western	5 691	5,042	2 0 0	avr.	41⅔	73-5
Manchester, Birmingham	3,691	2,922	1 0 0	40	40	67-70
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	944	805	2 14 0	123	93
Manchester, Leeds, Hull	6,179		2 16 0	100	73	131-41
Midland	15,402	8,523	3 2 6	stk.	100	143-4
Do. Birmingham, Derby				stk.	100	110-14
Newcastle, Carlisle	1,775	1,655	2 10 0	100	all
Newcastle, Darlington	2,529	1,954	4 0 0	25	all	54-6
North British	*	*	*	25	15	23½-4
Northern, Eastern			1 2 6	50	45	66-8
Norwich, Brandon				20	14	22-3
Preston, Wyre	489	338		50	all
Sheffield, Manchester	1,064	692	5 p. Cent	100	95
South Devon	*	*	*	50	20	28-30
South-Eastern, Dover	5,726	4,035	0 13 4	avr.	33⅓	25-6
Yarmouth, Norwich			0 10 0	20	all	25-7
York, North Midland	4,915	2,189	3 10 0	50	all	100-5
Do. Scarboro' Branch	*	*	*	25	all	49-51
Do. Selby			0 12 8	50	20	70-5
FRENCH RAILWAYS.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*	*	20	8	8½-9
Orleans, Vierzon	*	*	*	20	10	15½-16
Orleans, Bordeaux	*	*	*	20	8	9½-10
Paris, Orleans	5,991	5,187	1 0 2½	20	all	44½-5
Paris, Rouen	5,422	4,029	0 19 2	20	all	37-8
Rouen, Havre				20	14	27½-8

Ireland.

Dublin.—In connection with the appointment of Mr. Twisleton as the fourth poor-law commissioner, mentioned in our Home News, it is stated very confidently in Dublin that the condition of the people of Ireland formed the subject of anxious deliberation at the recent meetings of the Cabinet—that it was determined to send Mr. Twisleton to Ireland, with extensive powers, in order that depôts of food should be secured sufficient to meet any contingency arising from the failure of the potato crop; and, in order that the peasantry should have the means of purchasing this food, that public works, especially drainage on a large scale, should be encouraged and facilitated, by advances in the way of loan from the Consolidated Fund.—Mr. Lucas, late under-secretary, has been appointed chairman of the new government commission respecting the potato disease.—The mansion-house committee has held daily sittings since our last, and upwards of 100 letters from different parts of the country have been read at each meeting on the state of the potato crop, almost all concurring in the opinion that from one-half to one-third of the crop was lost, and expressive of serious apprehensions. On Wednesday, the committee, with Lord Cloncurry in the chair, unanimously adopted the 8 following resolutions, which were published the same evening, signed by the Lord Mayor of Dublin:—

"1. Resolved, that we feel it an imperative duty to discharge our consciences of all responsibility regarding the undoubtedly approaching calamities of famine and pestilence throughout Ireland, an approach which is imminent and almost immediate, and can be obviated only by the most prompt, universal, and efficacious measures for procuring food and employment for the people.

"2. That we have ascertained beyond the shadow of doubt, that considerably more than one-third of the entire potato-crop in Ireland has been already destroyed by the Potato disease, and that such disease has not by any means ceased its ravages, but on the contrary it is daily expanding more and more, and that no reasonable conjecture can be formed with respect to the limits of effects, short of the destruction of the entire remaining potato crop.

"3. That our information upon this subject is positive and precise, and is derived from persons living in all the counties in Ireland; from persons also of all political opinions, and from clergymen of all religious persuasions.

"4. We are thus unfortunately able to proclaim to all the inhabitants of the British empire, and in the presence of an all-seeing Providence, that in Ireland famine of a most hideous description must be immediate and pressing, and that pestilence of the most frightful kind is certain, and not remote, unless immediately prevented.

"5 That we arraign, in the strongest terms consistent with personal respect to ourselves, the culpable conduct of the present administration, as well in refusing to take any efficacious measure for alleviating the existing calamity with all its approaching hideous and necessary consequences, as also for the positive and unequivocal crime of keeping the ports closed against the importation of foreign provisions; thus either abdicating their duty to the people or the sovereign, whose servants they are, or involving themselves in the enormous guilt of aggravating starvation and famine by unnaturally keeping up the price of provisions, and doing this for the benefit of a selfish class, who derive at the present awful crisis pecuniary advantages to themselves by the maintenance of the oppressive corn-laws.

"6 That the people of Ireland, in this their bitter hour of misfortune, have the strongest right to impeach the criminality of the Ministers of the Crown, inasmuch as it has pleased a merciful Providence to favour Ireland in the present season with a most abundant crop of oats; yet whilst the Irish harbours are closed against the importation of foreign food, they are left open for the exportation of Irish oats and other grain, an exportation which has already amounted in the present season to a quantity nearly equal to feed the entire people of Ireland, and to avert the now certain famine, thus inflicting upon the Irish people the abject misery of having their own provision carried away to feed others, whilst they themselves are left contemptuously to starve.

"7. That the people of Ireland should particularly arraign the conduct of the present Ministry in shrinking from their duty to open the ports for the introduction of provisions by royal proclamation, whilst they have had the inhumanity to postpone the meeting of Parliament to next year.

"8. That we behold in this conduct of the Ministry the contemptuous disregard of the lives of the people of Ireland; and that we therefore prepare an address to Her Majesty most humbly praying Her Majesty to direct her Ministers to adopt, without any kind of delay, the most extensive and efficacious measures to arrest the progress of famine and pestilence.

"JOHN L. ARABIN, Lord Mayor of Dublin."

Prayers against famine are offered up in all the churches, Protestant and Catholic.—An address from the county and town of Galway has been published, very numerously and most respectably signed, warmly approving of the conduct of the government in selecting Galway as the site of one of the new colleges, and in conferring the presidentship on the very Rev. Dr. Kirwan, parish priest of Outerard. Amongst the signatures are those of the Sheriff, P. M. Lynch, Esq.; Lord Wallscourt; Sir Valentine Blake, M.P.; J. B. Martin, Esq., M.P., with a considerable number of deputy-lieutenants, magistrates, and other gentlemen, without distinction of creed or party. The names of some Protestant as well as Roman Catholic clergymen also appear to the address. On the other hand, it is confidently stated that Bishop O'Donnell has threatened to suspend Dr. Kirwan if he assumes the presidency of the college; and such a step, it is well known, would effectually annul the appointment, as Dr. Kirwan cannot enter upon his new duties without the sanction of his ecclesiastical superior.—In connection with this subject, we may mention that the Roman Catholic prelates are now holding their synod in Dublin, and that the new colleges have formed a leading topic of discussion. At their last meeting, says the Times, another discussion was raised on the merits of the Bill; and on a proposition for its general condemnation being submitted, a division took place, when there appeared for the motion 12, while 5 only recorded their votes in favour of the measure.—Government have commuted the sentence of death passed on Martin Maher (Tierney), at last assizes, for the murder of Timothy Cleary, the bailiff of Mr. John Cardon, of Barnane, and have directed that he be transported for life.—Mr. Folliot W. Barton, who was so severely wounded by an assassin, is pronounced out of danger. The investigation held at Pettigo, county of Donegal, by the magistrates, into the circumstances of Mr. Barton's case, has been brought to a close, after a continuous sitting of 15 days, during which an immense number of witnesses have been examined. Mr. M'Kenna, of the Crown Solicitor's-office, by the direction of Government, was sent down to assist the magistrates in their investigation, which has terminated in the committal of two men, named Fitzpatrick, to Enniskillen gaol for trial at the ensuing assizes. Great excitement was evinced when the decision of the magistrates was made known.—On Monday evening a young man named Wm. Crawford was murdered on returning from the fair of Belfast, near the village of Newtownbreda.—At a meeting held at Armagh on the 7th inst., at which a large number of noblemen and gentlemen from the various counties in Ulster were present; one of the resolutions adopted on the occasion was to the effect—"That a society, under the name of 'The Protestant Alliance,' should be formed to meet the increasing dangers by which our Protestant interests are threatened." A committee was subsequently named of the following noblemen and gentlemen, with power to add to their number:—Duke of Manchester, Marquis of Downshire, Earls of Roden, Enniskillen, and Erne, Viscount O'Neill, Lord Edwin Hill, M.P.; Hon. S. Maxwell, D.L., J.P.; Colonel Verner, M.P.; N. Alexander, M.P.; Roger Hall, D.L., J.P.; Waring Maxwell, D.L., J.P.; Rev. W. Forde, D.L., J.P.; Major Waring, D.L., J.P.—Dwarkanauth Tagore, the rich Indian merchant, has lately been in Cork, and has commissioned Mr. Leahy, the artist, to paint for his house in Calcutta, the portrait of Father Mathew, to whom he has communicated his intention in a very complimentary letter.—The annual collection of the O'Connell tribute took place on Sunday, at the various Roman Catholic chapels throughout the country. In Dublin and the suburbs the amount reported, at 4 o'clock, was 2300*l*. This is larger than the average of years since 1839, for the metropolitan district. Of course, no returns have yet been received from the country districts, but the entire tribute is expected to exceed the amount collected last year which is said to have been not less than 25,000*l*.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association was held on Monday, Mr. Mortimer M'Coy in the chair.—Mr. O'CONNELL called the attention of the meeting to a most wicked and abominable paper, which he said was extensively circulated through the country. It contained the "strongest possible incitement to the people to murder their landlords!" It appeared to have been printed in Holborn, London. He would not read it aloud, nor would he give a copy of it to the newspapers. He did not wish to give further circulation to so vile a document. On obtaining a copy of it he despatched it to the commissioners of police, but it appeared they did not take the slightest notice of it.—Captain BRODERICK suggested the propriety of applying to Parliament for a commission to sit in Dublin for the purpose of deciding on the merits of the various railways proposed to be constructed in Ireland. It was monstrous in his opinion that such enormous sums of money should be expended in London by the agents, witnesses, and other persons interested in these works, when the business could be equally well done in Dublin. If this suggestion met with the attention which its reasonableness demanded, there would be saved to this country no less a sum than 200,000*l*. Under existing circumstances, when capital was so much required in the country, it was unjust to call upon it for such a drain.—Mr. O'CONNELL wished that Captain Broderick would give notice of a motion founded on the suggestion he had made: but in his (Mr. O'Connell's) opinion the simple course that ought to be pursued was to restore to Ireland her own Parliament. There could not in his opinion be a more powerful argument in favour of domestic legislation than that adduced by his gallant friend.—Mr. J. A. O'NEIL moved that a committee should sit constantly during the pervading scarcity, to collect information, and suggest measures that might be advisable during the crisis. Mr. O'Neil said that the Mansion-house committee had received such evidence as warranted him to assert that one-third of the potato crop was now destroyed. He concluded by denouncing all secret societies.—Mr. O'CONNELL seconded the motion for the formation of the committee, and censured emphatically the conduct of the Government for not taking measures to meet the calamity with which they were threatened. Certain humane individuals had determined to find out the extent of the evil, and to devise the means of abating it. And how were their exertions met? Why they were accused by the Government press of introducing into the question a party spirit. It had been urged that the calamity had been over-stated, and that there were no just apprehensions of famine to be feared. The question, however, on their own showing was doubtful, and that being the case, it was decidedly the duty of the Government to guard against even the possibility of scarcity. If he was correctly informed, it was to the Bank of Ireland that these rumours, as to the groundlessness of the alarm, were to be traced, as the directors of that establishment, he apprehended, feared that the panic might possibly interfere with the currency. From that spot he arraigned them for such conduct. He would propose that an aggregate meeting should be held, for the purpose of adopting an address to the Queen, stating the case of the Irish people, and setting forth that one-third of the potato crop, their only means of subsistence, was destroyed. They had applied to the Prime Minister for relief, but they only received soft words in reply. A few boiled potatoes were better than any soft words, or the entire academy of compliments. Sir R. Peel had given them soft words, but he (Mr. O'Connell) would give him hard words in return, and he would accuse him of murder if he did not take proper steps to avert the calamity. The King of the Belgians had acted nobly, so had the King of Holland, and other powers of Europe, and he would ask why had not the British Government done so? In conclusion, he expressed his determination of having an aggregate meeting called for the purpose of addressing the Queen on the actual condition of Ireland. Mr. O'Connell again rose, and said he would take that opportunity of repeating his denunciations of the infidel College bill—a measure which he believed would prove destructive to the faith and morals of the Irish people. He then proceeded at considerable length to discuss the question of academic education, as proposed by Government, and suggested the propriety of holding a meeting of the Roman Catholics, for the purpose of adopting a declaration on the subject, to be presented to the bishops, now assembled in Dublin, to consider the question.—Mr. SMITH O'BRIEN, at considerable length, denounced the ribbon system, and all secret societies, and pictured the frightful consequences that inevitably resulted from them. At the conclusion of the proceedings the rent for the week was announced to be 178*l*. 4*s*.

Scotland.

Aberdeen.—Lord Francis Egerton was last week re-elected Lord Rector of University and King's College Aberdeen, for the ensuing year.

Glasgow.—The annual election of Lord Rector of Glasgow University took place on Saturday, when Mr. Rutherfurd, M.P., was all but unanimously re-elected in the whole of the nations; 21 votes were given for Mr. Campbell of Monzie, by the Free Church party, and one or two for the Earl of Eglinton, while the votes tendered for Mr. Rutherfurd amounted to 107. It was understood that the idea of seriously opposing Mr. Rutherfurd had been abandoned, and accordingly not more than one-half of the qualified voters appeared.—The Glasgow City Theatre was totally destroyed by fire on Wednesday morning last. The flames burst out shortly after the performances of Tuesday night had concluded, and in less than 20 minutes the whole building was a sheet of fire. The cause of the accident is unknown.

Inverness.—Coach accidents appear to be the order of the day in all parts of the country. The Inverness Courier says that on Wednesday week, as the Highland mail was on its way north, near Dalwhinnie, one of the horses shied and leaped over the pole. The other leader was thrown down, and the coach upset. Some of the passengers were hurt, and had to be conveyed to Inverness in a post-chaise. On Saturday the mail was again upset near Craggie, owing to some of the traces giving way, from the bad state of the harness. The coach was quite full at the time, and fortunately none of the passengers were hurt, with the exception of a gentleman who had his shoulder slightly bruised.

Law.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—Pickford v. The Grand Junction Railway Company.—Judgment.—The Lord Chancellor gave judgment in this appeal from an order of the Vice-Chancellor of England, who had refused to continue an injunction asked for by the plaintiff on account of the laches he had been guilty of in not applying earlier. The matter was argued in this Court before the long vacation. The bill, which was filed by the celebrated carrier against the Grand Junction Railway Company, complained that they did not carry his goods at the rate charged to other carriers; and that their rate of charges was not regular, and therefore illegal; and prayed that the company might be restrained from so charging in future. The specific instances alleged of unfair charging were, that a sum of 7*s.* was allowed to Messrs. Chaplin and Horne for the carriage of goods from the terminus at Camden-town to and from the city, which was not allowed to the plaintiff; that the plaintiff was charged a sum of 4*s.* per 100 pounds weight for small parcels, which charge had already (as he alleged) been decided by the Court of Exchequer to be illegal; that the plaintiff was charged more than a fair proportion of the sum paid to the London and Birmingham Railway; and that the sum charged where the goods were stopped at an intermediate station was the same as if they had been conveyed all the way to Worcester. The plaintiff gave the usual notice of his intention to apply for an injunction, and filed his affidavits on the 23d June, 1843, and filed further affidavits on the 13th July following. Counter affidavits were filed, but the motion did not come on to be heard before his Honour the Vice-Chancellor until Hilary term, 1844, although he had offered to hear it in the long vacation preceding. The case at that time was only partly argued, and it was not brought on again for hearing until the 21st of June following. The Vice-Chancellor then refused the injunction, with costs, on account of the great delay which had taken place on behalf of the plaintiff in bringing the motion on. The present motion was to discharge that order. The Lord Chancellor after stating the facts as above, said that the order of the Vice-Chancellor ought not to be set aside, except on the ground of irreparable injury to the plaintiff. Now, in this case, the plaintiff having allowed the matter to remain so long undisposed of was evidence that he did not consider it very urgent or he would not have slept it so long. The Court would not, therefore, interpose with the extraordinary power asked where parties showed so much indifference to their rights. The Vice-Chancellor was right in refusing the motion, as there was no reason to interfere before the hearing of the cause. No great injury could be done to the plaintiff, for in the case of "Ranger v. the Great Western Railway Company," it was decided that where a railway made charges which afterwards were declared to be illegal, the party so overcharged could bring an action against the company for money had and received to his use. But apart from that fact he (the Lord Chancellor) would have had great difficulty on the merits of the case in granting the injunction; and, therefore, taking the whole matter together, he was of opinion that the decision of the Vice-Chancellor in refusing the injunction was a right one. Motion refused.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER. — (Before Lord Denman and the Twelve Judges.)—Writ of Error.—Murder and Piracy on the High Seas.—At the Exeter Assizes, in July last, ten foreigners were tried for the murder of Thomas Palmer, of Her Majesty's navy, and for piracy on the high seas. The trial lasted three entire days, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty against seven of the prisoners, viz., Ribiero, Francisco, Martinos, Joaquim, Serva, Majaval, and Alves, and acquitted the other three. It now came on for the consideration of all the Judges on a writ of error. Mr. Sergeant Manning and Mr. Collier appeared for the prisoners; and Mr. Godson, Mr. Cockburn, Mr. Hayward, and Mr. Poulden for the Admiralty. The learned judges having taken their seats, Mr. Serjeant Manning said he appeared on behalf of certain persons who were convicted of the crime of murder on the high seas, at the general gaol delivery, held in Exeter in July last. Their lordships had before them a short statement of the proceedings which took place on the occasion, and before he called their lordships' attention to the particular terms of that statement, he must be allowed to express his deep regret that the learned judge before whom this trial took place had not reported to their lordships the evidence which was taken on the occasion. Lord Denman—We are met here for the purpose of hearing the case discussed, as it now stands, and to that purpose we must confine ourselves, and not go into matter which is more properly the subject of an application to the learned judge who tried the case. Mr. Sergeant Manning would then read the report of Mr. Baron Platt, before whom the prisoners were tried:—"Queen against Serva, Majaval, Alves, Ribiero, Francisco, Martinos, Joaquim, Santos, Manuel Antonio, and Joze Antonio. The prisoners were tried before me at the last assizes for the county of Devon, for the murder of Mr. Thomas Palmer, on the high seas. Santos, Manuel Antonio, and Joze Antonio were acquitted. The remaining seven were convicted on two counts of the indictment, by one of which they were charged as principals in the first degree, and by the other Majaval was charged as principal in the first degree, and Serva, Alves, Ribiero, Francisco, Martinos, and Joaquim as principals in the second degree. The evidence, as regarded the prisoners, disclosed the following facts:—On the 22d Feb. last, the Felicidade, a Brazilian schooner, commanded by Joachim Antonio de Cerquiera, and bound on a voyage from the Brazils to Africa, for the purpose of bringing back a cargo of slaves, arrived off the African coast, and on the 26th of that month, while she was hovering within 10 miles of the shore, and within 6 degrees north latitude, was observed by Her Majesty's ship of war the Wasp, stationed off the slave coast for the prevention of the slave trade, and then cruizing for that purpose near Lagos, off the Point of Benin, under the command of Captain Usher, who upon approaching the Felicidade manned two boats, and gave the command of them to Lieut. Stupart, one of his officers, with orders to board the Felicidade, and if she appeared to be fitted up for the slave-trade to capture her. Lieut. Stupart, in obedience to those orders, went with the two boats to the Felicidade. Cerquiera, the captain, immediately surrendered, and, accompanied by all his crew (except Majaval and three others), was conveyed on board the Wasp. At the time of her capture the Felicidade was fitted up for the reception of a cargo of slaves, and was within 10 miles of the shore. On the 27th February, between 4 and 5 P.M., Captain Usher, having removed from the Felicidade the three men who had been left with Majaval, sent back Cerquiera to the Felicidade, manned her with sixteen British seamen, and placed her under the command of Lieutenant Stupart, and directed him to steer a particular course in pursuit of a vessel capable of being seen from the Wasp, although then invisible from the Felicidade. Lieut. Stupart accordingly steered that course, but did not observe any object until the following morning at daybreak, when he descried the Echo, a Brazilian brigantine, commanded by the prisoner Serva. He chased her, and coming up with her at ten the following night, fired a pistol as a signal to bring to, got into the jolly boat, and hoisted the British colours. The captain of the Echo hailed the men in the boat, and asked who they were; and, upon being informed that they were English, immediately set sail. Lieutenant Stupart continued the chase, and overtook the Echo at eight on the next night, within ten miles of the African coast, when and where she lowered her sails and surrendered. The lieutenant had at that time under his command Mr. Thomas Palmer, a midshipman, and sixteen British seamen. He ordered Mr. Palmer and eight of the seamen to take charge of the Echo during the night. On Mr. Palmer going on board the Echo he found in her the prisoner Serva, Serva's nephew, 25 men, and a cargo consisting of 434 slaves, and by the direction of Lieutenant Stupart (the vessels being at the time close together) sent Serva, his nephew, and eleven of the crew, to the Felicidade, where they remained during the night in the custody of Lieutenant Stupart. During the chase, and at the time of the surrender, Lieutenant Stupart wore his uniform, and at the time of the surrender and capture told Serva he was going to take them to her Majesty's ship the Wasp, for being engaged in the slave trade. The Wasp had printed instructions on board. Lieutenant Stupart had not any printed instructions on board the Felicidade, and did not show any other authority than his uniform and the British ensign. He had, however, boarded the Echo several times before, and to Serva was well known as an officer in her Majesty's navy. The slaves had been shipped on board the Echo at Lagos. At nine in the morning next after the capture, Lieutenant Stupart took with him Serva's nephew to the Echo, and placed Mr. Palmer and nine British seamen under his command on the Felicidade, in order that he might take charge of her and of Serva, Cerquiera, Majaval, the prisoners Alves, Ribiero, Francisco, Martinos, Joaquim, Santos, Manuel Antonio, Joze Antonio, and three others of the Echo's crew. Within an hour afterwards, Serva, Majaval, Alves, Ribiero, Francisco, Martinos, and Joaquim conspired together to kill all the English on board the Felicidade and take her, and in pursuance of that conspiracy rose upon Mr. Palmer and his men, and after a short conflict succeeded in slaughtering them. Majaval having in the course of the conflict stabbed and thrown overboard Mr. Palmer. Cerquiera although solicited by Serva to join in the plot refused to do so, and endeavoured to dissuade him from carrying it into execution. The counsel for the prisoners insisted that the capture of the Felicidade was illegal, that the capture of the Echo was also illegal, that the act of killing the deceased was either justifiable or amounted to a less offence than murder, and cited the cases of Depardo, Russell, and R., crown cases, 134; the King and Sawyer, Russell, and R., crown cases; the King and Zoppard, Moody's crown cases, 280; and referred to the Portuguese and Brazilian treaties set forth in the 5th Geo. IV., c. 113, and the 7th and 8th Geo. IV., c. 74, and particularly the 3d, 5th, 6th, and 7th articles of the treaty with Portugal, and the 1st 7th, and 8th articles of the instructions. I (Mr. Baron Platt) thought that the Felicidade was in the lawful custody of her Majesty's officers, that all on board that vessel were within her Majesty's Admiralty jurisdiction; and that the jury, if satisfied by the evidence that the prisoners plotted together to slay all the English on board and run away with the vessel, that in carrying their design into execution Majaval slayed Mr. Palmer by stabbing him and throwing him overboard, and that the other convicted prisoners were present aiding and assisting Majaval in the commission of that act, should find them guilty of murder. Sentence of death was passed upon the prisoners, but the execution has been respited until the 24th of November instant, in order that the opinion of the judges may be taken as to the propriety of the conviction." Upon this paper, to which he was now confined, he should submit to their Lordships that this conviction was wrong upon two grounds. In the first place he said that no crime of felony had been committed; and, secondly, he said that, supposing a crime in the nature of a felony had been committed, the court at Exeter had no cognizance of the case. Now the ground upon which he said no crime had been committed was, that the two vessels, the Felicidade and the Echo, were wrongfully taken; but it would be sufficient to support this branch of his argument to show that either one or the other had been wrongfully taken. Now, with regard to the first capture, that of the Felicidade, how did the case stand? This vessel had left the Brazils, but whether she was a Brazilian vessel did not appear, for the purpose of going to the coast of Africa, in order to take in a cargo of slaves. It did not appear by the statement of the learned judge, nor was it contended for on the trial, that the Felicidade had during that voyage taken any slaves on board, but, having certain decks which would indicate that she traded in slaves, she was captured. Now, upon what grounds was the lieutenant of the Wasp justified in taking possession of the Felicidade? It was justified at the trial upon two grounds; and in the first place it was said that by the treaty between the Crown of England and the Crown of Brazil, of November, 1826, the offence of dealing in slaves was declared to be piracy; therefore, in the language of the learned judge, it was lawful for all persons, of whatsoever nation they might be, to hunt down and seize upon the Felicidade and her crew, because they were enemies to the human race. Now, he took it to be quite clear that a mere declaration between two nations that a certain act which was lawful before the treaty should become a crime was not binding until made obligatory by some municipal law of the country. Now, at the time this treaty was agreed upon, there did exist a municipal law, the 5th of Geo. IV., by which it was declared that slave trading was piracy. The statute was passed two years before the treaty, and by section 2, chap. 113, it was declared that the actually having taken slaves on board should be the special act of piracy, and the 9th section provided the penalties. Their lordships, however, would see that, although the first section of the statute prohibited a variety of acts, yet, when the penalties in respect of those acts came to be applied, only the actual removing and carrying away of slaves was made piracy; but the statute did not stop there. It did not omit to provide punishment for the minor offences which were denounced in the second section. It went on in the 10th section to make certain acts felony, and punishable by transportation for 14 years. Their lordships would see at the time of the treaty of November, 1826, the state of the law of England was this, that persons actually engaged in the slave-trade, so far as to have carried or conveyed slaves, were guilty of piracy, and punishable by death; but persons who had fitted out vessels for the slave-trade, as the Felicidade was, were declared guilty of felony, and punishable with transportation for any term not exceeding 14 years nor less than seven, or with imprisonment for not more than five years nor less than three. That being the state of the law of England, a treaty took place between Brazil and England, in the first article of which it was declared that trading in slaves by the subjects of either power should be deemed piracy.—The Lord Chief Baron said the very words might be material. The being concerned in the trade was unlawful, but the carrying on the trade was piracy, [owing to some extent the provisions of the 7th of George IV.—Mr. Sergeant Manning replied that the capture of the Felicidade was attempted to be supported at the trial on the grounds that these parties were pirates and were, therefore, property hunted down by any persons who might choose to take the law upon themselves, and that was supported on the ground that, by the treaty, the offence of slave-trading was declared to be piracy, and it was held that the offence of slave-trading was complete on going on board for the purpose of taking in slaves. Now, he contended that such was not the meaning of the treaty nor of the law of England, and he supported this ground by showing what the English legislature had declared should be the nature of piracy. But he took higher ground than this. He said that supposing the treaty had expressly stated, in the terms of the 5th sec. of the 5th Geo. IV., that all attempts to deal in slaves should be piracy, it would not be binding upon the subjects of Brazil. If a Brazilian subject, after that treaty, engaged himself to the slave-trade, it would be a grievance against England, for which the English Ambassador at Rio de Janeiro might have remonstrated; but the mere fact of a declaration existing between the two countries, declaring a particular act to be a crime, did not make the Brazilian amenable to the laws of England. It was urged by his learned friend, and so ruled by the learned Judge, that the clause of the treaty was merely directory, and not essential. Their lordships would see by the Act of the 9th Geo. IV., c. 113, that piracy was defined to be the actual carrying of slaves, and not to make a preparation for the slave trade. But, supposing the treaty had provided that the subjects of either Governments preparing and fitting out vessels for the slave trade should be guilty of piracy, would that make it punishable by death which the Legislature had declared to be punishable with 14 years' transportation at the outside? There were remarkable instances on record where one country could not take cognizance of the piracy of another. In the year 1570 the Emperor Philip the Second of Spain, by an edict, declared his subjects guilty of piracy who should attempt a fraud upon an insurance company in effecting an insurance upon a ship. In 1650 the same Prince made another declaration, that all parties who should destroy the herring nets on the coast of Flanders should be guilty of piracy. Then, again, there was the case of the Russian Ambassador, in the reign of Queen Anne. Although it was found that the Ambassador had committed a gross violation against the law of nations, it was not punishable here. It was only matter for the remonstrance of the English Ambassador in Russia. It appeared to him, therefore, that the Felicidade was wrongfully captured, and being wrongfully captured he submitted that she remained a Brazilian and foreign vessel to all intents and purposes as if that wrongful act had not taken place; but on the trial it was contended she became an English vessel, and that all on board of her were subject to the English laws. Now he might just as well argue that a British vessel coming from Sicily with a cargo of oil to the port of Hull, and detained by a Spanish ship on suspicion of being a smuggler from Gibraltar, became liable to the laws of Spain. What would Admiral Blake or Cromwell have said?—Mr. Baron Anderson: The question is, what the judges would say, not what Admiral Blake thought. Mr. Sergeant Manning thought they would all agree. Could it be seriously contended that a vessel taken possession of wrongfully by the subjects of another power became amenable to the laws of that country? He would now proceed to show how the Echo was wrongfully captured. The treaty provided that there should be no detention or seizure of a vessel, unless it was made by a vessel belonging to the royal navy of the sovereign whose subjects made the search; nor should the search be conducted by a person of less rank than a lieutenant. It was expressly provided in the treaty that a ship captured could not be considered a part of the navy of Great Britain till such time as condemnation had taken place in the Courts of Sierra Leone. The Felicidade had never been condemned at all, having been lost in her passage to Sierra Leone; but, even if she had been, such condemnation would not have had a retrospective effect. This defect in the capture of the Felicidade, however, did not apply to the Echo, for she had slaves on board when she was seized. But in the capture of the Echo there was a defect of another kind, which did not apply to the Felicidade. It was provided in the treaty that no person under the rank of a lieutenant should search a merchant ship suspected of being engaged in the slave-trade. Now, Lieut. Stupart did not search the vessel in question, but it was undertaken by Thomas Palmer, a midshipman. It was not sufficient for the purposes of the treaty that Lieut. Stupart should be on the deck of his own vessel hard by, but it was required of him that he should make the search and capture in person. He (the Learned Counsel) therefore contended that the capture was illegal, because it was not undertaken by Lieut. Stupart. If the latter was to be considered the seizing party, then he might as well have been half a mile distant instead of a few yards. Another point invalidating the capture of the Echo was, that supposing the Felicidade had, who then rightly or wrongly, been seized and condemned, and thereby become a part of the British navy, she had no written instructions on board; she was not in sight of the Wasp when the seizure was made, and there was no evidence that the Felicidade was sent in search of the Echo. On this ground, therefore, the treaty was violated, which required that the seizing vessel should have written instructions. He thought he had shown their lordships quite clearly, from the review of the facts that he had placed before them, that Majaval had a right to regain his ship, and the other parties to obtain their liberty. If the seizure of the Felicidade was in the first instance illegal, then had the owner of that vessel on the earliest opportunity, without appealing to the Court of Sierra Leone, or any other tribunal, a right to recapture his vessel, and to use whatever force was necessary to obtain that possession. He also contended that the men taken prisoners had a similar right to exert themselves by force to obtain their liberty; and any other means of obtaining their liberty than by simultaneously rushing on Mr. Palmer and the other seamen in charge did not appear practicable. In the conflict that took place Palmer was stabbed and thrown overboard, but, under the circumstances, there was no proof that the act in question was murder. He now came to another of the objections he had to the conviction of these men. As foreigners, he maintained, they were not amenable to British laws. The vessel in which these men were, at the time of this unfortunate occurrence, had never ceased to be a foreign vessel, therefore, in law, was a foreign bottom; therefore no Court of Law in this country had jurisdiction over it or them. The case of the King v. Depardo, 1 Taunton's Reports, proved what the jurisdiction under such circumstances was.—Mr. Collier then rose to address the Court on behalf of the three other prisoners, James Majaval, Francisco Serva, and Marie Jose Alves. He submitted that the courts of this country had no jurisdiction over those for whom he appeared, as they were foreigners, and had never, by any act of theirs, given in their adherence or allegiance to the Government of this country. This was the view of the question taken by all eminent jurists, by Vattel, Montesquieu, Story, and others who had written on the laws of nations. There had been no evidence that his clients had ever done anything that could be construed into an act of allegiance to the laws of this country. Even admitting that the slaying of Palmer was an act of murder, the prisoners charged with it, being foreigners, had no right to be tried by the tribunal of this country. But the case was much stronger against this jurisdiction, when it appeared, as he maintained it did, that the Felicidade was a foreign vessel at the time of her seizure. The Learned Counsel here went through the clauses of the treaty, showing that only ships of the navy belonging to the contracting nations were competent to search vessels; that officers of a certain standing must have the charge of such searches and seizures, and that all such ships should carry written instructions. The terms of the treaty were clear and explicit. The stipulations had been violated by Lieutenant Stupart in the seizure of the Felicidade, and the owner of that ship, with his assistants, had been tempted to make resistance afterwards to the crew that captured them, because of its inefficient force. This fact was itself sufficient to show that the seizure must have been undertaken without sufficient force, and in a manner that could not have been intended by the treaty. Having recapitulated the principal heads of his arguments, the learned gentleman concluded by expressing, that from all the facts of the case, interpreted by the laws of nations, and the writings of the highest legal authorities, the courts of this country possessed no such jurisdiction as had been exercised in the case under the consideration of the court.—Mr. Godson, Q.C., on the part of the Crown, said he was surprised that not one of the positions urged upon the treaty had then been touched. It had been contended on the trial, that the treaty, of which so much had been made this morning, was not in existence at the time. Now, it was necessary that, the fact of the death being proved, all the necessities and information of the case must be proved by the prisoners. But they said that they were confined in an improper place—in a place to which the English had no right, and therefore used violence for escape. That is no excuse for killing. He should prove that the Felicidade was legally taken, as well as the Echo. Captain Usher having instructions from Her Majesty, and sailing in those seas, sent two boats on board this slaver. The boats followed till they overtook her. While Lieutenant Stupart was on board, Cerquiera submitted. She had no slaves on board; it was a question whether he, therefore, ought to have detained her. He argued, from the treaty with Brazil, that after 1830 it was piracy for any Brazilian subject to be taken with slaves on board. It was insisted on the other side, that from 5 Geo. IV., they must have slaves on board, or have had slaves on board that voyage; but it was clear that to be any way concerned with the slave-trade made the party liable to treatment as a pirate. This brought him to the jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty. Now, this was over all the seas wherever the tide flowed. His learned friend had called attention to the 8th Geo. IV., and said it was enacted that the vessel must either have slaves on board, or must have had them during that voyage, but that he (Mr. Godson) contended was not the true construction of the statute; it meant that the party must have a concern in the slave dealing. If they had slaves on board it was deemed piracy. The Felicidade was bound on a voyage from Brazil to Africa, for the purpose of taking a cargo of slaves. There could be no doubt of the purpose of the voyage; it was a carrying on of the slave-trade, and the parties guilty of it were pirates. The jurisdiction of the Admiralty extended to where the waves flowed, and in the old books it was said that the Queen of England was bound to keep the peace of the seas. Mr. Baron Parke said this country claimed jurisdiction in the narrow seas. Mr. Godson said it was not material. Here they had a vessel which by a convention between the two countries had on board persons who were to be deemed and taken as pirates. The learned counsel then went into considerable detail relative to the different treaties, with a view of showing that these prisoners had been clearly guilty of piracy, and were therefore liable to be taken. The learned counsel then went at great length into the arguments that had been used on the other side urging that the capture of both vessels was lawful, and that these parties were in legal custody and on board a vessel, which by the capture had been constituted a British vessel, and that in consequence they were amenable to the laws of this country. He also contended that the moment the vessel started on her voyage the piracy commenced. He trusted he had given sufficient reasons why the conviction should be supported. The learned counsel for the prisoner having briefly addressed the court in reply, their lordships rose to consult together. The regular rule is for the judges not to express an opinion publicly, but to direct the high sheriff of the county what he is to do.

POLICE.—The Charge of Piracy and Murder.—Since our last report the magistrate at the Thames Police Court has been occupied with further investigations of this singular case. Additional facts, however, have come to light, which have changed the position of accuser and accused, and on Wednesday the charge brought against the crew by the owners of the ship was abandoned, and the men discharged from custody. The captain, George Johnstone, was then placed at the bar, charged with the wilful murder of the three men who were stated to have died on board. The unfortunate man seemed wholly prostrated both in mind and body, and partly unconscious of the strong evidence adduced against him. The inquiry is not yet closed, but there is little doubt that the captain will be committed for trial on the capital charge.

Theatres.

AMATEUR THEATRICALS.—The literary gentlemen and artists who performed Ben Jonson's comedy of "Every Man in his Humour" so successfully at Miss Kelly's Theatre, in September last, on Saturday evening repeated the performance at the St. James's Theatre, for the benefit of the Sanatorium. There was a brilliant and crowded audience. Prince Albert and his suite came from Windsor, and occupied a box prepared for them. The Duke of Cambridge and Prince George were in the next box, and among other visitors were the Duke of Devonshire, Marquis of Exeter, Lord Melbourne, Lord Nugent, Lord Morpeth, Dwarkanauth Tagore (in Indian costume), Sir. J. Graham, the Dowager Countess of Essex, the Hon. Mrs. Norton, Baron de Rothschild, the Hon. J. Macdonald, and Mr. Macready. Indeed, almost all the persons of distinction in town were assembled to see this amateur performance. The cast was the same as on the former occasion. Mr. Forster, of the Examiner, was Kitely; Mr. Dickens, Captain Bobadil; Mr. Douglas Jerrold, Master Stephen; Mr. Mark Lemon, Brainworm, &c. The play terminated amid loud and continuous applause; and the performers all appearing before the curtain, Mr. Forster came forward from the rest, and stated that a third performance would take place, for the benefit of Miss Kelly, when another old comedy, said to be the "Alchemist," would be revived. The entertainment closed with the one-act farce of "A Good Night's Rest," which was represented with great vivacity by Mr. Dickens and Mr. Mark Lemon.

Miscellaneous.

Railways in Russia.—Whilst the Emperor Nicholas, after having traversed a part of Germany with a speed truly astounding, suddenly presents himself at Milan disguised as a Colonel in the Austrian service, and after having reviewed the garrison of that city, embarks at Genoa for Palermo the journals of St. Petersburgh purposely discover to our view his grand railway scheme in Russia. It is nothing less than the junction of St. Petersburgh with Odessa by a railway 770 leagues in length, which the trains will be able to run over in 70 hours. This line, says the Russian journal, will be the longest in the world. This immense railway, continues the Petro-politan journalist, will traverse the climate of the three zones; the traveller will sometimes leave St. Petersburgh in an insufferable frost, and a few days later at Odessa he will be almost stifled with heat! The Imperial Gazette doubts not that this line will soon have a branch to the Sea of Asoph, with a prolonged branch to Ispahan and even as far as India and China!—Journal des Chemins de Fer.

New Comet.—A comet is now visible to the naked eye, in the constellation Cancer, and the best time for seeing it is from two to four in the morning; at the former hour it will be found due east, about 30° above the horizon, about 11° to the left of, and a little below, the bright star Pollux in Gemini.

Telegraph from Dover to Calais.—Mr. Cook, who has recently been making experiments for carrying the electric telegraph between Dover and Calais, speaks with great confidence of his ultimate success. His only fear is that it may be injured by the dragging of ships.—Railway Standard.

The Antiquarian Discoveries at Lewes Priory.—The discovery of interesting relics in the ruins of Lewes Priory, by the railway workmen, still proceeds; and every care is taken to preserve them with as little injury as possible. On Monday the workmen came to another grave, formed, like those previously found, of large stones placed one on another; but in this instance chalk had been used instead of Caen stone. On Tuesday afternoon the grave was opened and found to contain the bones of a full-sized human body, without any aprearance of a coffin or any other material. On the same day, in another spot, the workmen met with an obstruction which, on examination, was found to be a pavement of Roman tile. The clearing of this occupied more than a day. Its centre is plain; but there appears to have been a border of enamelled tiles, some of which are in a very fair state of preservation, and are ornamented with the De Warren arms. In the course of clearing this pavement, a doorway was found, which proved to be that of a stone cell. The side stones are perfect, and there is also a good stone foundation, which the workmen are still following. These foundations are most interesting to the antiquarian, as they develope the site of some of the most important portions of this once-magnificent building, concerning which much doubt has always existed. On Thursday afternoon the capital of a column was found, which is in a good state of preservation, and very beautifully ornamented.—Brighton Herald.

Large Item in Exports.—The largest entry of goods for export, or the largest declared value ever included in one entry, was made at the Liverpool Custom-house the other day, from Mr. Jeremiah Garnet, for China—1700 bales of goods, valued at 43,000*l.* The total cargo, it is said, will reach 120,000*l.*—Liverpool Mercury.

BIRTHS—On the 10th inst., at Notting-hill, the lady of C. J. PLUMPTRE, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a daughter—11th inst., at Wells, Somerset, the wife of W. I. WELSH, Esq., of a daughter—12th inst., at No. 11, Pall-mall, the wife of BURY IRWIN DASENT, Esq., of a daughter—22d October last, at the British Consulate, Trebizond, the lady of FRANCIS ILIFF STEVENS, Esq., Her Britannic Majesty's Vice-Consul thereat, of a son and heir—10th inst., at Westwell Vicarage, the wife of the Rev. J. A. Ross, of a son, still-born—10th inst., the lady of the Rev. Dr. GRAHAM, Master of Christ's College, Cambridge, of a daughter—11th inst., at Leominster-lodge, near Arundel, the lady of the Rev. E. H. RAVENHILL, of a son—14th inst., at Summer-hill, Kidderminster, the Hon. Mrs. CLAUGHTON, of a son—14th inst., at Paris, the lady of NEWTON SAVILL SCOTT, Esq., Her Majesty's Secretary of Legation to the Swiss Confederation, of a son—15th inst., at Avonhurst, in the county of Warwick, the Hon. Mrs. WOODMASS, of a son—15th inst., the lady of the Rev. W. H. LANDON, of Slebech, Pembrokeshire, of a son—16th inst., at Oxford, the wife of the Rev. H. H. CORNISH, M.A., of a daughter—24th ult., at her residence, in Valetta, the Marchioness BARBARO DI S. GIORGIO, of a son.

MARRIAGES—On the 11th inst., at St. Pancras Church, EDWARD, youngest son of the late J. West, of Park-village East, and of Jamaica, Esq., to HESTER, eldest daughter of J. James, Secondary of London, of Brunswick-square, and of Worthing, in the county of Sussex, Esq.—11th inst., at St. George's, Hanover-square, VICESIMUS KNOX, of Stratford-place and Writtle-house, Essex, Esq., to LUCY, third daughter of R. Bernal, of Eaton-sq., Esq., M.P.—12th inst., at Norton Cuckney, near Welbeck Abbey, the Rev. H. HOPWOOD, M.A., Rector of Bothal, Northumberland, to EMILY CAVENDISH, youngest daughter of the late Lord William Charles Augustus Cavendish Bentinck, and granddaughter of his Grace the late Duke of Portland—12th inst., at Siddington, the Rev. G. F. MASTER, rector of Stratton, second son of Colonel Master, of Knole-park, in the county of Gloucester, to FANNY, second daughter of the late Sir William Bolland, one of Her Majesty's Barons of the Exchequer—13th inst., at Market-Harborough, the Rev. JOHN HENRY HOLDICH, rector of Shankton, Leicestershire, to ANNA MARIA, eldest daughter of George Wartnaby, Esq., of Market-Harborough—13th inst., at the parish church, Clifton, CHARLES PENROSE COODE, Esq., R.M., eldest son of Captain Coode, R.N., C.B., to CHARLOTTE SOPHIA FRANCES, only daughter of Captain Charles Basdon, R.N.—17th inst., at St. Pancras Church, Captain C. P. IBBETSON, 11th Hussars, to the Lady ADELA VILLIERS, the marriage having been previously solemnised in Scotland.

DEATHS—On the 1st inst., in Blackfriars-road, ANNE JESSY TRAHAR, wife of A. Trahar, Esq., Master in Her Majesty's navy aged 65—11th inst., at No. 12, Landport-terrace, Southsea, Hants, ELIZABETH, daughter of Dr. Thomas Galloway, R.N.—11th inst., at Harlow, in the county of Essex, Captain J. S. FOREMAN, R.N., aged 47—13th inst., at High Elm, [illegible] Watford, JOHN RYLEY, Esq., formerly of the [illegible] Civil Service, and for nearly 30 years a Magistrate for the [illegible] of Hertford, aged 75—14th inst., at his residence in Hyde [illegible], JOHN BACKHOUSE, Esq., late Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs—13th inst., at No. 3, Dorrington-square, [illegible], relict of the late Andrew Israel, Esq., for 20 years a resident of Hamburgh, aged 53—14th inst., Mrs. CATHERINE CARTER, Jack's Coffee-house, Mark-lane, aged 60—14th inst., at the Vicarage, Mitcham, aged 45, ELIZABETH MARY, widow of the late Rev. Richard Cranmer, only daughter of the late James Window, Esq., of Mitcham, and Craig's-Court—14th inst., at Quarry-house, St. Leonard's-on-Sea, the Right Hon. WILLIAM DUNDAS, the Lord Clerk Register of Scotland—16th inst. at Clifton, near Bristol, ELLEN, Viscountess Canterbury—17th inst., at Gorhambury, the Earl of Verulam, aged 71—17th inst., at Cheltenham, Sir SALUSBURY DAVENPORT, Rear-Admiral of the White, C.B., and K.C.H., of Bramall-hall, Cheshire, and Weedon-hall, Buckinghamshire, a magistrate for the counties of Buckingham, Chester, Lancaster, Derby, and Gloucester—17th inst., suddenly, at No. 28, Silver-street, Golden-square, ARTHUR SAVAGE WADE, D.D., vicar of St. Nicholas, Warwick.

PARTNERSHIP.—A Person who has, for the last 14 years carried on an extensive Nursery and Seed Establishment in one of the most important and flourishing seaports of Kent, now finds his business so increasing upon him, from the great accumulation of Ground-work consequent upon the annual increase of the place, that he is under the necessity of receiving a Partner, who could take an active part in the Management. It is necessary that he be a person of irreproachable character and business habits, as there is a great field for extending the connection even beyond that to which it has already attained.—Written applications, addressed S. N., to be made to Messrs. GRAY, ADAMS and HOGG, Brompton Park Nursery, London.

GROUND FOREMAN WANTED IN THE EXETER NURSERY.

LUCOMBE, PINCE, and Co., are in want of an active intelligent Man, who is thoroughly acquainted with the propagation and culture of Fruit Trees, Forest Trees, and Ornamental Trees and Shrubs; as well as the general management of an extensive Nursery in this department. He must possess strict habits of business, and an excellent moral character. A liberal salary will be given, and as the situation is necessarily permanent, and one of great trust, none need apply whose qualifications are not perfectly in accordance with the above description.—Exeter Nursery, Devonshire.

EXOTIC NURSERY, KING'S ROAD, CHELSEA.

MESSRS. KNIGHT AND PERRY are in want of an Intelligent GROUND FOREMAN, who is practically acquainted with the culture and nomenclature of Fruit Trees, hardy Ornamental Trees and Shrubs, and Nursery Work in general. He must be of active, methodical habits, and be able to produce satisfactory references, not only for professional skill, but also for unimpeachable private character. Wages, liberal.—Applications to be made by letter only.

WANTED—a thoroughly experienced GARDENER in every branch of HORTICULTURE, Early Forcing of all sorts of Flowers, Fruits and Vegetables, Married and without a Family. Wages Seventy Pounds; Furnished House, Coals, &c. No person need apply but such as can produce the most unexceptionable references, and has had a charge before.—Apply (post paid) to Mr. BURCHETT, Builder, Isleworth.

TO PLANTSMEN.

WANTED—at Christmas next, a young Man who has had experience in the CULTIVATION of ORCHIDACEÆ, Stove and Greenhouse Plants, &c. and who would not object to be under the direction of a general superintendent. Application, with every particular, to be made to Messrs. VEITCH and SON, Nurserymen, Exeter.

WANTED immediately, in a large Provincial Nursery, a young Man, as ASSISTANT, who has a practical knowledge of the business, and can write a good and expeditious hand.—For particulars apply, by letter (post paid), to Messrs. WM. WOOD & SON, Nurserymen, Woodlands, Maresfield, near Uckfield, Sussex.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 42, without incumbrance, possessing a perfect practical knowledge of his business in all its various branches. Can have a good character of two years. He is leaving his present situation on account of the death of his master.—Direct to T. H., Post-office, Willesden.

AS BAILIFF OR BAILIFF AND GARDENER.—A single active Man, who perfectly understands his business in each department, has a general knowledge of Scotch and English farming, the management of Stock, Draining, Reclaiming Land, and Planting. Can produce satisfactory testimonials as to character and abilities.—Direct to B. B., at Mr. Pearson's Nursery, Hampstead-road, London.

AS GARDENER, OR GARDENER AND BAILIFF.—A. MITCHELL, aged 40, and who has just left the service of Lord Vernon, with whom he has lived for the last 10 years, during which time he had the entire management in every department of his Lordship's extensive gardens at Sudbury Hall, Derbyshire. For the five years preceding his last service, he superintended the garden, farm, and woods on the estate of the present Duke of Manchester, Tanderagee Castle, Ireland. Should this meet the notice of any nobleman or gentleman who is in want of such a person, A. M. can present the most satisfactory testimonials from those noblemen he has had the honour of serving.—Direct to A. MITCHELL, at the Office of this Paper.

TO SEEDSMEN.

AS SHOPMAN, OR ASSISTANT.—A person who has had many years' experience in first-rate establishments both in England and Scotland, where the Garden and Agricultural Seed Trade was conducted on a very extensive scale. He has a thorough knowledge of the various kinds of Grass and other Farm Seeds, the quantities and sorts suitable to be sown on the different descriptions of land, &c. Satisfactory references will be given.—Direct to A.B., care of Mr. Maund, Bromsgrove, Worcestershire.

LAND AGENCY.

MR. DONALDSON, Professor of Agriculture in the Agricultural College, Hoddesdon, Herts, and author of several Agricultural Works, wishes to be employed in the Management of Landed Property, occasional or permanent. Mr. DONALDSON was regularly bred to practical Agriculture with the most eminent farmers and breeders in Britain, and has had a very varied and extensive practice of the art on the estates of Noblemen of the highest rank. Has been much employed in modern Draining and Planting, in the Erection and Repairs of Farm Buildings, in the Letting of Lands and Drawing of Rents, and in the general Management of Landed Property. Mr. DONALDSON may be consulted on Agricultural Subjects on easy terms, and permanent services obtained at moderate rate. High references for character and capability be given if required.—Hoddesdon, Nov. 22.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1845.

THE SCOTTISH WIDOWS' FUND AND LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,

Founded in the year 1815, upon the principles of mutual contribution, is the oldest and most extensive in Scotland. The Earl of ROSEBERY, K.T., President.

The average amount of insurance effected during the last seven years was above half a million per annum.

The fourth periodical investigation takes place on 31st December, 1845, when the profits for the last seven years, then to be ascertained, will be applied—

1. As a retrospective Bonus on the accumulated amount of the original sum assured and the Bonus additions previously declared thereto; and,

2. A contingent prospective Bonus also on the accumulated amount of the original sum assured, and previously declared additions, to be paid from 31st December, 1845, on all Policies of five years' standing that may emerge before 31st December, 1852.

Assurances effected previous to 31st December will have the advantages of a full year's standing with reference to the profits of the current year, besides the benefit of coming within the period of the present investigation.

All information may be obtained on application at the head office, Edinburgh, or at any of the Society's agencies.

JOHN MACKENZIE, Manager.
WM. GEORGE, Chief Clerk.
LONDON-OFFICE, 7, PALL-MALL. HUGH M'KEAN, Agent.

THE ROYAL NAVAL, MILITARY, EAST INDIA, AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 13, Waterloo-place, London.

DIRECTORS.

Lieut.-Col. Sir Frederick Smith, K.H., Chairman
Col. Sir William Gossett, G.B. K.C.H. Deputy Chairman
Adm. the Right Hon. Sir G. Cockburn, G.C.B. M.P. Lord of the Admiralty
Maj.-Gen. Sir J. Cockburn, Bt. G.C.H.
Gen. Sir Thomas Bradford, G.C.B. G.C.H.
Maj.-Gen. Sir P. Ross, G.C.M.G. K.C.H.
Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. W. Mulcaster, K.C.H.
Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Gardiner, K.C.B.
Maj.-Gen. Sir Hew D. Ross, K.C.B. R.A.
Maj.-Gen. Taylor, C.B. E.I.C.S.
Maj.-Gen. Edward Wynyard, C.B.
Maj.-Gen. Arnold, K.H. R.E.
Maj.-Gen. Cleiland, E.I.C.S.
Lieut.-Col. H. Hanmer, K.H. late R.H.G.
Lieut.-Col. Purchas, E.I.C.S.
Maj. Chadwell Clerke, K.H. F.R.S.
Archibald Hair, Esq., M.D. late R.H.G.
Capt. Melville Grindlay, E.I. Army Agent
Capt. William Lancey, R.E.
William Chard, Esq. Navy Agent
James Nugent Daniell, Esq.

ACTUARY.—JOHN FINLAISON, Esq., the Government Calculator.

Assurances are granted upon the Lives of Persons in every station of life, and for every part of the world, upon particularly favourable terms.

Persons assured in this Office may change from one country to another without forfeiting their Policies.

A Bonus amounting to 30 per cent. on the actual of the Policies, was apportioned to the assured at the First Septennial Meeting held in the year 1844.

JOSEPH C. BRETTELL, Secretary.

NUNN'S VEGETABLE OIL, 4*s.* 6*d.* per imperia gallon, gives a clear and brilliant light in every description of lamp, without smell or smoke, does not corrode the lamps, and they confidently recommend it to the public as being the most cleanly as well as the most economical oil now in use. Finest sperm oil 7*s.* 6*d.*, and solar oil 3*s.* 3*d.* per imperial gallon; best yellow soap 54*s.*, best mottled ditto 60*s.*, per 112 lb.

NUNN'S VICTORIA COMPOSITE CANDLES, 10*s.*: NUNN'S Victoria Wax Candles, 11*s.* 6*d.*; also their genuine Margarine Wax Lights, 16*s.*; also their patent plaited wick Sperm Candles, 20*s.* per dozen lb. THOMAS NUNN and SONS (34 years purveyors to the Hon. Society of Lincoln's-inn), 19, Great James-street, Bedford-row.

DRAWING-ROOM CLOCKS.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, No. 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank of England, invite attention to a splendid variety of rosewood, china, bronze, and ormolu Clocks: they go for eight days, and strike the hours and half-hours. Price four guineas, seven guineas, and ten guineas, each, and upwards. The performance is warranted. A Pamphlet, with detailed list of prices, and illustrated with sketches, may be had on application, gratis, or sent to all parts of Great Britain and Ireland, postage free, in answer to a paid letter.

News of the Week.

By the Overland Mail from Bombay, we have received, with very great regret, the accounts of a third repulse of the British troops by the natives of New Zealand. The details of this fresh disaster are best described in the despatches of the commanding officer, which we give unabridged in another column. It will be seen from these official documents, that on July 1st an attack was made by about 500 British troops on the pah, or fortified stockade of Heki. The first step taken during the attack showed that some error or oversight had been committed, for the guns which the troops had taken from Auckland were inefficient, their recoil being so great as to upset the carriages. A heavy gun was then brought up with great labour, from Her Majesty's ship Hazard, and after firing 26 shots at the Pah from this single piece of artillery, the troops were ordered to storm it. Here, again, another oversight was discovered, for the order issued by the commanding officer that the storming party should provide themselves with hatchets and axes for cutting down the stockade had been forgotten. The result was of course a total and disastrous failure. The troops displayed great bravery, but could make no impression on the enemy's position, and at length they were repulsed with heavy loss. Lieut. Philpotts, of Her Majesty's ship Hazard, and Captain Grant, of the 58th Regiment, were killed; Lieut. Beatty, of the 99th, died of his wounds 10 days after the action, and several officers were severely wounded. The commanding officer says that one-third of the men actually engaged fell in the attack, and during the eight days that he had been carrying on operations against the place, one-fourth of the whole strength of the British soldiers under his command (originally not exceeding 490) had been either killed or wounded. It is true that a few days afterwards the surviving troops with fresh guns and men from the Hazard, succeeded in driving the New Zealanders from the pah, and obtained possession of their guns; but notwithstanding this advantage, the retreat of the natives in good order, through a thick wood where pursuit was out of the question, showed that they are thoroughly skilled in the art of defence. It is clear also that the troops were punished, as they have been before, for their contempt of their enemy; and that the successive reverses which we have experienced in New Zealand cannot fail to give the natives an exaggerated notion of their power, and thus aggravate the difficulties of our position.—From India we have accounts of the termination of another scene in the political tragedy of Lahore. The corrupt Wuzeer, Jowahir Singh, has paid the penalty of his ambition, and been murdered by the soldiery in revenge for the death of Prince Peshora Singh, whose assassination he is supposed to have instigated. The direction of state affairs was, by the last accounts, in the hands of the Queen mother, and the boy-King Dhuleep remains for the present on the throne; but the troops have on more than one occasion threatened to depose him, and elevate a son of the late Shere Singh, so that his tenure of power can hardly be deemed secure. There is little doubt that this important intelligence will have some effect on the views of the Governor-General in reference to the Punjaub, and it is now generally asserted that nothing but the strong arm of British interference can arrest the threatened ruin of the country. Another civil war is on the eve of breaking out in Burmah; the Nizam's dominions continue in a most disordered state, and it is thought the British Government will have to resort to hostilities for the thorough restoration of tranquillity.—From the United States we have also news of stirring interest. The entire Union is excited beyond all precedent with the Oregon question, and scarcely a day passes by without the announcement of a startling rumour, sometimes pacific, and sometimes warlike. The democratic party, of which Mr. Polk is the leader, is now by far the strongest party in the Union, and they appear determined to adopt a course, which, if acted on by Congress, must terminate in war. The official organ of the Government has published an article claiming the whole of the Oregon up to the Russian frontier, and calling upon Congress to claim the entire territory against all nations. This, of course, would amount to a virtual expulsion of Great Britain, and would inevitably lead to immediate hostilities. Until we receive the President's Message, we can have no official intimation of his views, but in the meantime this announcement of the claim to all Oregon is supposed to speak the intentions of the Government, and is therefore regarded in New York as the most important declaration which has yet been made upon the subject.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert, with the Prince of Wales and the Princesses, left Windsor Castle on Tuesday for Osborne House, where they will remain until a few days previous to the Christmas holidays. The royal party travelled from Farnborough to the new station at the Clarence Yard, by a special train on the South-Western railway, and embarked in the Fairy steam-yacht for Cowes, under the usual salutes from the batteries and ships of war. The Prince and Princess Augustus of Saxe Cobourg left the Castle on Monday morning for Boulogne, travelling by the South-Eastern Railway to Folkestone.

THE GRAND DUKE CONSTANTINE OF RUSSIA.—On Friday his Imperial Highness visited H.M.S. Caledonia, 120, in Hamoaze, and in the evening was present at a ball given by Lady Murray at Government House. On Saturday his Imperial Highness visited the studio of Mr. N. M. Condy, the marine painter, with Baron Brunnow, Admiral Lutke, &c. In the afternoon he went into the Sound, and inspected Her Majesty's ship Queen, 110; after which he surveyed the breakwater, its beacon, and lighthouse. In the evening he honoured Admiral Sir Samuel Pym with his company. On Monday the Grand Duke visited the far-famed gardens and grounds of the Earl of Mount-Edgecumbe, and on Wednesday embarked on board the Ingermanland, under salutes from Her Majesty's ship Queen, 110, and President, 50, which were returned by the Russian man-of-war. On the same day the Vaarshafsky corvette completed her repairs, and joined the frigate in the Sound. The Saxe Cobourg princes have sailed for Lisbon.

Cabinet Councils.—A Cabinet Council was held on Tuesday at the Foreign Office. The Ministers present were, Sir R. Peel, the Duke of Wellington, Lord Wharncliffe, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Stanley, Sir J. Graham, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Earl of Haddington, the Earl of Ripon, Lord Granville Somerset, the Earl of Lincoln, and the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert. The Council sat four hours. On Wednesday another Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office, and was attended by the same Ministers. The Council sat three hours.

The Church.—The installation of Dr. Wilberforce as Bishop of Oxford took place on Wednesday, at St. Mary-le-Bow Church, Cheapside. The ceremony of consecration will be performed to-morrow at Lambeth-palace by the Archbishop of Canterbury.—Sir R. Peel has bestowed the deanery of Canterbury, vacant by the translation of the Rt. Rev. Dr Bagot from the see of Oxford to that of Bath and Wells, on the Rev. W. R. Lyall, archdeacon of Maidstone, and brother of Mr. G. Lyall, M.P. for London.—Archdeacon Clarke has been appointed to a canonry in Christ Church, Oxford, vacant by the promotion of the Rev. Dr. Buckland to the deanery of Westminster.

The Army.—With reference to the evidence taken by the military court of inquiry, respecting the late affair at Hounslow barracks, in which Lieut. Kirwan stabbed Quarter-master Tarleton, the Duke of Wellington has issued the following "General order":—"Horse Guards, Nov. 20, 1845.—The Commander-in-Chief having considered it his duty to order a court of inquiry to assemble in order to inquire into the transactions which occurred in the 4th Dragoons on the 28th September last, desires that the report of that court may be published in the general orders of the army. He entreats the commanding officers of regiments to draw the attention of the officers under their command, respectively, to the evil consequences resulting from the practice of gymnastic exercises after the mess dinner. The mess dinner of the officers of a regiment cannot be deemed a private convivial meeting, considering the interest which has been manifested by the public authorities in promoting its comfort and respectability; and considering that it is not unusually attended by officers and by private gentlemen of character, and respectable on account of their rank and station (whether professional or social), or age, it is desirable that conduct or practices should be avoided in which men of that description cannot take part, and that nothing should pass which is otherwise than usual in the societies of persons of that description, and, indeed, that at all times, and under all circumstances, gymnastic exercises, wrestling and boxing by officers, and such practices of youths in colleges and schools, rather than of men intrusted with the command of soldiers by commission of their Sovereign, should be discontinued, excepting strictly in private; and that no officer or gentleman should ever think of raising his hand against another. The Commander-in-chief has been informed that the practice of smoking, by the use of pipes, cigars, or cheroots, has become prevalent among the officers of the army, which is not only in itself a species of intoxication occasioned by the fumes of tobacco, but undoubtedly occasions drinking and tippling by those who acquire the habit; and he entreats officers commanding regiments to prevent smoking in the mess-rooms of their several regiments, and in the adjoining apartments, and to discourage the practice among the officers of junior rank in their regiments. Lieutenant Kirwan is released from his arrest, and to return to the performance of his duty. By command of Field Marshal the Duke of Wellington, Commander-in-chief, JOHN MACDONALD, Adjutant-General."—It is reported that Government intend to increase the army by 20,000 men, 10,000 to be formed into second or reserve battalions, thus effecting a great saving in the number of officers required for the additional force. It is also confidently stated, in military circles, that Government have issued orders for 42,000 sets of accoutrements for the militia of the English counties, the whole to be ready by the 1st March next. This order is supposed to be preliminary to a change contemplated in this department, the object of which is to abolish the ballot, and to raise the regiments by beat of drum. It is said that the expediency of forming a better school of recruits for the army will be put forward as the ground for this measure.

The Experimental Squadron.—Letters dated the 4th inst., announce that the opportunities of testing the sailing qualities of the experimental squadron up to that date, had been but few, although of a decisive nature. On the 29th October a trial took place with the line-of-battle ships. Wind one point free, under all plain sail, with a head swell. Canopus, 1st; Superb, 2; Rodney and Albion, last and equal; the Daring, 12, keeping her station during the trial, which she was enabled to do, sparing the line-of-battle ships courses, royals, and flying-jib. November 3d.—A trial on a wind, with a cross head sea, under single reefed topsails, topgallant-sails and courses, which lasted four hours. The 12-gun brig Daring gained four miles in the wind's eye of Canopus, Rodney, and Superb (which were all close to each other), and were themselves respectively 2½ miles to windward of the Albion.

Poor-law Commission.—The Poor-law Commissioners have appointed Mr. G. Granville Pigott, late chairman of the Aylesbury Union, to be an Assistant Poor-law Commissioner.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur contains the expected royal ordonnance summoning the Chambers of Peers and Deputies to meet on the 27th December. The same official journal publishes another royal ordonnance, appointing a commission of 29 physicians and surgeons to inquire into and report upon various reforms to be introduced into the practice of the medical profession.—The application of the Paris and Lyons and the Paris and Nantes Railways took place on Tuesday before M. Dumon, Minister of Public Works. The lease of the Tours and Nantes was assigned to the company of MM. Mariaverse, Bonnechose, D'Andi, Dalest, Lacroix, Leroy, and several who had paid in the required security of 500,000f., and had offered to make a reduction of 350 days, taking the lot for 24 years and 15 days. The Paris and Strasbourg line, with branches to Rheims and Metz was awarded to the Paris companies represented by the Duke de Gastera, General Cubieres, M. Blanque-Belair, and M. Pedezert, who had lodged the required securities of 12,500,000f., and consented to reduce the period of the concession by one year 79 days, making the lease 41 years six days.—The Journal des Debats contains an article of four columns, expatiating on the immense advantages gained for France by the treaty lately concluded with China. It is thence inferred that this will be one of the great points in the speech of the King on opening the session of the Chambers, upon which speech it is said Ministers are already assiduously engaged.—La Presse publishes another long argument, contending for an almost unlimited increase of the French navy, ascribed to the Prince de Joinville, or at least to one of the literary employés of his Royal Highness.—Owing to the increase in the price of bread, and the exportation of buck wheat, considerable agitation would appear to prevail along the coast of Brittany. Some riots have taken place at Dinan and St. Malo's, whether military reinforcements had been marched on the 17th inst.—The Paris papers of Monday are a good deal occupied with the Oregon question, and some of them infer that a quarrel between this country and the United States is probable. Others express a conviction that America, finding herself in the presence of a firm, resolute opponent, will "listen to reason." The National, republican journal, expresses the hope that President Polk will declare war with England. Considerable apprehension on this subject prevailed on the Bourse.—The proceedings in Ireland, in collecting money for Mr. O'Connell at a season like the present, have struck with astonishment even his ardent admirer, the Paris Presse. In speaking of the O'Connell tribute, that paper says—

"It appears that the amount collected this year exceeds that of the past. It is known, moreover, how every man who has a private income which would enable him to live in a princely manner, can have the heart to receive every year a sum of 500,000f. or 600,000f., extracted even by force from the wretched earnings of the poor, who cannot every day procure a morsel of victuals. The population which pays this tribute is one of the most wretched of Europe, scarcely ever tasting either bread or meat, and living in dens rather than houses. Honourable families would consider themselves insulted if they were treated half as well as the beasts kept by Mr. O'Connell at his manor of Derrynane Abbey. But at the present time the collection of this tribute has something particularly revolting in it. Ireland is threatened by, or rather is actually suffering from, famine. The potato crop, the main food of the lower orders, has in many districts completely failed; and it is at such a moment as this that Mr. O'Connell, who lacks no luxury, permits the agents of the Association to plunder those wretched creatures for the purpose of swelling his own hoard. However he expect that his countrymen should praise any thing in his conduct, and allow themselves to be gulled when he deplores in eloquent terms the sad situation of his country? Had O'Connell, when the Protestant lords, forgetting their religious prejudices, came forward and subscribed large sums for the relief of the suffering poor, remitted the rent which he has hitherto received, he would have acted a noble part, and would by so doing have proved to the most incredulous that his sympathy for his countrymen was capable of influencing him to make real and substantial sacrifices. To harangue for hours together in Conciliation hall is an excellent thing no doubt, but the Irish people require something more substantial at the present moment than his eloquence."

"It appears," says the Constitutionnel, "that the naval force intended to act against Madagascar is much greater than was at first supposed. It will almost form a squadron, for at least four if not five ships of the line or frigates are talked of, besides sloops and store-ships, without reckoning those of the Bourbon station, which are to take part in the expedition, with the further addition of two steam-ships."—"We find by a private letter from Tahiti," says the Courier du Havre, "that the English Admiral, Sir G. Seymour, had had a long conference with Rear-Admiral Hamelin, for the purpose of fixing the amount of the indemnity to be granted to Mr. Pritchard. Two persons had been appointed by each of the admirals to set a value on the property possessed by that missionary in Tahiti. It is said that the whole is in a dilapidated condition, and badly cultivated, and by the admission of the English themselves, is not worth more than 20,000f."—The railway reaction has been felt as severely in France as in this country, and several of the papers bewail the state of the money-market, and the critical condition of commercial affairs arising from it. By some the evil is imputed to the Government for having suffered so many railway companies to form and combine, and not having checked the jobbing at the Bourse. No disappointment however can now befall the French, without this country being accused of having inflicted it, and the Presse, with some of the railway prints, indignantly ascribes the panic in the share-market to the English not having abundantly sold out. It would seem that, although a Frenchman never invests his money save for the benefit of himself, English capitalists were expected, in order to keep up the "entente cordiale," to co-operate in the construction of the railroads of France solely for her advantage. This expectation being frustrated, the Presse gravely advises that no more English money be admitted into any other railway schemes that may be formed.—The Débats publishes news from Algeria of the 15th and 16th from which it appears that a serious insurrection has broken out in many parts of the colony. The Débats admits that the insurrection is spreading, that the French troops continue still on the defensive, not being in a position to attack their enemies, and that this state of affairs is likely to continue for some time yet. Accounts from Constantine state that an insurrection has taken place in the province of Constance; and that the tribes of the circle of Orleansville are in open revolt. The movement had extended towards the Dahra, and the communications between Tenez and Orleansville were intercepted. Marshal Bugeaud, in his reports to the Government, does not conceal the serious nature of the insurrection, and has made urgent requests for additional reinforcements, especially in cavalry.

SPAIN.—Accounts from Madrid of the 19th inst state that a brilliant levee was held at the Palace on that day, on the occasion of the Queen's feast, and the President of the Council gave in the evening a grand ball in honour of Her Majesty. All the journals of that capital, without any distinction of party, published articles, in prose and poetry, offering their Sovereign the homage of their affection and respect. The Gazette contained a royal decree, elevating General Narvaez to the dignity of grandee of Spain of the first class, with the title of the Duke of Valencia for himself and his successors. General Roncali, Captain General of Valencia, had sent his resignation to the Government, but it had not been accepted.

GERMANY.—The dearness of all sorts of provisions in Prussia has already provoked numerous petitions to the Government. The bakers of Breslau have entreated the president of the province to prohibit, or at all events to restrict, the exportation of corn, and it has been currently reported that the Government had acceded to the request. Letters, however, from Berlin of the 20th inst. state that the reported prohibition of the exportation of corn appears to have arisen from the great quantities shipped at Dantzic, Stettin, and other ports of the Baltic. At Dantzic, during the last week, and in spite of the badness of the weather, nearly 100 vessels laden with wheat sailed for England. It is also said that the Prussian government do not contemplate the reported prohibition.

ITALY.—Accounts from Ancona, of the 14th inst., state, that the large purchases of grain lately made by English merchants in the Legations had created much discontent in the country. It was even feared that fatal collisions would ensue. At Rimini the people seized several boats laden with wheat for the Ancona market, and unloaded them by force. On other points the population manifested much discontent, and a firm determination to oppose the embarcation of corn. Ancona was then perfectly tranquil, and exhibited considerable commercial activity.—The Emperor of Russia was expected in Rome on the 22d inst.—The Neapolitan Railroad Company have received the ratification of the concession made to them by the Government of the Two Sicilies, to construct a line from Naples to Ceprano, the frontier of the Roman States, through Capua.—The King of Sardinia has ordained, by letters patent of the 13th of February last, that the great railway communication intended to unite Genoa, Turin, and the Lago Maggiore, shall be executed at the public expense, and has directed the works to be commenced forthwith.

RUSSIA.—The Journal des Debats, the organ of the French Government, which has so often of late contained articles against Russian policy, publishes a long account of the horrible tortures said to have been inflicted by the Siemasko, an apostate bishop of Poland, on a number of nuns of the same country, for refusing to forsake the Catholic religion. The Debats corroborates the details given by other prints of the interview that has taken place between the Pope and the persecuted abbess of the convent who had escaped to Rome: and adds, that the impression made by it at Rome is so deep, that in several religious establishments in that capital the imprecation, Ad furore Nicolai libera nos, Domine! is superadded to the usual prayers. This article, it is supposed in some quarters, will, in all probability, prevent the intended visit of the Emperor Nicholas to Rome, and of the Grand Duke Constantine to France, as the connection of the Debats with the French Government is too notorious to separate the sentiments of the one from the other. Another article in the same paper alludes to the alleged conversion of the Moravians to the Greek Church, and states that great efforts are making by Russia to propagate and impose the Greek religion in the German and Protestant provinces along the Baltic, and that some of the Hernhutes or Moravian brethren of Riga, had conformed to the Greek Church, and placed themselves under the authority of the Greek bishop of that city.—A personage of some weight, being the Kaisasker, a Mahomedan judge in the Crimea, sent by Russia as an envoy, but not publicly accredited to Circassia, has been taken and executed by the Circassians.

TURKEY AND EGYPT.—Accounts of great importance have been received from Syria. Namik Pasha, by command of Shekib Effendi, has undertaken to disarm the inhabitants of the Lebanon. On the departure of the steam-packet from Beyrout, 16,000 stand of arms, consisting chiefly of muskets, which had been furnished by the British Government at the period of the campaign against Mehemet Ali, had been seized by the Turkish troops. The force employed for this purpose was too formidable to leave the mountaineers the least chance of resistance; the measure, as far as it has proceeded, has been completely successful, and seems to have been accepted impartially with respect to both Druses and Maronites. The question as to how far the Ports were justified in taking this step is of grave importance, and may involve the necessity of a conference with French and other Plenipotentiaries, compared with the advice of the English and French Ambassadors, by accepting such a conference the treaty of 1841 would be virtually annulled.—From Egypt, we learn that the Pasha has given instructions for the recommencement of the barrage, a work that was considered impracticable at least ten years before it is finished. Thirty thousand men have been ordered to the Delta; several thousand have been landed from the ships of war, and passed up the canal; several French officers and their families have been engaged to attend in some way or other. An hospital is also building to be erected near the spot. The amount of lives lost in clearing out the Mahmoudieh Canal was immense, but it is certain that more than three times that number will be swept off. Several thousand workmen have been sent up.—M. de Montigny, who was sent out by the King of the French, bearing the insignia of the Legion of Honour, first class, for Ibrahim Pasha, arrived at Alexandria on the 31st ult. and started for Cairo. Artin Bey was detained expressly to receive the ceremony of the presentation took place.—The English schooner Breeze, Captain Archibald, laden with flax, and bound for the United Kingdom, sailed from Alexandria on the 31st October without her crew, and having no one on board but the master, who in a state of intoxication, according to the report of the crew and pilot, frightened them all out of the ship, and proceeded alone to sea. The vessel has not since been heard of.

INDIA AND CHINA.—The Overland Mail from Bombay has arrived this week with dates from Bombay to the 15th Oct. The news is of considerable importance. It announces the murder of Jowahir Singh, the Wuzeer, by the Sikh soldiery. His death was the result of a deep laid plot, and effected in the most deliberate manner. From the beginning of September the troops had begun to throng towards Lahore, where their commands forced the Queen-Mother to quit the fort and to take the boy-King Dhuleep into their camp. The Queen-Mother and her brother, the Wuzeer, had endeavoured to appease their violent clamour, but on the 21st September the Queen got into a palanquin, next to the camp, and was treated with respect by the soldiers. The boy-King, with his uncle the Wuzeer, followed on a state elephant. On reaching the camp the division formerly commanded by General Court received the King, and led him near the tent in which his mother was resting. They ordered the elephant's guide to cause the animal to kneel, and because he did not instantly do so, they severely wounded him by a shot in the side. The elephant knelt, some soldiers approached and took the boy-King off, and sent him to his mother. The elephant was then forced to rise, and when the animal stood up, several shots were fired at Jowahir Singh, who was still on his back. The affrighted Wuzeer attempted to parley and made great promises, but the soldiers were irritated at the death of Peshora Singh, which he was suspected of having compassed by means of an assassin, and they speedily killed the Wuzeer. Two of his favourites were soon after slain, and the three bodies were burned. The Queen-Mother and her son, the King, remained prisoners in the camp for one night, but were permitted on the following day to return to the rahee. The troops wished Gholab Singh to become Wuzeer, but he declined the dangerous honour. They are bewildered to whom to trust the Government, and they have been obliged to request the Queen-Mother to perform the duty until they can find a man that will satisfy their demands. They have several times threatened to depose Dhuleep (whose legitimacy as the son of old Runjeet they deny), and to raise Deva Sing, a son of Shere Singh, to the throne. One of the sources of their hatred to Jowahir Singh is said to be a rumour, which was believed, that he had applied for aid to the British Government of India. It is said that this atrocity committed by the Sikh soldiers, is calculated to have some influence on the decision of the Governor-General, who was to have reached Agra on the 20th October. The festival of the Dussera had passed over on the 10th October, but nothing was known of the events at Lahore on the day of the departure of the mail. The great Hindoo festival of the Dewalee was to be celebrated for five days at the end of that month, and great fears were entertained of new atrocities at Lahore. The Governor General and the Commander-in-Chief of India were expected to meet at Meerut, on the 15th November. The news from Scinde comes down to the 10th October. Sir C. Napier was at Kurrachee, and nothing was said of his going towards the Sikh frontiers, or to meet the Governor General. The state of the Nizam's dominions was beginning to excite alarm. Some instructions for the amelioration of the administration of the revenue had been sent by the Governor-General, which will, if rejected, be in all likelihood enforced by an army. The Nizam's troops have not been paid for 16 months. Amongst the deaths is mentioned that of Scah Zemaun, ex-King of Cabul, whose threats of invading India filled Asia with terror and fears 48 years ago. He was afterwards dethroned by his brother and blinded, and lived many years a dependent on British generosity. He died of cholera at Loodiana last month. Burmah is likely to be productive of some remarkable events within a short time, in consequence of Tharawaddie's wishing to name a favourite successor. His other sons object to this arrangement; the chief opponent is the Prince of Prome. Tharawaddie sent for him, but he would not attend his father's court. Tharawaddie asked for one of his own chiefs, named Woon, lately Governor at Rangoon, and upon that chief's appearance Tharawaddie accused him of having visited the Prince of Prome, and then speared him to death. The Prince of Prome assembled forces and was preparing to depose Tharawaddie, who has already caused several of those whom he suspected to be executed.—From China we have received some recent intelligence, the most important item of which is that the principal inhabitants of Hong Kong have addressed a memorial to Lord Stanley, in which the miserable prospects of the colony, and the impolitic and oppressive nature of its government are detailed. Backed as this will be by the representation of Mr. Montgomery Martin, it cannot fail, it is believed, to produce great effect.

United States.—By the Great Western steam-ship we have accounts from New York to the 6th inst. The intelligence is of great importance. The Oregon question is the sole topic of public interest and discussion. The Washington Union, Mr. Polk's official organ, in a very long and emphatic leader, which of course speaks the intentions of the Government, claims the whole of Oregon up to the Russian frontier, and urges Congress to maintain this claim, intimating that America claims to possess the whole against all nations! This is by far the most important information that has yet occurred in relation to Oregon. Mr. Polk's, or the Democratic party, have a majority in Congress. One year's notice to England will doubtless be given; and if the policy foreshadowed by the Government organ be adhered to, a war of course cannot be avoided. Violent and inflammatory articles are written in several public journals against England, in favour of taking possession of all Oregon, and ultimately of obtaining, by annexation, &c., the whole continent of America. Such a course must result in ultimate war, if acted upon in Congress. The reported refusal of the Government of the United States either to refer the matter to arbitration or to adopt a compromise boundary has also produced anxiety, and the advocates of a pacific policy do not, unfortunately, belong to the numerous party, that is, to the masses of the Union. Thus the Washington National Intelligence, the organ of the Whig party, has an able article, showing the dangers that threaten the mercantile, navigating, and agricultural interests, adding—"Hitherto," it says, "the question has been left almost altogether in the hands of political theorists and speculators, who, instead of calculating the cost and the moral evil of such a conflict, are more intent on the amount of political capital they can hope to make, from involving the country in a war with Great Britain, and the vast amount of additional patronage it will secure for their party." The New York Journal of Commerce, an influential but moderate paper, and democratic, condemns the efforts that are in progress calculated to lead to war, and in a series of able articles has advocated amicable and honourable settlement and peace. The Philadelphia North American, an independent journal, warns the public against all efforts calculated to destroy the prosperity of the country by involving it in unnecessary war; and in an article showing the absurdity of claiming the whole Continent, closes thus—"Canada, too, according to those who would rob a hen-roost to obtain the feathers to deck our national vanity, belongs to us, and in one of our exchange papers it is gravely proposed to annex Ireland. Is all this madness or guilt, or what is it? The cry is still—'Your territory or war!'—what difference between this, and 'Your money or your life—deliver!' A Washington correspondent of a Baltimore paper says, that Mr. M'Lane, the United States minister in England, has written to a naval officer, intimating that he will have "something to do before long." There was a rumour in Baltimore, says another paper, that a letter had been received from Mr. M'Lane, in which the opinion is confidently expressed that unless President Polk beats a retreat from the position he has taken on the Oregon question, a war with England is inevitable; and great preparations are now making for such a contingency in all parts of the kingdom. These and other statements tend to show that there is a strong party that seem anxious to push this difficulty with Great Britain to the uttermost, knowing, as they must know, that insisting on the whole territory up to the Russian boundary will inevitably lead to war. But there are hopes that the great body of the American people are averse to war, for the sake of obtaining a portion of the territory (from 49 degrees to 54 degrees 40 minutes) which the United States have twice solemnly offered to England, and by agreeing to a joint possession, manifestly admitted that the right is not all on one side. So excited and feverish is the public mind upon this subject, says a private letter, that scarcely a day goes by without the announcement of a startling rumour—sometimes pacific, and sometimes hostile. The latest is, that Mr. Pakenham, finding little hope of adjusting the trouble by compromise or arbitration, proposed to leave the whole territory in its present condition for 20 years, under the joint protection of Great Britain and the United States, the people of Oregon to decide as to which country they will connect themselves with, or whether they will be independent at the expiration of the period named. For several days little or no attention was paid to this rumour, but it is now said that Mr. Calhoun has agreed to return to the Senate, and more importance is therefore attached to the report; because it will be remembered that during the last session of Congress Mr. Calhoun advocated what he described as a "masterly inactivity," as the true policy of the United States in relation to Oregon. A private letter from Washington says that "such an arrangement as the offer of twenty years, so generally alluded to, between the two countries, has not been offered by Great Britain, but has been merely talked of by the negotiators."—We have late Texan advices. The vote upon the annexation question, upon the state constitution, and upon the ordinance concerning colonization contracts, had been almost unanimous. Preparations for the election of state officers in December were on foot. Emigration both from the United States and Europe was increasing.

New Zealand.—By the Bombay mail we have intelligence of the third repulse of the British troops by the natives of New Zealand. It appears from the despatch of Colonel Despard, that the third attempt to reduce Heki to submission has proved a total and disastrous failure. The following is Colonel Despard's despatch, which we quote at length, as containing the official particulars of this disaster:—

"Camp before Heki's Pah, July 2.—Sir—Annexed is a detailed account of the action that took place between the troops under my command, and the rebels in the early part of the forenoon of yesterday, as also of our assault on the pah, and our repulse which took place in the afternoon afterwards. Finding the guns which I had brought with me from Auckland quite ineffective for breaching, from their very defective carriages, as they frequently upset from their own firing, I requested Captain Johnson of H.M.S. Hazard to send me one of his heavy guns, which was accordingly brought up to the camp, a distance of 15 miles land carriage, over most execrable roads, with great labour and difficulty on the 30th; and during that day a platform was erected on the side of a hill on the right of our position, the top of which hill was occupied by our ally, Waka Nene and his tribe. A sergeant's guard of the 58th Regiment was also there, to protect a six-pounder that had been placed there with a view of raking the enemy's position. The Hazard's gun opened its fire about 10 o'clock, A.M., and while the attention of everybody was occupied in observing its effects, a sudden attack was made on this position from a very thick wood close in its rear, and Waka's people were driven from it. I was in the battery, half way down the hill, when this attack was made, when I instantly ordered up a party of the 58th Regiment, under Major Bridge, who gallantly charged up the hill so as to turn the enemy's left flank, and regained the position with the loss of only one man. This attack showed me the necessity of coming to an immediate decision, and I accordingly determined on attacking the pah, by assault, in the afternoon, as soon as the few shots brought up from the Hazard (26 in number) were expended; which I expected would so loosen the stockades, as to enable the men attacking them to cut and pull them down. In pursuance of this resolution, a storming party was ordered to parade at 3 o'clock, P.M., for this purpose, and I issued instructions for its guidance. The parties for the attack were enabled to advance within 60 to 100 yards of the point of attack, and there remain unperceived by the enemy in a ravine under cover. When the advance was sounded, they rushed forward in the most gallant and daring manner, and every endeavour was made to pull the stockade down. They partially succeeded in opening the outer one, but the inward one resisted all their efforts, and being lined with men firing through loopholes on a level with the ground, and from others half way up, our men were falling so fast that, notwithstanding the most daring acts of bravery and the greatest perseverance, they were obliged to retire. This could not be effected without additional loss in the endeavour to bring off the wounded men, in which they were generally successful. The retreat was covered by the party under Lieut.-Colonel Hulme, of the 96th regiment; and too much praise cannot be given to that officer for the coolness and steadiness with which he conducted it under a very heavy fire. I must here remark that the hatchets and axes, as well as the ropes for pulling down the stockade, and the ladders, were all thrown away or left behind by those appointed to carry them; and to this circumstance I attribute the main cause of the failure. I trust that it will not be thought that the character of the British has been tarnished on this occasion. One-third of the men actually engaged fell in the attack, and during the eight days that we have been engaged carrying on operations against this place, one-fourth of the whole strength of the British soldiers under my command (originally not exceeding 499), have been either killed or wounded. From Lieut.-Colonel Hulme I have received every assistance during the time of these operations, independent of his gallant conduct in covering the retreat. Major Macpherson, of the 99th regiment, who led the principal attack, and was severely wounded, also deserves every praise for the daring manner in which he led his men to the assault, and though slightly struck on the left breast at the commencement, he gallantly persevered till struck down by a serious wound. Equal praise is also due to Maj. Bridge, of the 58th regiment, for the coolness and steadiness with which he led his men to the attack, and his perseverance till called off. Where every individual has behaved equally well, it seems invidious to particularise names; but I cannot avoid mentioning the unwearied toil, zeal, and energy displayed by Lieut. Willmott, of the Royal Artillery, in conducting that department with the most inefficient means. Captain Marlow, Royal Engineers, and his department gave me every assistance in their power while labouring under the same inefficiency of means as the artillery. I must not omit either to mention the able assistance and the active zeal that has been displayed by Lieutenant and Adjutant Deering of the 99th Regiment (acting as Major of Brigade), whether under fire of the enemy, or in conducting the necessary details. The three officers, with Major Macpherson's party, were all either killed or wounded. Captain Grant, Lieutenant Beatty (who volunteered the forlorn hope), and Ensign O'Reilly. The volunteers from the New Zealand militia, acting as pioneers under Lieutenant Figg, deserve to be mentioned, and that officer himself has undergone unceasing toil of the most harassing nature with zeal and energy. Lieutenant Wood and the militia volunteers for the artillery deserve to be included in this commendation. Captain Johnson, of H. M. S. Hazard, has given the most unwearied assistance, in every possible way, from the commencement of our operations, by sending up supplies of all sorts, even from his own ship, when our public stores were deficient. The seamen and marines of Her Majesty's navy have always borne the same character for bravery and intrepidity wherever they have been employed, and the few, 18 in number, that joined this expedition from Her Majesty's ship Hazard have nobly supported the same character. Lieut. Philpotts, R.N., fell when endeavouring to force his way through the stockade. I enclose herewith a corrected list of killed and wounded. I have the honour to be, &c., H. Despard, Lieut.-Colonel 99th Regiment, and Colonel on the Staff in New Zealand."

The following is the return of killed and wounded:—Her Majesty's ship Hazard—Lieut. Phillpotts killed; 1 seaman killed; 2 seamen wounded; 1 private of marines killed. Her Majesty's 58th regiment—Captain Grant killed; 3 sergeants and 11 rank and file killed; 2 sergeants and 33 rank and file wounded; 2 privates, since dead. Her Majesty's 96th regiment—3 rank and file killed; 5 rank and file wounded. Her Majesty's 99th regiment—1 sergeant and 14 rank and file killed; Brevet-Major Macpherson severely wounded; Lieut. Beatty severely wounded, since dead; Lieut. Johnson slightly wounded; Ensign O'Reilly severely wounded; 1 sergeant and 21 rank and file wounded; 2 privates, since dead. Volunteers (Pioneers)—4 rank and file wounded; Mr. Henry Clerk, interpreter to the force, severely wounded.

The following subsequent despatches from Colonel Despard show the later proceedings of our troops:—

"Camp before Heki's Pah, July 11.—Sir,—In my letter of this morning, 4 o'clock A.M., I had the honour to acquaint you that the pah was in our possession, and that the enemy had retreated to fastnesses amongst the hills, about 10 miles distant, where it is, I believe, impossible to attempt to follow them. The enemy was unable to carry off his guns, and we have taken three iron ones on ship carriages, and one more was found disabled in the fortress. There is no doubt that it was the fear of another assault being made after the renewal of offensive operations yesterday that caused this retreat. The quantity of provisions stored in the captured fortress (potatoes) exceeds anything I could have formed an idea of. One report in camp is, that the principal part of the enemy have dispersed in different directions; but I have so little opportunity of gaining correct information, that I scarcely give credit to any. I shall proceed as rapidly as possible to pull down and burn every part of the pah. I have, &c., H. Despard."

"Camp at Home, Heki's Pah, July 12.—Sir,—I have the honour to acquaint you that the total destruction of Heki's fortress was commenced yesterday, and will be completed this evening, fire having been applied to every part of the stockading, and all the woodwork burnt down. The strength of this place has struck me with astonishment, and I feel convinced that some European must have had the direction of it. Independent of the double stockade, many of the timbers of which were 12 inches broad by 4 and 6 thick, and sunk 3 feet in the ground, there was a ditch within the inner stockade about 5 feet deep, and the same broad, which was crossed by traversers at every 5 or 6 feet, with a narrow communication between each that would admit of only one man passing at a time. Deep holes were sunk in various parts of the interior of the place, and thick embankments of earth were thrown up around them, and some of them were strongly stockaded besides with heavy timber, which enabled the garrison to remain in them, without being endangered from our shot; and it was only after the guns were raised to a considerable elevation, on a hill about 350 yards distant, that we were enabled seriously to molest them by a plunging fire, which entered those underground habitations. I cannot venture to attempt following the enemy into the interior, as the season of the year is so very unfavourable, and there would scarcely be a possibility of my obtaining supplies. I shall therefore break up from this camp on Monday next, the 14th inst., and return to Waimate. The guns taken consisted of 2 iron 9-pounders, 1 iron 4-pounder, and 1 iron 2-pounder swivel. I have, &c., H. Despard. P.S.—As I had no means of carrying the captured guns with me, I gave orders that they should be blown up."

"Waimate, July 16. Sir I have the honour to acquaint your Excellency that the pah belonging to Haratoae, about 6 miles from this place, was totally destroyed by the troops under my command this morning. I marched hence before daylight with 200 rank and file, two guns, and a proportion of the volunteer pioneers and artillery men; and on our arriving near the pah the enemy evacuated it, and retired through a very thick wood, where pursuit was out of the question. The enemy had set fire to a bridge over a difficult river within half a mile of the place, which we found burning. I have, &c., H. Despard."

To these official documents we add a few commentaries from an Auckland paper, which states that after the gallant leader of the brave Grenadiers of the 58th Regiment, Captain Grant, was killed, he was roasted and eaten by the natives, and that another of the wounded, one of the 99th Regiment, who fell into the natives' hands, was actually roasted alive, his cries being distinctly heard in the camp. [This horrible story, however, is not confirmed in the original account, and is entirely at variance with the humane character Heki has hitherto manifested] Lieut. Philpotts, of the Hazard, was killed in endeavouring to force the inner works of the pah, and scalped by the natives; his body was, however, obtained afterwards by Archdeacon Williams, an eye-glass and a small portion of his hair were the only relics that could be found of him. The chief Nopera, or Noble, of the Rarauwa tribe, who had joined the stanch ally of the British, Waka, had had his wife surprised and taken prisoner by some of Heki's party, and then most barbarously murdered by them, and her body cut in pieces."

"It is evident, from this account of the battle," says the Bombay Gazette, "that the British have been punished (as great armies have been often punished before) for their contempt of the enemy. Had they not despised the natives, both as regards their bravery and ingenuity, they would not have stormed their fortress of poles and planks, with merely powder and ball and bayonets. And we think we may say further, that although hatchets, axes, and ropes, in the hands of such brave men, might in their ardour have enabled them to penetrate the second barrier of poles and planks, yet the numbers inside would have caused an immense slaughter of our troops, supposing the enemy to have maintained anything like a fight before they opened their gates and ran. And consequently that nothing but cannon should have been used for the destruction of the pah; and that consequently until more heavy guns, or some light artillery could have been obtained and planted behind entrenchments at such small distances as would cause the shot to tell, the attack should have been deferred."

South Australia.—A Bill declaring Port Adelaide a free port, by abolishing dues and fees of every description heretofore payable by vessels visiting or frequenting the harbours of that colony, passed the Council on Thursday, July 3, and takes effect from that day. Its operation is not restricted to vessels of any nation, but applies equally to all ships, from whatever part of the globe they may have taken their departure. A local paper says, "Doubtless the captains in command of the first arrivals will be as much surprised to hear that they have no tonnage dues, landing dues, entrance dues, clearance dues, light dues, harbour dues, pilotage dues, or Custom-house fees to pay, as were our own hon. members of Council, and the colonists generally, at this spontaneous act of liberality on the part of the Governor."

Parliament

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Thursday.—Both Houses met this day pro forma, when Parliament was further prorogued, with the usual ceremony, until Tuesday, the 16th December. The Lords Commissioners were Lords Denman, Wharncliffe, and Aberdeen. There was not a single member of the House of Commons present.

City.

Money Market, Friday.—Three per Cent. Consols, 91¼ to ¼; for the Account, 95⅛ to ⅛; New Three-and-Quarter per Cent. 95⅞ to ⅜; Bank Stock, 204; Exchequer Bills, 24*s.* prem.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK.

TUESDAY—BANKRUPTCY ANNULLED—J. Sutcliffe, jun., Halifax Yorkshire, Rectifier.

BANKRUPTS—J. Warren, George street, Hanover-square, Dentist—W. Cooke, Egham, Innkeeper—J. L. Roper, Rochester, Linendraper—J. Woodmans, High street, Portland-town, Plumber—C. Wadhams, Charlotte-street, Portland-place, New-road, Carpenter—G. Little, Southampton-terrace, Camden-town, Corn chandler—J. Evans, High-street, Shoreditch, Cheesemonger—R. Moar, Norwich, Coal Merchant—C. J. Russel, Ludlow, Scrivener—W. Lendon, sen. and jun., Exeter, Curriers.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS—J. Wallace and Co., Glasgow, Manufacturers—P. Barbir, Glasgow, Flesher—James and John Barr, Glasgow, Victuallers—R. and A. Gracie, Twomerkland, Cattle Dealers.

FRIDAY—BANKRUPTS—L. Lord and A. B. Smith, Charter House-square, Boarding house-keepers—T. M'L. Forrester, Gresham-street, City, Wool factor—A. Palmer, Feltwell, Norfolk, Druggist—H. Robinson, Copthall-chambers, Copthall-court, City, Sharebroker—G. Bond, Epsom, Licensed Victualler—T. Ellis, Wisbech St. Peters, Cambridge, Bootmaker—M. Cooke, Denton, Manchester, Builder—G. Atkins, Liverpool, Brewer—T. Smaith and G. Smaith, Bishop Auckland, Durham, Ironmongers.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Lord John Russell and his Constituents.—Lord J. Russell has addressed the following letter to his constituents on the present state of the country, in connexion with the Corn-law question:—"To the electors of the City of London. Gentlemen,—The present state of the country, in regard to its supply of food, cannot be viewed without apprehension. Forethought and bold precaution may avert any serious evils—indecision and procrastination may produce a state of suffering which it is frightful to contemplate. Three weeks ago it was generally expected that Parliament would be immediately called together. The announcement that Ministers were prepared at that time to advise the Crown to summon Parliament, and to propose on their first meeting a suspension of the import duties on corn, would have caused orders at once to be sent to various ports of Europe and America for the purchase and transmission of grain for the consumption of the United Kingdom. An order in council dispensing with the law was neither necessary nor desirable. No party in Parliament would have made itself responsible for the obstruction of a measure so urgent and so beneficial. The Queen's Ministers have met, and separated, without affording us any promise of such seasonable relief. It becomes us, therefore, the Queen's subjects, to consider how we can best avert, or at all events mitigate, calamities of no ordinary magnitude. Two evils require your consideration. One of these is the disease in the potatoes, affecting very seriously parts of England and Scotland, and committing fearful ravages in Ireland. The extent of this evil has not yet been ascertained, and every week tends to reveal unexpected disease, or to abate in some districts the alarm previously entertained. But there is one misfortune peculiar to the failure in this particular crop. The effect of a bad corn harvest is, in the first place, to diminish the supply in the market, and to raise the price. Hence diminished consumption, and the privation of incipient scarcity, by which the whole stock is more equally distributed over the year, and the ultimate pressure is greatly mitigated. But the fear of the breaking out of this unknown disease in the Potatoes induces the holders to hurry into the market, and thus we have at one and the same time rapid consumption and impending deficiency—scarcity of the article and cheapness of price. The ultimate suffering must thereby be rendered far more severe than it otherwise would be. The evil to which I have adverted may be owing to an adverse season, to a mysterious disease in the Potato, to want of science or of care in propagating the plant. In any of these cases Government is no more subject to blame for the failure of the Potato crop, than it was entitled to credit for the plentiful corn harvests which we have lately enjoyed. Another evil, however, under which we are suffering, is the fruit of Ministerial counsel and Parliamentary law. It is the direct consequence of an act of Parliament, passed three years ago, on the recommendation of the present advisers of the Crown. By this law grain of all kinds has been made subject to very high duties on importation. These duties are so contrived that the worse the quality of the corn the higher is the duty; so that when good Wheat rises to 70*s.* a quarter the average price of all Wheat is 57*s.* or 58*s.*, and the duty 15*s.* or 14*s.* a quarter. Thus the corn barometer points to fair, while the ship is bending under a storm. This defect was pointed out many years ago by writers on the Corn-laws, and was urged upon the attention of the House of Commons when the present act was under consideration. But I confess that on the general subject my views have in the course of 20 years undergone a great alteration. I used to be of opinion that corn was an exception to the general rules of political economy; but experience has convinced me that we ought to abstain from all interference with the supply of food. Neither a Government nor a Legislature can ever regulate the corn market with the beneficial effects which the entire freedom of sale and purchase are sure of themselves to produce. I have for several years endeavoured to obtain a compromise on this subject. In 1839 I voted for a committee of the whole House, with the view of supporting the substitution of a moderate fixed duty for the sliding-scale. In 1841 I announced the intention of the then Government of proposing a fixed duty of 8*s.* a quarter. In the past session I proposed the imposition of some lower duty. These propositions were successively rejected. The present First Lord of the Treasury met them in 1839, 1840, and 1841 by eloquent panegyrics of the existing system—the plenty it had caused, the rural happiness it had diffused. He met the propositions for diminished protection in the same way in which he had met the offer of securities for Protestant interests in 1817 and 1825—in the same way in which he met the proposal to allow Manchester, Leeds, and Birmingham to send members to Parliament in 1830. The result of resistance to qualified concessions must be the same in the present instance as in those I have mentioned. It is no longer worth while to contend for a fixed duty. In 1841 the free-trade party would have agreed to a duty of 8*s.* a quarter on wheat, and after a lapse of years this duty might have been further reduced, and ultimately abolished. But the imposition of any duty at present, without a provision for its extinction within a short period, would but prolong a contest already sufficiently fruitful of animosity and discontent. The struggle to make bread scarce and dear, when it is clear that part at least of the additional price goes to increase rent, is a struggle deeply injurious to an aristocracy which (this quarrel once removed) is strong in property, strong in the construction of our legislature, strong in opinion, strong in ancient associations, and the memory of immortal services. Let us then unite to put an end to a system which has been proved to be the blight of commerce, the bane of agriculture, the source of bitter divisions among classes, the cause of penury, fever, mortality, and crime among the people. But if this end is to be achieved, it must be gained by the unequivocal expression of the public voice. It is not to be denied that many elections for cities and towns in 1841, and some in 1845, appear to favour the assertion that free trade is not popular with the great mass of the community. The Government appear to be waiting for some excuse to give up the present Corn-law. Let the people by petition, by address, by remonstrance, afford them the excuse they seek. Let the Ministry propose such a revision of the taxes as in their opinion may render the public burdens more just and more equal; let them add any other provisions which caution and even scrupulous forbearance may suggest; but let the removal of restrictions on the admission of the main articles of food and clothing used by the mass of the people be required, in plain terms, as useful to all great interests, and indispensable to the progress of the nation. I have the honour to be, gentlemen, your obedient servant, J. Russell. Edinburgh, Nov. 22, 1845."

Opening of the Ports.—On Tuesday the electors and other inhabitants of Southwark held a meeting, at which resolutions in favour of Free Trade and the immediate opening of the ports were unanimously adopted. Sir W. Molesworth, M.P., presided, and addressed the meeting at some length. Similar meetings have been held at Sheffield, Liverpool, Dunfermline, Birmingham, Edinburgh, Leeds, Bolton, Glasgow, Devonport, and other places. Perhaps the most important meeting that has been held in the provinces was that at Leeds, which took place on Wednesday last. The Mayor presided, and speeches in favour of Free Trade were delivered by Mr. Cobden, Mr. Bright, Mr. Baines, Mr. Stansfield, &c. The chief event of the evening was the following letter from Lord Morpeth, which was read by Mr. Edward Baines, jun., and received with enthusiastic applause:—"Castle Howard, Nov. 24, 1845. My dear Mr. Baines,—I perceive that you are about to have a meeting at Leeds, to promote the qualification of electors, with a view to further the objects of the Anti-Corn-law League. You will probably remember being present upon an occasion when, amidst very strong surrounding inducements, I forbore from pledging myself to the extent of those objects. All that has since intervened—especially all that is now occurring—a fellow-feeling with my old friends in the Riding (although I less than ever anticipate any probable renewal of a political connexion between us), and a sense of what has been effected by the Anti-Corn-law League to advance their great end—alike combine to put an end to all further doubt or reserve on my own part, and I write this without concert or consultation with any one else. The contribution (5*l.*) I inclose for your immediate purposes is of very trifling amount; it would not be easy to foresee what calls may not be made upon any of us in the course of the ensuing year; but I wish to record in the most emphatic way I can, my conviction that the time is come for a final repeal of the Corn-laws, and my protest against the continued inaction of the State in the present emergency. Yours very respectfully, Morpeth."

Extraordinary Mortality from Malaria.—On Monday, Mr. Wakley held an inquest at the Middlesex Hospital on the bodies of two lads, William and Henry Lambert, who died in that institution from the effects of an unknown disease, supposed to have been produced by malaria arising from the defective drainage in a lane called Whetstone Park, behind the north side of Lincoln's Inn-fields. The drains in that part of town have for years been most offensive; and in this case it was proved that the deceased lads, who resided in Cumberland-market, caught the disease from their sister, who was attacked in Whetstone Park, while attending another sister and her infant who were ill of the same complaint, and whom no regular nurse could be induced to attend. Mr. Corfe, the house surgeon of the hospital, stated that on the 4th inst. the deceased and their brother John, aged 20, now an inmate, were brought together in a cab to the hospital, and admitted in-door patients. They were perfectly sensible, but the stench from the discharges emitted from their nostrils, mouths, and eyes, was so offensive as to sicken the persons present. They complained of sore throats, but suffered so much from difficulty of breathing that they could not give any account of the origin of the disease. He suspected, from what he had heard and the symptoms which they betrayed, that it resulted from poisonous effluvia from a sewer which was near the house, and which, for the last two years, was very offensive. The whole three were in all respects similarly attacked. Their noses were almost gone, and in addition to the fetid discharges, they suffered from constipation of the bowels. The joints of the knees, elbows, and wrists were swollen, and swellings were under their ears, which discharged purulent matter. Eruptions were over the whole of their bodies, their pulses were under 100; and in none of them was there constitutional irritability. They were exceedingly hungry, and constantly called for chops, &c., although unable to swallow any substance. Beef-tea and other similar stimulants were administered. They had been evidently in perfect health before the disease attacked them. William died on the 13th, and Henry on the 15th. The eldest brother, who still remained in the hospital in a very weakly state, and was slowly improving, had not any discharge from the joints, as his brothers had, although he was greatly emaciated. He was stone deaf, and yet the swelling of the fauces had gone down. The witness, with Mr. Hadland, surgeon, of Guildford-street, who was also examined, was of opinion that the fatal disease, for which he could find no name, originated from atmospheric influences, produced by noxious effluvia from animal or vegetable matter. Dr. Richards, Bedford-square, said that he had attended another sister of deceased, who had been attacked similarly, although she had only called at the house in Cumberland-market to inquire after her relative's health, which proved that the disease was both contagious and infectious. After much conversation between the Coroner, Jury, and medical witnesses, on the unparalleled nature of the case, the jury returned a verdict, "That deceased died of a specific disease, produced by a specific poison, the name and character of which they do not know."

Enlargement of the Green Park.—The workmen last week completed the removal of the iron and wooden railings which enclosed the garden belonging to Earl Coventry, in the Green Park, the whole of which is now thrown open to the public, being an addition of three acres to the Green Park. The alterations of widening Piccadilly are proceeding rapidly, and will be completed in about a fortnight.

The Improvements in Hyde Park.—The workmen, to the number of 200, that have been employed by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, making numerous improvements throughout every part of Hyde Park, for upwards of four months, have completed their work. There are now 32 long, broad, and excellent gravel-walks made, which communicate with every gate throughout the Park.

City Improvements.—Notices have been posted on the church of St. Peter ad Vincula, and other churches in the vicinity of the Tower, of the intention of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests to apply to Parliament next session for an Act empowering them to widen and improve George-street, Tower-hill, and to purchase all the property in Great Tower-hill, Trinity-square, George-street, and Postern-row, all within the precincts of Old Tower-without. This is a much desired improvement, as opening a direct carriage communication between London and St. Katharine's Docks and the City.

New Gas Company.—Notices have been given that it is the intention of a company, to be called the National Gas Association, to apply in the next session for an act of incorporation, for the purpose of supplying with gas the city of London, Southwark, Greenwich, Stockwell, Lambeth, and places adjacent; the counties of Middlesex, Bedford, Leicester, Derby, and some other places. The notice also contains a provision for purchasing the rights and works of the existing London gas companies, and to be incorporated as one body.

Roman Catholic Chapel and Nunnery.—A commodious piece of ground in the Triangle and close adjacent to King Edward's-road, at Hackney, has been purchased and taken possession of by Bishop Griffiths, and other trustees, whereon to erect a Catholic chapel and nunnery. The discipline of the latter will much resemble that of the Sisters of Charity.

The Enclosure of Kennington Common.—Several of the inhabitants residing in the immediate vicinity of Kennington Common are exceedingly active in adopting measures to effect an inclosure of this well-known place of public resort and healthful recreation. The great bulk of the people who occupy dwellings in the neighbourhood are, however, decidedly opposed to the project; so that hostilities of a rather formidable character may be expected before the contemplated plan can be much further advanced.

Victoria Park.—The operations for the formation of the new park may be considered as over for the season, and great disappointment is expressed by the inhabitants of the eastern districts, who take much interest in its progress, that nothing has as yet been done in the formation of the plantations. Since the spring, however, the whole of the wooden park paling and iron railing have been placed up, a handsome entrance lodge on the banks of the Regent's-canal in Bishop Bonner's fields has been erected, and the bridge which is to lead from the principal approaches into the park is nearly completed. On the extensive site of Bishop Bonner's fields, three leading main roads of wide dimensions are laid out, connecting with the Hackney, Bethnal-green, and Cambridge roads, and on the empty spots are to be erected a series of villas on an uniform plan, subject to the approbation of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests The whole of the area purchased will not be inclosed for the actual park, but a portion will be leased for building on similar plans.

City Antiquities.—On Monday evening, at the Institute of British Architects, it was stated by Mr. Tite, the architect to the Royal Exchange, that a large collection of the antiquities of Roman London, found in the excavations for that building, were in store in a spare room at the London Institution, and which it was yet undecided whether to transfer to the City of London Library, at Guildhall, or to a room at Gresham-buildings to be appropriated to the purpose. The circumstances under which they were found were singular and interesting. On the south side of the Exchange, whilst excavating for a foundation, the workmen came to a solid bed of concrete, about 15 feet below the surface, on penetrating through which they found a dark peaty mass, forming a pit 9 feet in depth, and literally filled with every description of Roman rubbish. The pit was indicated by surrounding circumstances to have been a hole out of which gravel had been dug for the formation of neighbouring roads or garden-walks, afterwards converted into a horse-pond, as appeared from the remains of horse furniture, and eventually it became the City rubbish-hole. There was found in it a very extensive collection of coins, amphoræ, shoes, and sandals, and every variety of articles of domestic use, even to bodkins with the wool in them; the animal and vegetable matters being in a high state of preservation from the nature of the peaty mass in which they were found. This had been piled, and upon it a bed of concrete had been laid, on which Roman buildings had been erected, nor were the foundations of these removed when the two Royal Exchanges in succession were erected. Mr. Tite also remarked on the presence of peat-mud found in excavations near the Thames, showing the former growth of rushes or other rank vegetation, and which had been found as high up from the river as the Cheapside end of Friday-street.

College of Chemistry.—Her Majesty has been pleased to authorise the College of Chemistry to assume the title of the Royal College of Chemistry. Prince Albert has accepted the office of President of the institution, and presented it with the donation of 100*l.*

Pauper Employment in Workhouses.—The Poor-law Commissioners have issued a circular, stating that they have for some time had under their consideration the expediency of issuing a general rule, prohibiting the employment of paupers in workhouses in grinding, pounding, or breaking bones; and that looking to the serious objections to which this mode of employment is liable, they have, after mature deliberation, decided on issuing a general rule, prohibiting bone crushing in workhouses. The order for this purpose, which has also been issued, will come into operation on the 1st January next. The Commissioners have also sent circulars to various boards of guardians, authorising them to employ the poor in the workhouse in extracting the flour or starch from diseased Potatoes, free of expense to any poor person who should send them to the house for that purpose.

Christ's Hospital and the Corporation.—A very full meeting of the governors of Christ's Hospital was held on Tuesday, at which a resolution was adopted condemnatory of the whole proceedings of the late Lord Mayor and the corporation of the city of London, on the question of the right of the chief magistrate to take precedence of all other persons with the exception of the Sovereign, within the walls of the city. A meeting of the Royal Hospital Committee was subsequently held at Guildhall, at which an account of what had taken place at Christ's Hospital was detailed, and the members came unanimously to the resolution to assert the right of the Lord Mayor to take precedence. These proceedings have placed it beyond question that the matter will be immediately handed over to the lawyers.

Monument to Dr. Watts.—On Tuesday the ceremony of inaugurating a cenotaph to the memory of Dr. Watts took place in Abney Park Cemetery. Alderman Kelly was in the chair, supported by Mr. Hankey the banker, Dr. Morrison, Mr. Binney, and other dissenting ministers well known in the neighbourhood of the metropolis, besides several of the students connected with the college at Highbury. The cenotaph, which was designed by Mr. Bailey, R.A., stands about the centre of the grounds. It consists of a full length figure of Dr. Watts in ecclesiastical costume, 9 ft. in height, standing on a pedestal of Portland stone, 13 ft. high, and 6 ft. square. On the side facing Abney Chapel is the following inscription:—"In memory of ISAAC WATTS, D.D. In testimony of the high and lasting esteem in which his character and writings were held in the great Christian community by whom the English language is spoken. Of his psalms and hymns, it may be predicted in his own words—

"'Ages unborn will make his songs
The joy and labour of their tongues.'

"He was born at Southampton, July 16, 1674, and died November 25, 1748, after a residence of 36 years in the mansion of Sir Thomas Abney, Bart., then standing on these grounds. Erected by public subscription."

Baths and Washhouses for the Labouring Classes.—The establishment for the poor at Glasshouse-street, London Docks, has now completed the first six months of its experiment, and during that period the warm-baths, wash-tubs, and drying apparatus, have been used by 29,080 persons. The buildings on the site for the first model establishment at Goulstone-square, Whitechapel, are to be cleared away this week. The foundation stone is to be laid there on the 16th December.

The late Robbery at Messrs. Rogers' Bank.—On Tuesday Mr. Hobler, the solicitor, attended at the Mansion House and made a statement to the Lord Mayor of the steps taken to recover the property. Mr. Hobler said that it was just 12 months since this robbery had been committed; but up to the present moment not the slightest clue existed which was likely to lead to the discovery of the perpetrators, nor had one of the stolen notes been heard of, although some romantic accounts had occasionally sprung up. In order to obstruct the circulation of the stolen notes, it was unnecessary to mention that the utmost activity and watchfulness had been exercised. Within 12 hours after the discovery of the loss, he despatched his clerk to the principal towns of France, Belgium, Holland, and Germany, to secure the co-operation of the British consuls and police in each country in furthering his detective measures, and he put himself in correspondence with every representative of the British Government in every part of the world upon the subject on which he had been employed to act with instructions, without limit or control. The powerful aid he thus applied for had been most readily accorded. The expense attending the extensive means taken to circulate the information of the robbery, and to serve proper notices on money changers, and others, was of course large, but was an object of inconsiderable magnitude in comparison with the anxiety to get hold of the parties implicated in the robbery. No opportunity had been neglected in repeating the caution. On the Queen's visit to Germany, when the Continent was inundated with English, a fresh supply of the lists of stolen notes, with cautions in different languages, was by the kindness of the directors of the General Steam Navigation Company conveyed to different parts of the world for new distribution. In England, Ireland, and Scotland, the most active measures had been pursued, the outports and principal towns having been well supplied from time to time with lists and cautions through the agency of the police, independently of the circulation of immense numbers through every Government officer in the country, and the thousands which had been continually given to mercantile men of all descriptions. To these measures, and to unceasing vigilance in pursuing them, was it attributable that not one of the notes had got into circulation. It was due to the Commissioners of Customs and Excise to mention that they immediately consented to send lists to their respective collectors, and the stations connected with the various departments of those authorities. He also stated the readiness of Lord Lonsdale, the Postmaster-general, to aid, as far as he could; and although it was out of his lordship's power to circulate the bills through his department, he supplied lists of all the postmasters in the United Kingdom, to whom bills were forwarded without delay. Various other public bodies and companies had likewise expressed their readiness to assist in the matter. The Royal Mail Steam Packet Company had supplied all their stations (nearly 40 in number) with great quantities of the lists. The New South Wales Packet Company had acted with similar energy, and the loss was as well known at Sydney as at London. So also had the directors and superintendents of the numerous railways acted with the utmost kindness and liberality. In fact almost every public company, besides numerous private firms of publishers, Manchester warehousemen and others, inclosed lists in their parcels to the country. Every department of business had been applied to for co-operation, the readiness to give aid had been universal, and in nearly all instances the parcels of lists had been conveyed to their destination without cost. The Lord Mayor said it gave him much gratification to learn that such praiseworthy sympathy had been manifested by the parties applied to with the loss which Messrs. Rogers and Co. had sustained. He was convinced that the public who had shown so much good feeling upon the occasion would be glad to be informed that no effort was left untried to render the respectable firm, upon which so awful a robbery had been committed, every service, and to mitigate the inconvenience to which they must for some time have been necessarily exposed. His lordship was of opinion that the publication of what had been stated by Mr. Hobler, who had acted with such skill and judgment in the whole of the affair, would be the means of reviving the activity of the authorities originally appealed to. It was evident that the menaces resorted to had produced a great effect upon the persons implicated in the robbery, for as far as could be ascertained, not one of the bank notes had been seen, even amongst the stags in Bartholomew-lane. It was, however, still indispensably necessary that the public should exercise the vigilance with which the proceedings of those who were engaged in the inquiry was marked from the commencement to the present time.

The Late Case of Murder and Piracy on the High Seas.—The 12 judges, before whom the important question of international law in this case was argued on Saturday, the 15th, have not yet been able to come to a decision, and have intimated their wish that the points should be argued again by civilians from Doctor's-commons; the 3d of December has been fixed for the argument by one Learned Doctor on either side in the Court of Exchequer. The respite of the prisoners, which expired on Monday, has been extended to meet the delay consequent upon this arrangement.

Murder at Newington.—On Thursday evening about 5 o'clock a labourer, named Daniel Fitzgerald, in the employ of Mr. Quennell, a respectable builder in Kennington-lane, was shot with a pistol ball in Peacock-street, as he was returning home, by Samuel Quennell, the brother of his employer. The poor man died instantly. The murderer attempted to escape, but was pursued and captured by two gentlemen, who witnessed the act, and handed over to the police. It is said that for some cause or other the prisoner had been discharged from his employment by his brother on Saturday last, and, conceiving that Fitzgerald had been the cause of his dismissal, he had been heard during the week to make use of the most violent threats towards the unfortunate man.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Nov. 22:—West Districts, 144; Northern, 129; Central, 200; Eastern, 193; Southern, 238; Total, 909; males, 475; females, 434. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1217; males, 639; females, 578.

Provincial.

Incendiary Fires.—We regret to say that incendiary fires are again becoming frequent in the agricultural districts. In the neighbourhood of Nottingham four fires have occurred under circumstances warranting a strong suspicion of incendiarism. In one of these, 14 stacks of wheat, grain, and hay, the property of Mr. Beardall, of Bestwood-park, farmer, were totally consumed; and in a subsequent fire at Beeston, a village three miles south-west of Nottingham, 15 stacks, the property of Mr. Joseph Walker, were destroyed. Another incendiary fire, on Tuesday week, destroyed the whole of the corn, hay, and barns on the farm of Mr. Neale, of Broom, near Biggleswade, Bedfordshire; and on Thursday week, the farm-buildings occupied by Mr. W. Trinder, at Wantage, were totally destroyed, together with a quantity of seeds, &c.

Chatham.—The Janus steam-sloop has again returned to her former moorings, opposite the dockyard, having been towed up on Friday by the Wildfire steam-vessel, which found her broken down at sea. This unfortunate vessel left on the 18th inst., as reported for Portsmouth, whereas she was to take a cruise in the Channel, having on board Captain Shirreff, Superintendent of Her Majesty's yard, accompanied by Vice-Admiral the Earl of Dundonald, the constructor of her engines, and manned by the seamen of the ordinary. She reached Sheerness in about two hours and a half, the paddle wheels revolving about thirteen times to the minute, and on her arrival outside the river, touching the sea-water, her pace slackened, and gradually decreased, and on her arrival near the Mouse, her speed was so reduced that her wheels only made eleven revolutions in the minute, although she had a strong wind in her favour, and in attempting to turn her she drifted astern; consequently it was found necessary to anchor her for the night, as it was rough and blew a strong gale. The next morning the engineers could not get the wheels to turn until noon, when they revolved about five times to the minute; and at which rate the engines continued working until 8 at night. The next morning the weather being fine, it was attempted to run the vessel to the Downs, but it was found that, by using every exertion, she would not make head against the sea. Further trial was therefore deemed useless, and the vessel beat up again for Sheerness; and on arrival in the river water she returned to her former speed. On passing the guardship Trafalgar, however, her engines broke down, and she was obliged to anchor for the night; and on Friday she was towed to this port. It is now clear that this vessel, according to her present construction, will never go a-head, having now failed in a hundred experiments, and having had all the resources of Chatham-yard expended on her for the last year without the least improvement. With wheels proportioned to her nominal power, of 220 horse, she would not make two miles an hour, and when sent to sea in this instance she did not make headway against a light sea, whereas another vessel would have run full speed. Lord Dundonald however has written a letter to the Times, in which he appears to suggest that some persons had maliciously impeded the proper working of the machinery, and expressing confidence in the ultimate success of the vessel.

Coventry.—A murder was committed last week upon the person of a respectable old man, named Tranter, a farmer, residing in a lone house situate in the parish of Berkeswell, midway between the Coventry and Hampton Railway Stations. The old man appears to have been a most eccentric character, so much so, that he would not allow any person to sleep in the house with him. He breakfasted on Monday week with a boy named Satchwell, whom he employed about his grounds, and afterwards went with him into a field, to point out the work to be done in the course of the day; a short time afterwards the old man returned to his house, and was not again seen alive. At 10 o'clock the boy observed the shutters of the house closed. This circumstance did not, however, excite particular attention, it being customary for the old man to do this whenever he left the house. About one o'clock the lad went to the house to obtain his dinner, and finding the doors closed, he knocked loudly several times, but received no answer. He then went away, but returned in the evening, and the following morning, the house still remaining shut up, the circumstance gave rise to suspicion. On the Wednesday morning the door was broken open. On searching the house the body of the old man was discovered in a closet, covered with blood, and on examining the corpse an immense cut was observed on the back part of the head. A carpenter's axe and a bill-hook lay near the body, both of these having quantities of blood and hair clotted round the edges. The state of the house made it evident that the main object of the murderers was plunder, every drawer and cupboard having been ransacked, and it is generally believed that the old man kept a considerable sum of money in the house. No clue has yet been obtained that is likely to lead to the discovery of the murderers, except that on the day the act is supposed to have been committed two strangers inquired of a boy the way to the old man's house, and whether he was likely to be at home. They have not been heard of since. An inquest was held on Friday and Saturday, but no new facts were elicited, and a verdict was returned of wilful murder against some person unknown.

Leicester.—Mr. Wynn Ellis, M P., has communicated to the authorities of this town the following letter which he has received from the Home-office, in reference to the case of Samuel Chambers:—"Sir,—With reference to your letter of the 30th June last, transmitting a petition in behalf of Samuel Chambers, who was convicted at Leicester in 1844, and, under his sentence, transported to Van Diemen's Land, I am directed by Secretary Sir James Graham to acquaint you that further inquiry has been made relative to the case, from which it appears that the conviction was bad. Sir James Graham has therefore recommended a free pardon, which will be immediately prepared and despatched to the colony, together with orders for the free passage of Samuel Chambers to this country, if he should desire it. I am, &c., S. M. PHILLIPS."

Liverpool.—The magistrates of this town have been occupied during several sittings with hearing evidence against seven of the crew belonging to the bark Champlain, of Cork, Captain Fenton, on a charge of having mutinied and attempted to scuttle the vessel, by boring holes with augurs at the starboard bow, on the homeward voyage from St. John's, New Brunswick, to Dungarvon. The evidence, so far as it has gone, leaves little doubt that the crew had made more than one attempt to scuttle the vessel. The prisoners have been again remanded, to afford time for the captain, who has not arrived from America, to appear as a witness against them.

Manchester.—The 1st prize of 50*l.* for the plans of the Manchester Parks has been awarded to Messrs. Major and Son, of Knowstropp, near Leeds, and the second to Messrs. H. Bigland and Co., of Manchester. Efforts are to be made to have the parks ready early next year.

Oxford.—The Rev. Frederick W. Faber, M.A., late Fellow of University College, Oxford, and Rector of Elton, Huntingdon, has resigned his preferment, and conformed to the Roman Catholic Church. Bishop Wareing, Roman Catholic bishop of the northern district, has addressed a letter to a provincial paper, announcing this fact, and stating that Mr. Faber, with seven of his parishioners, and his friend Thomas Francis Knox, Esq., B.A., Trinity College, Cambridge, made public profession of the Catholic faith in the collegiate chapel of St. Felix, Northampton, on the 17th inst.

Portsmouth.—The General Court Martial on Lieut. Dunbar closed on Friday, when the finding of the Court as reported to the Admiralty and approved, was delivered in the Marine barracks. The defence was that Lieut. Dunbar, while suffering from sudden but severe pain caused by medicine, had recourse to a stimulant, which, although taken in a very small quantity, produced, almost instantaneously, insensibility, which was mistaken for an extreme state of intoxication. The Court came to the conclusion, "That Lieut. Dunbar was guilty of having been in a state of intoxication at the Victualling Store-barracks on the 30th October last, but did fully acquit him of all conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, as, in the opinion of the Court, such intoxication was chiefly, if not entirely, produced by his previous indisposition, increased by his imprudent use of violent remedies. The Court having found the prisoner guilty to the extent above set forth, doth therefore sentence him to be admonished to be more cautious in future."

Sunderland.—On Wednesday morning the inhabitants of Bishopwearmouth were alarmed by a tremendous noise, like the rumbling of distant thunder, which was ascertained to proceed from the Bishopwearmouth Iron Works, a large boiler having burst, causing the death of four persons, and seriously injuring 22 others, some of them so greatly that in respect to four but little hopes are entertained of their recovery. Immense masses of building materials were projected with violence into the air, and large portions of metal were thrown several yards in various directions, the atmosphere being filled with a cloud of dust. The boiler had been only about a year in use, and was considered the best in the establishment. When at full work, between 300 and 400 men are employed here, but, fortunately, the greater portion of the men had left the premises, it being breakfast hour, or the calamity would have been much more serious.

Winchester.—On Monday week Mr. Escott attended the dinner which took place at Winchester, on the occasion of the election of a mayor. "The health of the members for the borough" having been proposed—

Mr. ESCOTT rose amid continued cheering, and in the course of his speech made the following observations:—A most serious calamity had afflicted this country—the failure of the potato crop. Commissioners had been sent to Ireland by the Government, and it was ascertained that the crop there, as well as in most parts of England and Scotland, would also be greatly deficient. In the neighbourhood where he lived, he believed that one-half the food consumed by the people altogether was potatoes, and two-thirds of that food was destroyed. Something must be done to remedy the evil, for there would be more industrious men brought to starvation on account of this scarcity than had been known in the memory of man—not actually to perish from want, because our law would not allow a man to starve, nor, as he trusted, would scarcely permit it. He felt bound to state this plain fact, and it was for those in power, if, indeed, we had a government at all, to take some steps to provide against the growing calamity. Some people were ready—when they saw a great many propositions made, and new views developed in these days, which became necessary from the altered state of circumstances, and the varying course of the world—to feel an aversion to measures which they had not been accustomed to contemplate, and to condemn as new, and strange, and sudden, what nevertheless might be wise and good. Then what was sometimes called new was found, on inquiry, to be very old, and approved by experience. He was about to do no more than quote history. He had been looking a little to what our ancestors had done under similar circumstances, and what those had done who were older than any whom we called ancestors. When the famine was sore in the land, the oldest nation upon earth of which they had any record, sent to another country, to Egypt, where they had a brother Joseph, whose providence had reserved granaries for them, from whom they bought such stores as preserved themselves and their kindred and their people. Now, though we had no brother Joseph in Egypt, we had a brother Jonathan across the Atlantic—a younger brother ready to assist us, and we refusing to be helped. For what were we doing now? He thought something worse than nothing. Our merchants were forced to send corn out of the country, when God only knew how soon we might want it ourselves. He believed there was no place in England that afforded a fairer epitome of the country's general interests than the city of Winchester. This idea was suggested to him by his friend the mayor. He found in it a learned and pious clergy, a high-spirited set of tradesmen, many members of one branch of a profession to which he once had the honour to belong, some landlords, some active and practical farmers, and an eminent body of medical men, second to none in the kingdom. There were also enterprising labourers and artificers equal to any in industry and skill. These were the interests which politicians must consult; and he had endeavoured to consult them without fear or hope of favour, without any view to his own personal advancement, save in the trust to which they had advanced him. In conclusion, the hon. gentleman said, while I have my health I shall endeavour to retain the honour of being your representative, and come the election when it may, I am strong in the confidence that, as you appear to approve of the course which I have followed, you are ready to offer me, by your renewed public favour, the best incentive to future exertions in the same. [The hon. member sat down amidst loud and continued cheering].

Windsor.—Captain M'Lachlan, one of the Military Knights of Windsor, who left that town for London, a few days since, for the purpose of taking leave of his two daughters, who were about to proceed to Ceylon, expired at his apartments in Northumberland-court, Strand, on Saturday. Captain M'Lachlan, who was in his 68th year, had enjoyed excellent health until within a few days of his decease. The Misses M'Lachlan sailed on Monday, from Gravesend, in the Tigris.

Railways.

The Broad and Narrow Gauge Commission examined Mr. Hudson on Saturday, and his evidence is reported at length in the Iron Times. Mr. Hudson is a strenuous advocate of the narrow gauge, on the plea of economy, and he affirms that it possesses all the capabilities as regards safety and speed of the broad gauge. The main points of his evidence were to the following effect:—"We have been enabled to do everything on the narrow gauge which the Great Western has accomplished on the broad. Economy was the great inducement for adopting the narrow gauge. It would be impolitic to enlarge the gauge, as they would gain nothing with regard to speed or power by it, as they had already sufficient power on the narrow gauge lines. The narrow gauge lines were more convenient for traffic. A truck weighing from 7 to 9 tons could easily be moved by one horse; but those on the Great Western, weighing 13 tons, could not be moved by one horse, and it was difficult to attach a leader to the load. He had seen this difficulty arise at Bristol. Unless some great advantage could be derived from the broad gauge which had not been shown, he thought the narrow gauge had been wisely chosen. In his opinion the public had not overrated the inconvenience of a break of gauge."—The Table of Railway Speculation, published in the Times last week, and noticed in our last Number, has given rise to many communications on subjects connected with the projected railways. Among others, the Times on Saturday published a letter from a correspondent, from which we make the following extract:—"Your frightful Supplement has afforded me some data for calculation as to the enormous quantity of land that will be taken out of cultivation, if all the projects could or can be executed; 47 railways, 2069 miles executed; 118 railways, 3543 miles in progress, making 165 railways 5612 miles. 5612 ÷ 165 gives exactly 34 miles, the average length of each railway. I estimate the average width of each railway, including the immense termini, to be full 40 yards; therefore 1760 × 40 ÷ 4840, or 1760 ÷ 121 = 14·545 acres per mile; 34 × 14·545 = 494·5 acres per railway; 494·5 × 165 = 81,597·5 acres taken by railways executed or in progress; 494·5 × 1,1263 = 628,553·5 acres to be taken by projected railways. Total, 710,151 acres. How many quarters of wheat, or tons of potatoes or carrots, may be grown on 710,151 acres of land, or what proportion it bears to the whole quantity of productive surface, I must leave to those who understand it better than I do; but when I see that agricultural societies are applying all the means they can think of, to make the supply equal to the demands of an increasing population, I cannot but think this is a subject of great importance, though certainly far inferior to that which you have so ably and disinterestedly handled."—By the statistical tables in the "Railway Almanack" it appears that out of 31 therein described, four pay a dividend on their capital of 10 per cent., one of 9 per cent, five of 8 per cent., one of 7 per cent., five of 6 per cent., seven of 5 per cent., one of 4 3-16ths per cent., one of 4 1/4 per cent., one of 4 3-8ths per cent., five of 4 per cent., one of 3¾ per cent., one of 3 1-5th per cent., one of 2 5/8 per cent., one of 2½ per cent., one of 2¼ per cent., one of 2 per cent., and one of 1 per cent. Showing that of the 38 railways specified, 15 pay less than 5 per cent.; 22 pay less than 6 per cent., and of the remaining number only five pay at or above the rate of 9 per cent. Those who imagine that the dividends from the projected lines are to exceed the dividends paid by railways having had all the advantages of the entire traffic of their districts and the monopoly of the road, will do well to consider the above table."—The directors of the Great Western Company have announced a new line, to be called "The Exeter Great Western Railway," being a line between Yeovil and Exeter, and between Bridport and Exeter, with branches to Sidmouth and Chard. The object of the proposed line is to unite Exeter with Yeovil and Bridport, as forming part of the great integral scheme for making the best direct railway communication from the metropolis through Exeter to Plymouth and Falmouth. Between Yeovil and Westbury, the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth Railway will form the main line of communication, at which latter place it will join a proposed extension of the Berks and Hants from Hungerford, carried through the Pewsey Valley. The Berks and Hants, and the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth Bills have already passed, and those lines are under construction. The Great Western Company will apply for the extension from Hungerford to Westbury, only 35 miles, in the approaching session. It is also said that the Great Western Company have resolved upon completing a direct broad gauge line from London to Birmingham. It is known that this Company intend to apply, in the ensuing session, for an Act to construct a line to High Wycombe. This line will take a direct course from a spot not far from the Paddington terminus. From High Wycombe it is proposed to extend the line to Oxford, in a course almost as direct as the crow flies. This will reduce, by some miles, the present railway distance between London and Oxford. It is stated that the distance from London to Birmingham, by this projected broad gauge line, will be several miles shorter than the London and Birmingham.—The deputation appointed at the meeting held on the 13th inst., of proprietors in the Bristol and Exeter railway, to wait upon the directors with the resolution then passed, have had an interview with the directors of the Company. The chairman related the determination come to by the directors, but the deputation wished it to be reduced to writing, and, accordingly the following has been addressed by the board of directors to the deputation:—"That the directors were always ready to hear the opinions, and to receive suggestions from any shareholder, when fairly and legitimately expressed; but feeling that they were responsible for the management of the undertaking, it was their duty to exercise their best judgment in the selection of such officers as they deemed necessary, and best calculated to promote the interests of the company." This answer gives anything but satisfaction to the parties opposed to the directors; copies of it have been forwarded to the various committees in different parts of the kingdom, and it is expected that a strong opposition will be organised.—A great meeting was held last week at Cambridge in pursuance of a requisition which had been addressed to the Mayor, to take into consideration the numerous railway projects in immediate connexion with the town. The following companies were represented on the occasion by numerous deputations; the Eastern Counties, Lincolnshire and Eastern Counties Junction, Wisbeach, St. Ives, and Cambridge Junction, Cambridge and Oxford, Midland and Eastern Counties, Bedford to Cambridge Extension, Newmarket and Chesterford, Bury St. Edmund's and Cambridge Union, Cambridge and Colchester Junction, London and York. Mr. Hudson was present as chairman of the Eastern Counties, and after hearing him and other gentlemen on behalf of their respective schemes, the meeting appointed a committee to inquire and report to a future meeting.—The committee of the Direct Independent Kent, Surrey, and Sussex Union Company have announced that it is not their intention to attempt to go before Parliament during the ensuing session. The Isle of Wight Railway scheme is also withdrawn for the forthcoming session.—It is said that amalgamation is expected to take place between the promoters of the following Irish projects:—Cork and Waterford, Cork and Killarney, Dublin and Enniskillen, Dublin and Galway, Armagh, Coleraine, and Portrush; County Down, Cork and Youghal, Killarney Junction, Irish North Midland, Midland (Galway) Extension; Dublin, Belfast, and Coleraine; Great County Down.—The Macclesfield branch of the Manchester and Birmingham was opened on Monday, in the presence of an immense concourse of people.—The different lines uniting at Leeds have agreed to contribute 100,000*l.* each towards the establishment of a central station.—Moonlight and lantern excursions are becoming common among railway surveyors on lands where surveys are forbidden, and where mandates have been issued against their movements. A short time since a person who was surveying one of the projected lines of railway, which will (if permitted) intersect some portion of the royal domain at Windsor, was observed by Her Majesty, in her drive through the Long-walk, pursuing his labours. This fact was instanced by three or four red flags, which had been stuck in the ground close to the carriage drive. Her Majesty sent one of the equerries to order the sur-

...ayor to desist. The royal command at the time was ...attended to, but the next morning the work was again ...ommenced, and completed within one hour after sunrise. ...A few days ago some surveyors applied to Mr. Curling, ...the proprietor of a farm at Fulbrook, near Quainton, for ...leave to make a survey. He at once refused, at the ...same time informing them that if they persevered in ...their determination he should resist their intentions to ...the utmost, and "have the law on them." The survey... ...urged the absolute necessity of their making a ...survey, and the proximity of the 30th, but the farmer ...turned a deaf ear, and they left, but at midnight ...they returned and finished their task, and were miles ...away before the farmer learned he had been so adroitly ...outwitted.—The Brighton and Chichester line was ...opened on Monday as far as Worthing. An accident ...occurred during the day which delayed the proceedings ...considerably, a horse attached to one of the earth ...waggons having come in contact with the tender of the ...engine and thrown it off the line. The train was full of ...passengers, but fortunately no one was injured. The ...horse of course was killed on the spot.—On Saturday ...night, a gentleman who was desirous of proceeding into ...South Wales by the mail from Gloucester, finding all ...the trains had left Bristol for that place had no alter... ...native but to order an express engine and carriage. ...This was soon in readiness. On reaching Standish ...junction, where the Bristol and Great Western join, ...about 11 miles from Gloucester, the engine ran into the ...back truck of a goods train standing across the line, with... ...out any light whatever. The concussion threw the ...engineer and stoker of the express train off the engine, ...both escaping with a few slight bruises. The passenger ...also escaped with a severe shaking, and was enabled to ...proceed by the Great Western mail train from London, ...which ran past a few minutes after the accident hap... ...pened. The engine was much broken, and the trucks ...wrecked to pieces. The guard of the goods train was given ...in custody for a breach of the bye-laws, in not having ...a signal-lamp with him.

...AYS AND TRAFFIC, by permission, from the List of Messrs. ...HILL, FAWCETT, & HILL, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

Name of Railway. (Lines marked thus * are not yet opened.)	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Week ending between Nov. 19. & Nov. 26.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Corresponding Week. 1844.	6 Mos. Dividend Per Share. 3 Mos.	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid up.	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock.
	£	£	£ s. d.	£	£	£
...ingham, Glo'ster		2,117	2 0 0	100	all	122-4
..., Birmingham			1 8 0	100	70	78 82
..., Exeter			1 0 0	50	30	52 4
..., Glo'ster				50	15	13-14
..., Holyhead	*	*	*	50	15	13-14
...m Counties	5,420	3,548	0 3 0†	avr.	14½	18½-¾
...n Union				50	20
..., Extension				25	1½
...burgh, Glasgow	2,427	2,297	1 5 0	50	all	60-65
... Junction			2 10 0†	100	all
... North of England		1,650	3 0 0	100	all	208-12
... Western	15,761	13,100	3 4 0	100	80	140-3
...uth. & Western (I.)	*	*	*	50	15	17-19
... Extension	*	*	*	50	2½	8½-9
... Selby				50	all	97-9
...ster, Carlisle	*	*	*	50	25	42-5
...rpool, Manchester		4 3¼	4 10 0	100	all
..., Birmingham	31,201	13,748	5 0 0	s k.	100	200-5
..., Blackwall	704	680	0 3 0	avr.	16⅔	8 ½
..., Brighton	4,078	3,615	1 10 0	50	all	58½ 9
..., Croydon		416	0 8 0	avr.	13½	18-19
..., Greenwich				avr.	12½	9-10
..., South-Western	5 895	4 771	2 0 0	avr.	41½	7-8
...chester, Birmingham	3,779	2,926	1 0 0	40	40	60-5
...chester, Bolt., Bury	883	820	3 14 0	93	93
...chester, Leeds, Hull	5,918		2 16 0	100	73	126-26
...land	14,031	8,458	2 2 6	stk.	100	133 6
... Birmingham, Derby				stk.	100	104-8
...castle, Carlisle	1,669	1,713	2 10 0	100	all
...castle, Darlington	2,509	1,032	4 0 0	25	all	48-53
... British	*	*	*	25	15	20-1
...ern, Eastern			1 2 6	50	45	61-6
...ich, Brandon				20	14	20-2
..., Wyre	394	306		50	all
...ld, Manchester	1,065	660	5 p. Cent	100	95
... Devon	*	*	*	50	20	25-7
...-Eastern, Dover	5,375	4,154	0 13 4	avr.	33⅓	32½ 3
...outh, Norwich			0 10 0	20	all	24-6
..., North Midland	4,893	2,267	2 10 0	50	all	9 -109
... Scarboro' Branch	*	*	*	25	all	45-50
..., Selby			0 12 8	50	39	65-70
FRENCH RAILWAYS.
...gne, Amiens	*	*	*	20	8	7½
..., Vierzon	*	*	*	20	10	14-15
..., Bordeaux	*	*	*	20	4	8-½
..., Orleans	5,773	4,571	1 0 2½	20	all	42-4
..., Rouen	4,993	4,305	0 19 2	20	all	33-5
..., Havre				20	14	24 6

Ireland.

Dublin.—At the meeting of the Mansion-house committee on Monday, the Lord Mayor, who had been requested to inform Sir Thomas Fremantle that the committee were ready to place at the disposal of the Government the information hitherto received by them, reported that the Government would be glad to receive any information which the committee deemed important, and that the Government was taking the most active measures to prepare for whatever emergency might arise. A letter was also received from Captain Kerr, the secretary of the commission recently appointed, requesting that any information already furnished to the committee might be afforded to the commission, which was, of course, acceded to.—The Roman Catholic prelates have completed the business of their synod. The principal subject which engaged their attention was the Academical Education Act. The following is a transcript of the proceedings on this question, and also in reference to a State provision for the Catholic clergy. Upon this subject, the prelates unanimously declare that their opinions, often before promulgated, are 'unchanged and unchangeable':—"The Most Rev. Dr. Crolly in the chair. Moved by the Most Rev. Dr. MacHale, and seconded by the Right Rev. Dr. M'Nally:—

"Resolved—That the Archbishops and Bishops of Ireland having resolved that the measure of Academic Education proposed by the Government was dangerous to faith and morals, while the securities which they required for the removal of those dangers were refused by the Government and the legislature, we, as guardians of the faith in Ireland, and anxious to preserve the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace, lay before the Holy Father our former resolutions, and his application to the Act in its present form, together with the grounds on which those resolutions were founded, in order that we may also receive the decision of his Holiness, and recognise the voice of Peter in the person of his successor."

"DISSENTIENT,—Because we consider that the following resolution, proposed and supported by us, is a more accurate statement of the case, and more respectful to the Holy See. Resolved—That the Bill for Academical Education in Ireland, proposed by the British Government, together with the memorial of the assembled prelates in May last, and the Bill in its amended form be submitted to the Holy See for its consideration and decision.—✠ W. CROLLY, ✠ D. MURRAY, ✠ J. RYAN, ✠ P. M'GETTIGAN, ✠ J. BROWNE (Kilmore), ✠ C. DENVIR."

"Proposed by Right Rev. Dr. Kinsella, and seconded by the Most Rev. Dr. Crolly:—

"Resolved unanimously, that our resolutions, adopted at different periods, condemning a state provision for our clergy, be now republished, in order to inform our people that our opinions on the subject are unchanged and unchangeable. ✠ Most Rev. M. SLATTERY, Chairman; ✠ Right Rev. V. L. O'DONNELL, Secretary."

"Resolved on the 10th November, 1841, his Grace the Most Rev. Dr. MacHale in the chair. Moved by his Grace the Most Rev. Dr. Crolly, and seconded by the Right Rev. Dr. Foran:—

"Resolved Unanimously—That his Grace the Most Rev. Dr. Murray, be requested to call a special general meeting of the prelates of all Ireland, in case that he shall have clear proof or well-grounded apprehensions that the odious and alarming scheme of a state provision for the Catholic clergy of this portion of the empire shall be contemplated by the Government before our next general meeting.—✠ JOHN ARCHBISHOP OF TUAM, Chairman; ✠ THOMAS FEENEY, Secretary."

"Resolved—That alarmed at the report that an attempt is likely to be made during the approaching session of Parliament to make a state provision for the Roman Catholic clergy of Ireland, we deem it our imperative duty not to separate without recording the expression of our strongest reprobation of any such attempt, and of our unalterable determination to resist by every means in our power a measure so fraught with mischief to the independence and purity of the Catholic religion in Ireland.—✠ D. MURRAY, Chairman; ✠ P. KENNEDY, Secretary."

Moved by his Grace the Most Rev. Dr. Murray, and seconded by his Grace the Most Rev. Dr. Slattery:—

"Unanimously resolved—That the resolutions of January, 1837, and of November, 1841, be now re-published, in order to make known to our faithful clergy and people, and to all others concerned, that our firm determination on this subject remains unchanged, and that we unanimously pledge ourselves to resist by every influence we possess, every attempt that may be made to make any state provision for the Catholic clergy, in whatever shape or form it may be offered. ✠ JOHN, ARCHBISHOP OF TUAM, Chairman; ✠ JOHN MADDEN, Secretary."

It appears from these resolutions that the prelates are unanimously opposed to a state provision for the Catholic clergy, and that Archbishop Crolly's party, in favour of giving a fair trial to the new colleges, has been reinforced by the accession of Dr. M'Gettigan, who has been heretofore ranked among the opponents of the Colleges Bill.—It is stated that Mr. Berwick, nephew of Grattan, and a Protestant, has been appointed Vice-President of the Galway College. Lord John Beresford, the Primate of the Established Church in Ireland, it was long since announced, had resolved upon devoting 1000*l.* for establishing a chair in the Ulster College; and it is now announced that his Grace has further declared his intention of contributing an equal sum for the same purpose to the colleges for Cork and Galway.—The board of Maynooth College recently made an application to Sir R. Peel, stating that the sum of 30,000*l.* allocated for repairing the old and erecting new buildings, would fall far short of the requisite amount, as appeared by the plans and estimates of Mr. Pugin, and it was submitted for the consideration of Government, whether, under such circumstances, an increase of the building fund should not be made. The reply of the Treasury was read at a meeting of the board on Friday last, peremptorily refusing any increase whatever. Already upwards of 2000*l.* have been expended by the board of works in the repairs of the old college buildings, and much remains to be done, independently of the new buildings.—The Dublin papers mention, as a munificent act of the Earl of Devon, that one of the noble earl's under-agents has returned from Liverpool, having purchased 2000*l.* worth of rice for distribution amongst his tenantry on his estates in Ireland.—At the present time, when English capital is so largely employed in carrying out railway projects in Ireland, and in thus affording seasonable employment to her people, the Nation newspaper, the favourite organ of the Repealers, has an article on the subject which has excited both attention and surprise among all parties. It seems that an English journal, writing of the state of affairs in Ireland, said that the law would be vindicated in Ireland, and that sedition would be crushed. It spoke also of the easy access of troops to different parts of Ireland by means of railways from Dublin, where there is generally a strong garrison. Commenting upon this, the Nation, after some remarks on "the brutal threats of the enemy's thirsty bloodhounds," arrives at the following observations upon the conveyance of troops by railway:

"For actual measures of coercion, all Ireland laughs at that coward threat. The military uses (or abuses) of railways are tolerably well understood, but it might be useful to promulgate through the country, to be read by all repeal wardens in their parishes, a few short and easy rules as to the mode of dealing with railways in case of any enemy daring to make a hostile use of them. The bold Hollanders once prevented their country from being overrun by French armies by laying it under water—they opened the embankments and admitted the sea, and in one day those fertile plains, with all their waving corn, were a portion of the stormy German Ocean; and railways though inconceivably valuable to any people, as highways of commerce, yet were better dispensed with for a time than allowed to become a means of transport for invading armies. A hint on this subject may be thought enough; but we see no objection to speaking plainly: and therefore we give a few practical views which may be improved as engineers turn their attention to the subject.—First then, every railway within five miles of Dublin could in one night be totally cut off from the interior country. To lift a mile of rail, to fill a perch or two of any cutting or tunnel, to break down a piece of embankment, is so obvious and easy enough.—Second. The materials of railways, good hammered iron and wooden sleepers, and we point out that such things may be of use in other times than existing hostilities. Third. Trains go either much by rail or by common roads with waggon wheels. Before, with the Irish, could hardly desire a deadlier ambush than the banks of a deep cutting upon a railway. Imagine a few hundred men lying in wait upon such a spot, with masses of rock and trunks of trees ready to roll down, and a train or two advancing with a regiment of infantry, and the engine pausing nearer and nearer, till the polished studs of brass on its front are distinguishable, and its name may nearly be read. 'Now in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost!—now ——.' 'But 'tis a dream. No enemy will dare put us to realise these scenes. Yet let all understand what a railway may and what it may not do."

The only failures of extensive firms that have taken place in Dublin for a considerable time, took place a few days since, the firms of Messrs. Williams and Sons, and of Messrs. Labertouche and Co., notaries and share-brokers, having stopped payment. It appears that the difficulties of Messrs. Williams are by no means as formidable as they were supposed to be, and that time only is required by the firm to meet their engagements, all of which will be discharged in full. The amount of their liabilities is something above 100,000*l.* and the available assets are believed to exceed 130,000*l.*—The following appears in the Evening Post:—"Mullingar, Nov. 19.—An outrage of a very daring character was perpetrated within three miles of this town last night. About half-past 11, Sir Francis Hopkins, Bart., of Rochford, was returning home, after dining with his neighbour, Colonel Caulfield, of Bloomfield, and, having descended from his phaeton, was in the act of knocking at his hall-door, when a shot was fired at him, and several slugs grazed his temple and forehead, the remainder of the charge, consisting of a ball and upwards of a dozen slugs, lodging in the door. Sir Francis immediately, he states, rushed at two men whom he perceived at a little distance, one having a gun the other a pistol, both of whom, after inflicting several severe blows on Sir Francis, succeeded in knocking him down and effecting a retreat, leaving behind a hat and coat which they lost in the struggle. This day, a man named Seery, living at Dysart, several miles from Rochfort, and some time since ejected from the estate, was arrested on suspicion by order of Sir Francis, and, we understand, the affair will be immediately investigated by the magistrates. Sir Francis, we are happy to learn, has sustained no serious injury. As to the motives for this attack, various rumours are afloat, which it would be premature to notice at present. Sir Francis purchased, about eight years ago, his present magnificent seat, formerly the residence of the Rochfort family, having previously lived near Athboy, county Meath. He is a young man, and has taken an active part in the Agricultural Society of this county."—A canal boat, on the Royal Canal, capsized on Tuesday, near Clonsilla, seven miles from Dublin, and several persons perished. By the last accounts no less than 17 dead bodies had been found.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday, Capt. Seaver in the chair. Mr. O'CONNELL commenced the proceedings by introducing his friend, Counsellor M'Carthy, the new candidate for the city of Cork, and the intended successor of Mr. Serjeant Murphy.—Mr. M'CARTHY then came forward, and made the necessary declaration as a staunch and uncompromising Repealer.—Mr. O'CONNELL remarked that on the last meeting he adverted to some hand-bills, purporting to be printed in London, which were circulated through Dublin, instigating the assassination of the landlords. Two of the placards had been posted that morning on the doors of Conciliation-hall. He had sent these documents to the police commissioners, but he apprehended they would take no notice of it, and he might almost be inclined to say that the "detectives" were getting up a conspiracy against the Repeal Association. He trusted that no exertion would be spared to bring the villain to justice who concocted and circulated these atrocious placards.—Capt. FREDERICK brought forward his proposition for the sitting of a committee of Parliament in Ireland upon all Irish Railway Bills. At any other time, he said, he would have little hope of effecting anything by his present motion; but now, when a famine was impending, an enquiry, he thought, might be obtained for it. There was a sum of 800*l.*, on the average, spent in London on each Railway Bill, which, if there were a parliamentary committee sitting in Dublin might be spent in Ireland. He would, therefore, move to have the matter referred to a committee of the association.—Mr. S. O'BRIEN seconded the resolution, and said that the Conservatives were friendly to the proposition of having the Irish railway business transacted in Ireland. If the English members refused to come to this country for the purpose, he would say they had members enough of their own, and he felt justified in saying that the Tory representatives would co-operate with them.—Mr. O'CONNELL supported the motion, and showed that the interests of the bar of Ireland were identified with the repeal of the union. If his anticipations were well founded, he would say that it was contemplated to remove the entire law business of this country to England.—Mr. O'CONNELL next said that he was on his trial. The Times newspaper had hired a fellow to go about the country "lying." He (Mr. O'Connell) was for 50 years one of the best-abused men, but he thought that if there was any one point on which he could hope to escape blame, it was his conduct as a landlord. He would read the character which this gutter-commissioner had given of the Irish people. (Here he read a passage from one of the reports referred to.) He was disgusted at such mendacity. As to himself he cared nothing for the scurrility of a scoundrel. As to Cahirciveen it was false that it was unpayed, and indeed every word uttered concerning it by the Times' Commissioner was untrue. Cahirciveen was his own town: he was no middleman with respect to it; it was his own, and had 1,200 inhabitants. It was a most thriving, prosperous town, and had an excellent manse, glebe, and schoolhouse, all founded by himself. There was also a fever hospital and a dispensary, of which he (Mr. O'Connell) was the chief supporter, also a convent endowed by him with 60*l.* a year in perpetuity. He was 4000*l.* out of pocket by that town, and he thanked God for it. He next referred to evidence given before the landlord and tenant commission, to show that he was not a "middleman," in the proper sense of the word, with regard to Cahirciveen. As to there not being a "pane of glass in the parish," he treated the assertion as an enormous fiction. He and his family held under the College of Dublin since 1788, and though the leases were but for 21 years, yet they were regularly renewed every second year, and were in the nature of a perpetuity. By far the major part of his property was fee simple, and not intermediate, as alleged by the "gutter-commissioner;" not a thirteenth part of his property was of this kind. He quoted largely from his own evidence given before the land commissioners, to show his generous character as a landholder. His estates, in fact, had been a sort of refugium pauperum; for it had been long his practice to give allotments at a nominal rent to the ejected tenants of other landlords. In conclusion, he expressed his contempt for the "commissioner" and his employer.—Mr. J. A. O'Neill defended the Mansion-house Committee from the aspersion cast upon it by the government press. —Mr. O'Connell moved the erasure of the name of the Rev. J. O'Malley from the roll of Repealers, in consequence of that gentleman having stated that he was not a member of the association, and then reiterated the many reasons which justified the association in rejecting the Colleges Bill. He conjured the people not to resort to violence in case the contemplated famine should occur, as a y such conduct would only redound to their own suffering. At the termination of the proceedings, the rent for the week was announced to be 158*l.* 2*s.* 9*d.*

Law.

Court of Queen's Bench.—(Sittings in Banco.)—The Queen v. Henry Needham Scrope Shrapnell.—In this case the defendant had pleaded guilty to four informations, filed at the instance of the directors of the East India Company, against him under the 49th George III., for having written letters to divers persons—Sir H. Willock, General Robertson, and others, having, as directors, patronage of offices in India—to obtain from them some situation in the Indian Government, by means of promising to the said persons certain rewards for exercising their influence in his favour. There had also been letters written to the wives of the directors in question, offering them to pay certain sums of money when the defendant should obtain an appointment through the influence or act of their husbands. The defendant was now brought up for judgment, and put in affidavits to the effect, that at the time the letters were written he was labouring under acute mental distress and excitement, arising from the loss of his father, and the derangement of his affairs by the dishonesty of other parties from whom he had incurred liabilities; that while he was in this state he was induced, in the desperate hope of retrieving his affairs, to write those letters to the ladies mentioned in the informations, but when he did so he was not aware that he was committing any indictable offence, the parties written to not having in themselves any power of appointment; that he had no idea that the purchase of a cadetship was an offence within the statute; that in writing these letters his object was not to obtain the cadetship from any person not qualified, but to procure an introduction to the directors, to whom his claims and qualifications might be submitted. The Attorney and Solicitor Generals and Mr. Pollock appeared for the prosecution. The Attorney-General said it was not the wish of the directors to press with severity upon the defendant, but they felt it had been their bounden duty to institute these informations against him. The directors had always desired to carry into effect the wishes of the Legislature, and to keep the employment of their patronage pure. The defendant expressed his deep contrition for what he had done, and, considering the open and undisguised manner in which he had proposed to give pecuniary consideration for the office he sought to obtain, it really did seem as if he must have been ignorant that he was infringing any law. Mr. Justice Williams pronounced sentence. He said that the offence of which the defendant acknowledged he had been guilty was one of a serious kind; but the excuse put in for him was that of ignorance, and the prosecutors had appeared unwilling to press on the defendant with any severity. Having taken all circumstances into consideration, not forgetting the defendant's distressed situation, the Court thought it necessary to pass a sentence of some severity, and therefore ordered that the defendant should be imprisoned for the space of four calendar months in the prison of this Court.

Sporting.

The late Qui Tam Actions.—The action commenced by Charles H. Russell against Mr. H. Hill to recover 40,000*l.* and 20,000*l.*, won on the turf, has been stopped on the payment of costs incurred, which were taxed at 10*l.* 4*s.* 10*d.* The same qui tam informer has since been captured and lodged in Whitecross-street gaol, for the costs of an action brought by him against Lord G. Bentinck, and tried at Guildford Assizes.

Miscellaneous.

Fortification of the Coast.—At the meeting of the French Academy of Sciences, on the 17th Nov., M. Charles Dupin read a long paper on the measures about to be adopted by the English Government for the protection of the coasts and the improvement of the harbours of Great Britain. After alluding to the special motives which have induced the commission of the Admiralty to make its various propositions to the Government, M. Dupin says—"It is in the first place proposed to make at Dover a port of refuge, completely closed in by two jetties, with two entrances, one to the east 150 ft. wide, the other to the south, 700 ft. wide. The English commission also proposes to protect Seaford by a breakwater or a jetty, one nautical mile in length, with anchorage over a surface of 300 acres, and to have at Portland a breakwater with an achorage surface of 480 acres. The formidable position of Seaford, giving shelter not merely to merchant vessels, but also to ships of the line, would menace all the French ports from Boulogne to Havre. The distances from the port of Seaford would be—Boulogne 52 miles; to the mouth of the Somme 60 miles; to Dieppe 60; to Fecamp 60, and to the Cape beyond Havre 72. This port by means of the London and Brighton railroad, and a short branch line, is not above two hours distant from the capital. The commission also proposes to apply to the three ports 4,250,000*l.*, viz., Dover, 2,500,000*l.*; Seaford, 1,250,000*l.*, and Portland, 500,000*l.* Far from being astonished at this estimate, we shall probably find it under the reality if we reflect that the jetties or breakwaters designated will form a total three times as long as our grand jetty at Cherbourg." M Dupin then quotes a portion of the report of the commission, and adds—"The general map to which the commissioners allude in their conclusions presents a series of distances which will certainly strike all attentive observers. They are as follow, according to their position from west to east. From Falmouth to Plymouth, the first centre of protection and aggression, 38 miles; from Plymouth to Guernsey, 78; from Plymouth to Dartmouth, 30; from Dartmouth to Portland, the second important centre of protection and aggression, 45; from Portland to Guernsey, 60; Portland to Alderney, which is only 20 miles from Cherbourg, 48; Portland to Portsmouth, 60; from Portsmouth to Alderney, the third centre of protection and aggression, 87; Portsmouth to Seaford, the fourth centre of protection and aggression, 58; from Seaford (doubling Beachy Head) to Dover, the fifth centre of protection and aggression, 51; from Dover (by the Thames) to the Nore, opposite the arsenal of Sheerness, the sixth centre of protection and aggression, 50 miles; and from Dover to Harwich, the seventh centre of protection and aggression, 55 miles. It will be seen how much the centres of protection and aggression are multiplied as the coast of England becomes nearer to that of France. From Portsmouth to the Port of Harwich, an extent of only 164 miles, it is proposed to lay out 3,850,000*l.* in works. There will be five grand centres of protection, capable of receiving five naval armies, and of serving as points of departure for five powerful expeditions of steamers, the most distant of which could reach the coast of France in seven hours, and the nearest in an hour and a half. The ensemble of the works will exercise an influence—not to say an empire—over 150 leagues of our coast, from Dunkirk to the bay of St. Malo. Over this vast development of coast France possesses only one centre of protection—Cherbourg. In the fine reign of Louis XIV., an illustrious member of the Academy of Sciences, and a great citizen, Marshal Vauban, gave us at Mardyk, near Dunkirk, a first centre of protection, which was destroyed, not by the war, but by the peace, by the signature of a shameful treaty, which characterised the decadency of Louis XV. I should esteem myself the most fortunate of men, if I could hope that this statement will not be without its influence; and that, following the example of a great reign, and stimulated by the indefatigable activity of our rivals, we shall occupy ourselves zealously with the means of giving sufficient centres of protection for our merchant vessels, and on maritime towns from Dunkirk to Cherbourg. This is a vital question, as well for commerce as for the security of the country."

Cultivation of Assam Tea.—The Calcutta Gazette has published the Act of Incorporation, enacted on the 30th of August, of the Assam Company, for the cultivation, on an extensive scale, of the genuine tea-plant in the British province of Assam, and the other north-eastern parts of India, in which there are many and large districts in all respects adapted to that culture. The capital of the company is to be 50 lacs in 10,000 shares of 500 rupees each; the whole of which has been subscribed for, and 20 lacs already paid up. Several subscribers being willing at their own expense to carry on the said culture, and the manufacture of that plant, and also of other plants which thrive in that soil, it has been thought proper to incorporate a company for the said purposes, to be called the Assam Company, with a common seal, which is to be entitled to sue and to be sued. The company is allowed to cultivate, manufacture, and prepare all other articles the produce of those provinces, except opium, coffee, and sugar. They are allowed to increase their capital to a crore of rupees, and restricted to borrow any money more than one-fifth of their capital. No individual subscriber to have any mastery or ownership in the company, which is to be carried on as a whole, and to have the right of making by-laws for their own government and guidance. There are other provisions for voting, arranging accounts, &c. The act is to be in force until the 30th of April, 1845. —Bombay Gentleman's Gazette.

BIRTHS—On the 10th inst., at Wirksworth, the wife of the Rev. Nathan Hubbersty, M.A., of a daughter—15th inst., at Welton-le-Marsh, the lady of the Rev. R. Parker, of a daughter —16th inst., at Sheerness, Kent, the lady of Major J. F. G. Campbell, 91st Regiment, of a daughter—17th inst., in the Close, Salisbury, the wife of the Rev. W. K. Hamilton, of a daughter—19th inst., at Thicket-priory, Yorkshire, the lady of the Rev. Joseph Dunnington Jefferson, of a son—21st inst., at Upper Park-place, Blackheath-park, Mrs. John Melhuish, of a daughter—21st inst., at Dosthill-lodge, Fazeley, Staffordshire, the lady of John S. R. Shuttleworth, Esq., of Hathersage-hall, Derbyshire, of a son—21st inst., at 42, Clarges-street, Mrs. Robert Phillimore, of a son—21st inst., the lady of William Wake, Esq., of Bugle-street, Southampton, of a son and heir—21st inst., at 25, Cambridge-terrace, Hyde-park, the lady of Herbert Owen, Esq., barrister-at-law, of a son—21st inst., Mrs. Rowland Neate, of 10, Tavistock-square, of a daughter—22d inst., in Piccadilly, the lady of Baron Lionel de Rothschild, of a son—25th inst., Mrs. Charles Rivington, Queen-square, of a daughter—25th inst., at Sussex-house, Hammersmith, the lady of Dr. Forbes Winslow, of a son—25th inst., the lady of Mr. James Capon, architect and surveyor, of Dyer's-buildings, Holborn, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES—On the 20th inst., at Plumstead Church, Robert Ramsay Pringle, Esq., Deputy Ordnance Storekeeper and Barrack-master at Enniskillen, to Harriette, third daughter of Joseph Cheetham, Esq., Ordnance Storekeeper, Royal Arsenal, Woolwich—22d inst., at James's Church, Granville H. Vernon, Esq., M.P., to Pyne Jesse Cotterell, daughter of the Hon. Green Trevor—22d inst., at St. Mary's, Lambeth, Conway Weston Hart, Esq., of Rochester, to Julia, daughter of the late Charles Thomas Buncombe, Esq., of the Ordnance Department, Tower—25th inst., at Nottingham, Sir Charles Fellows, of Russell-square, London, to Eliza, only daughter of Francis Hart, Esq., of Nottingham—25th inst., at St. George's, Hanover-square, T. Willis Heming, Esq., of Binstead, Commodore of the Ryde Royal Victoria Yacht Squadron, to Caroline, only daughter of J. Hunter, Esq., of Abele Grove, Epsom—25th inst., at Trinity Church, Islington, Josiah Greene, Esq., of Lynn, Norfolk, to Mary, youngest daughter of the late John Parker, Esq., of Chessington, Surrey.

DEATHS—On the 23d of Aug. last, off the north-east coast of Borneo, Augustus Henry Clayton East, R.N., acting mate on board Her Majesty's ship Agincourt, second son of Sir East Clayton East, of Hallplace, Berks, Bart., aged 21—25th of September, at Calcutta, Frederick Stainforth, Esq., of the Bengal Civil Service, grandson of the late Sir Francis Baring, Bart.—15th inst., at Florence, the Dowager Lady Bowyer, widow of Admiral Sir George Bowyer, Bart.—18th inst., at his residence, the Parade, Poole, Samuel Salter, Esq., aged 64—18th inst., William Lawson, Esq., of Bellevue-house, Camberwell-grove, late Ordnance Storekeeper at Cape-town, Cape of Good Hope—19th inst., at Braunstone Rectory, Sarah, widow of the late Nicholas Pearse, Esq., of Debden, Loughton, Essex, aged 78—19th inst., at Brighton, Williamson, Esq., M.D., of Stretton-hall, Cheshire, for many years physician in Leeds, and one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for that borough, and for the West Riding of Yorkshire—20th inst., William Tyler, Esq., of Wetherby square, Kensington—20th inst., John Parke, Esq., formerly Her Majesty's Consul for the Roman States, aged 70—21st inst., at Tor, Devon, Elizabeth Gurney, second daughter of Charles Barclay, Esq., of Lombard-street, Banker—20th inst., at 3, Goulden-terrace, Islington, of scarlet fever, John Pine Lawson, son of John Lawson, Esq., of Shooter's-hill, Kent, and grandson of the late Sir John Pinhorn, of the Isle of Wight—21st inst., John George Hamilton Bourne, Esq., late Chief Justice of Newfoundland, aged 42—21st inst., aged 49, Henry Willoughby Legard, Esq., only brother of Sir Thomas Digby Legard, Bart., of Ganton, in the county of York—23d inst., at Bloomsbury Rectory, Wilbraham Edward, infant son of the Hon. and Rev. Montagu Villiers.

CURES OF FEARFUL ULCEROUS SORES IN MALTA, BY HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—Mrs. Duncan, whose husband is employed in Her Majesty's Dockyard, at Malta, suffered for more than two years from Ulcerous Sores in her feet. She formerly resided at Corfu, and was treated by the best practitioners there, from whom, however, she derived no benefit whatever; when only, after using five or six boxes and pots of Holloway's Pills and Ointment, a perfect cure was effected. The truth of this statement is notorious in Malta, that the editor of the Malta Mail Newspaper was induced to insert the particulars of the case in his paper of October 31st, 1845. Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's Establishment, 244, Strand, London.

PATENT PORTABLE SUSPENSION STOVES of which more than Four Thousand were sold last winter, are admirably adapted for Greenhouses and Conservatories, their principle of Ventilation effectually carrying off all those gases which are injurious to plants. Prospectuses may be obtained, and the Stoves seen in operation, at Grace & John Deane's, opening to the Monument, 46, King William-street, London-bridge.

HEAL AND SONS LIST OF BEDDING containing a full description of Weights, Sizes, and Prices, by which purchasers are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to make a good set of Bedding. Sent free by post, on application to their Establishment, the largest in London exclusively for the manufacture and sale of Bedding (no bedsteads or other furniture being kept).—Heal and Son, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, opposite the Chapel, Tottenham-court-road.

PHOSPHORIC RAT POISON.—This preparation is offered to the Public with the greatest confidence, being decidedly superior to all those poisons containing arsenic and other minerals. It is most greedily eaten by rats and mice as long as it is offered to them and invariably proves certain destruction. Prepared only by Edward Purser, 40, New Bridge-street, London. Sold in pots, with full directions for use, at 4*s.*, 8*s.*, and 20*s.* each.

WANTED by Whitley and Osborn, of Fulham, a PROPAGATOR and PLANT FOREMAN.—Apply by letter only. N.B.—None need apply whose character for sobriety, diligence, and ability, will not bear the strictest investigation.

WANTED, a young Man, who has had some experience as GARDENER, to live in the house, and make himself generally useful.—Applications, stating the age and qualifications of the party, with name of last employer, and wages required, to be addressed to J. P., Advertiser and Chronicle Office, Manchester.

WANTED a SHOPMAN in the Seed and Nursery Business. A person upwards of 30 years of age would be preferred.—Apply to Mr. Forrest, Kensington.

WANTED, a SHOPMAN, in a wholesale and retail Seed Establishment in the Country, who will also have to assist in the Warehouse.—Direct, with reference, salary, &c., to A. B., Gardeners' Chronicle Office.

GROUND FOREMAN WANTED IN THE EXETER NURSERY. LUCOMBE, PINCE, and Co., are in want of an active intelligent Man, who is thoroughly acquainted with the propagation and culture of Fruit Trees, Forest Trees, Ornamental Trees and Shrubs; as well as the general management of an extensive Nursery in this department. He must possess strict habits of business, and an excellent moral character. A liberal salary will be given, and as the situation is necessarily permanent, and one of great trust, none need apply whose qualifications are not perfectly in accordance with the above description.—Exeter Nursery, Devonshire.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 38, who thoroughly understands his business in all its branches, including Orchidaceæ. Can have a good character from his last situation. A retired situation in the country would be preferred. —Direct to A. B., at Mr. Neal's, Nurseryman, Wandsworth, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 30, of industrious habits; has a thorough knowledge of Horticulture in all its branches; is conversant with Accounts and Garden Architecture; has had extensive practice in the Conservation, Propagation, and Forcing of Plants; has particularly excelled in Grape culture in pots, as well as rafters, is thoroughly acquainted with Hamilton's System of Pine-growing, and has three years' excellent character.—Direct to W. P., Royal Gardens, Kew.

TO GENTLEMEN AND LANDSCAPE GARDENERS. AS SUPERINTENDENT in laying out Gardens, Pleasure-grounds, Parks, &c., according to a given plan, by a person aged 32, who has had considerable experience both in England and Scotland. He is also thoroughly acquainted with the cultivation of Flowers and Fruit on the most improved systems. A satisfactory reference can be given.—Direct to R.S., Post-office, Brentford, Middlesex.

AS UNDER GARDENER.—A respectable young Man, 19 years of age, wishes for a situation where he would be able to improve himself.—Direct to G.C., Post-office, Harlow, Essex.

AS FARM BAILIFF.—A native of Scotland, who is thoroughly acquainted with the best modes of Agriculture, Draining, and Improving of Land, Subsoiling, Breeding and Management of Stock, Buying and Selling, Planting, &c.; can produce satisfactory references as to general character and ability.—Direct care of Messrs. J. and C. Whalley, Seedsmen, 12, St. George's-crescent, Liverpool.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1845.

SCOTTISH WIDOWS' FUND AND LIFE ASSURANCE.

Capital accumulated and invested upwards of £1,590,000; Annual Revenue upwards of £235,000. The amount of capital sums insured since the commencement of the Society is upwards of £7,000,000 sterling. The next periodical investigation takes place on 31st December, 1845.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Parties are particularly reminded of the important benefits to be secured by entry before the close of this year, both as regards the advantage of a full year's standing with reference to the profits of the current year, as well as that of coming within the present period of investigation.

Forms of Proposals, and every necessary information may be obtained at the head office, 5, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh; or at any of the Society's agencies.

JOHN MACKENZIE, Manager.
WM. GEORGE, Chief Clerk.
LONDON-OFFICE, 7, PALL-MALL. HUGH M'KEAN, Agent.

ECONOMIC LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 6, NEW BRIDGE STREET, BLACKFRIARS, LONDON.
ESTABLISHED 1823.
Empowered by Act of Parliament, 3 William IV.
The Right Hon. Thomas Frankland Lewis, Chairman.
Henry Frederick Stephenson, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

The following are among the advantages offered by this Society:—

LOWER RATES of Premium than those of any other Office, which entitle the assured to participate in the profits, and considerably lower than those of any other Mutual Assurance Society.

No PROPRIETARY participate in the profits, the WHOLE being divisible among the Assured.

The first Bonus, in 1834, averaged 16*l.* per cent. on the Premiums paid.

The second Bonus, in 1839, averaged 31*l.* per cent. since the first division.

The third Bonus, in 1844, averaged 36*l.* per cent. since the second division.

Prospectuses and full particulars may be obtained on application to the Secretary, CAMPBELL JAMES DOWNER.

METROPOLITAN SEWAGE MANURE COMPANY.

The Plans, Sections, and Books of Reference, in accordance with the standing Orders, have been deposited, and the proper Notices given, so that the Company is now prepared to go to Parliament in the ensuing session for an Act of Incorporation.

An early allotment of Shares will be made.

Applications to be addressed to the Provisional Committee of the Metropolitan Sewage Manure Company, at No. 5, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

SILVER TEA-SERVICES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, MANUFACTURING SILVERSMITHS, 14, CORNHILL, London, opposite the Bank of England, submit the prices of the following SILVER TEA and COFFEE SERVICES. The Cottage Pattern is plain, standing on shell feet, the Tea and Coffee-pot with a flower ornament on the lids. The King's Pattern is richly embossed with flowers and scrolls. The shape of either is new and elegant.

Cottage Pattern.				King's Pattern.
Strong Silver Teapot	£12	0	0	Strong Silver Teapot	£12	0	0
Ditto Sugar Basin .	6	16	0	Ditto Sugar Basin .	7	10	0
Ditto Milk Ewer ..	4	10	0	Ditto Cream Ewer .	5	10	0
Ditto Coffee-pot ..	15	0	0	Ditto Coffee-pot ..	15	0	0
Complete ..	£38	6	0	Complete ..	£40	0	0

A variety of upwards of 50 Tea and Coffee Services may be seen in the show-rooms, where may be selected every article of Silver requisite for the sideboard or plate-chest. Pamphlets of prices, illustrated with sketches of the various articles, gratis, and forwarded, postage free, to all parts of the kingdom.

A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank of England.

NUNN'S VEGETABLE OIL, 4*s.* 6*d.* per imperial gallon, gives a clear and brilliant light in every description of lamp, without smell or smoke, does not corrode the lamps, and they confidently recommend it to the public as being the most cleanly as well as the most economical oil now in use. Finest sperm oil 7*s.* 6*d.*, and solar oil 3*s.* 3*d.* per imperial gallon; best yellow soap 54*s.*, best mottled ditto 60*s.*, per 112 lb.

NUNN'S VICTORIA COMPOSITE CANDLES, 10*s.*; NUNN'S Victoria Wax Candles, 11*s.* 6*d.*; also their genuine Margarine Wax Lights, 16*s.*; also their patent plaited wick Sperm Candles, 20*s.* per dozen lb. THOMAS NUNN and SONS (34 years purveyors to the Hon. Society of Lincoln's-inn), 19, Great James-street, Bedford-row.

News of the Week.

CABINET COUNCILS were held on Tuesday and on Thursday at the Foreign Office, and were attended by all the Ministers, with the exception of the Lord Chancellor, who is still absent from indisposition. Nothing official has transpired on the result of their deliberations; but the Times of Thursday startled the public by the announcement that Ministers had resolved to call Parliament together in the course of a month, with the view of proposing the total repeal of the Corn-laws. The Times added, that this decision was almost unanimous, and led its readers to infer that the Duke of Wellington had given way. The following is an extract from this article:—

"The decision of the Cabinet is no longer a secret. Parliament, it is confidently reported, is to be summoned for the first week in January; and the Royal Speech will, it is added, recommend an immediate consideration of the Corn-laws, preparatory to their total repeal. Sir Robert Peel in one house, and the Duke of Wellington in the other, will, we are told, be prepared to give immediate effect to the recommendation thus conveyed. It is understood that until Parliament meets nothing is to be done. For the Legislature will be reserved the responsibility and the glory of opening the ports. We presume that none will quarrel with this brief appearance of delay, now that the resolution of the Cabinet is known. The moral certainty of an early opening will be equivalent in its operation to an immediate order in Council. It is enough for the merchant and the capitalist to know that by the end of January at the latest, the produce of all countries will enter the British market on an absolute equality with our own, excepting only those disadvantages which nature itself has made, and which man cannot entirely remove. Any unnecessary appearance of haste would only create alarm, and might thus defeat, for a time at least, the very object of the measure. Happily there is no occasion for haste, even if haste were not almost certain to interfere with speed. It is said that the decision has been made with that unanimity which perhaps the compulsion of circumstances alone can inspire. The reported exceptions are both insignificant and doubtful, and not of a sort to interfere with the construction of the Cabinet."

The Morning Chronicle of yesterday contained the following paragraph on the subject, confirming this important announcement:—

"A variety of rumours have been current in political circles with respect to the movements and intentions of the Ministry. It is confidently said that at the Cabinet Council on Tuesday, Sir Robert Peel intimated that if his colleagues refused to support a proposition for the total and immediate repeal of the Corn-laws, he should feel it necessary to resign office. This intimation is said to have overcome the opposition of the Duke of Wellington, who, at length, gave his reluctant assent to the Premier's proposition. It is said that the resolution of the majority of the Cabinet is likely to lead to the resignation of at least three of its members—Lords Wharncliffe, Stanley, and Ripon. The name of Lord Haddington has also been mentioned as one of the probable seceders. It has been remarked that the first intimation which Her Majesty will receive of the intentions of her Ministers will be through the columns of an Opposition newspaper."

The Standard however of last night asserts that "every one of the statements in the Times is false;" that Parliament will not "meet much, if at all, before the usual time of meeting;" and that "the Cabinet has come to no decision whatever upon the subject of the Corn-laws." Upon these statements says the Standard, "we stake the character of this journal."

The advices from New York received this week are much more pacific in their character than those which reached us by the previous packet. The vehemence with which the democratic journals had declared for the violent occupation of the Oregon in spite of treaties or negotiations, seems to have aroused the more moderate portion of the community to a true sense of their position, and the general feeling throughout the Union is now represented to be much more temperate. Some of the leading statesmen have declared themselves opposed both to war and violence, and even Mr. Polk's official organ has somewhat receded from the bold position it had assumed. Mr. Polk's Message at the opening of Congress is also expected to be modified by the strong expression of public opinion which has been called forth by the threat of war; and it is now said that although the President will again assert the positive claim of right to the whole territory, his language will be firm but not offensive, and will not preclude the adoption of an expedient compromise. Mr. Webster has also declared his views on the question in a remarkable speech, which has excited very great interest as coming from the leader of the Whig party. In this important speech that distinguished statesman pronounces the Oregon question as "a fair subject for negotiation, compromise, and amicable settlement," and expresses the utmost confidence that the adjustment can be made by wise and moderate measures, in a manner "perfectly consistent with the honour and with the rights of both countries." Mr. Webster's speech is likely to have great influence with his own party, but, unfortunately, that party is in direct opposition to the President, and is certain to be outnumbered in the House of Representatives, if not in the Senate. The President's message was to be delivered on Wednesday last, the 3rd inst., so that in about a fortnight we may expect to be in possession of this important document.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal family, continue at Osborne House, but the unfavourable weather during the week has prevented their enjoying their usual airings. Her Majesty will return to Windsor on Tuesday, and will hold a Privy Council on Thursday or Friday next, when the day for the meeting of Parliament will be agreed upon. The Countess Desart has succeeded Lady Portman as the lady in waiting. Colonel Buckley has succeeded Lord Charles Wellesley as Equerry in Waiting to the Queen, and Major-General Sir E. Bowater has succeeded Lieut-Colonel Wylde as Equerry in Waiting on Prince Albert. Among the new arrangements connected with the royal household, which have been for some time in contemplation, is the union, as far as the business details are involved, of the departments of the Lord Steward and Lord Chamberlain. It is understood that Colonel Bowles, the Master of the Household, will have the entire control over both departments during the absence of the Earl of Liverpool and Earl Delawarr from the presence of the Sovereign. By this arrangement the duties of their lordships in their official capacities will be considerably lessened. Mr. Saunders has retired from the office of General Inspector of the Royal Palaces, and has been succeeded by Mr. Roberts.—The Duchess of Kent and the Duke of Cambridge have left town for Witley Court, on a visit to the Queen Dowager.

THE GRAND DUKE CONSTANTINE OF RUSSIA.—His Imperial Highness, with the Russian line-of-battle ship and corvette, have not yet left Plymouth Sound, the wind having continued foul. On Tuesday, being the birthday of the Emperor of Russia, the Ingermanland, 80, and the Prince of Warsaw, 30, were dressed with colours, and fired a royal salute. The British ships, Queen, 110, bearing the flag of the Port Admiral, and the President, 50, bearing the flag of Rear Admiral Dacres, in Plymouth Sound, and the Caledonia, 120, flagship of Rear Admiral Pym, in Hamoaze, paid the same compliment to the Emperor.

The Experimental Squadron.—The experimental squadron of five line-of-battle ships, with the red ensign of the Lords of the Admiralty, under the command of Commodore Willis, returned to Plymouth Sound on Wednesday. In the Channel it was blowing a heavy gale from the westward, and the ships were under close-reefed topsails. These vessels, with the four line-of-battle ships already at anchor in the Sound, make a squadron of nine ships, and give a very imposing appearance to the harbour, where there are now no less than four Admirals' flags flying. The Daring, 10-gun brig, did not arrive with the rest of the experimental squadron.

The Church.—The Rev. Benjamin Harrison, one of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Chaplains, is to be the new Archdeacon of Maidstone, vacant by Archdeacon Lyall's promotion to the Deanery of Canterbury. By last night's Gazette the Rev. John Peel, of Wareeley, near Stourport, and brother to Sir R. Peel, is appointed Dean of Worcester, in the room of the Bishop of Rochester.

Legal Appointments.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Mr. Burge, Q.C., and formerly Attorney-General of Jamaica, to the Commissionership of Bankruptcy, vacant by the death of Mr. Boteler.

Enclosure Commission.—The Enclosure Commissioners have appointed John Job Rawlinson, Esq., barrister-at-law; John Parkinson, Esq.; and Nathan Wetherell, Robert Hart, and John Bell, Esqrs., barristers-at-law, Assistant-Commissioners under the act, and the Lords of the Treasury have consented to such appointments.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Paris papers are filled with despatches received by the Government from the Governor-General of Algeria. Marshal Bugeaud's despatch is dated the 9th November, and gives an account of his march in the mountains of the Matmatas, in search of the absconding tribes, and his successful endeavours to punish the mountaineers, who had taken part in the revolt. The official reports of the different commanding officers which accompany the Marshal's despatch are by no means so favourable. The news they contain appears to have disappointed all parties at home, and is considered by our Paris contemporaries, of every shade of opinion, as being anything but satisfactory, since it is beyond a doubt that the whole of the province of Oran and the neighbourhood is still in full insurrection, and that notwithstanding Marshal Bugeaud's boast of what he was to do, no results of any consequence have been hitherto obtained. Instead of drawing Abd-el-Kader beyond the precincts of Algeria, we find that, after the lapse of several weeks, and the arrival of the reinforcements from France, the natives continue in possession of a great portion of the country. Even those tribes which appear to submit cannot be depended upon, for in some instances the same tribes who one day solicited the mercy of the conquerors, were in the next openly resisting, and even cutting off the communication between the French divisions, and thus paralysing the movements of the army. The Débats announces the arrival of a Moorish Envoy, the Pasha of Tetuan, at Marseilles, on the 25th ult. It would seem, however, that his mission was not of a pressing character, for he proposed visiting Lyons, Besançon, Strasburg, and Metz, before proceeding to Paris.—The expedition against Madagascar has been decided upon, according to a paragraph published in almost all the papers. It is to consist of the frigates La Gloire, L'Armide, La Reine Blanche, La Belle Poule, and La Psyche. On the arrival of this force at Bourbon, Capt. Desfosses, the Commandant of the station there, is to assume the command of the expedition. The frigates will take in a number of marines, a quantity of additional artillery, and some companies of engineers.—Ibrahim Pasha arrived at Toulon, in the Nile steamer, on the morning of the 27th ult., and was received with all the honours due to his rank.—Prince and Princess Augustus of Coburg arrived on Tuesday week at St. Cloud in time to join in the celebration of the 36th anniversary of the marriage of the King and Queen of the French, which took place at Naples on the 25th Nov., 1809.—The Opposition papers contain a long story of a secret mission to Buenos Ayres, which M. Guizot had entrusted to Capt. Page, an officer of the French navy, unknown to Baron Deffaudis, the French plenipotentiary. The fact of the mission is not denied, but its secret character, and the details with which it is embellished, have received a positive contradiction from Capt. Page himself, and the Ministerial journal declares that "its principal object was to prevent, if possible, the necessity of England and France having recourse to arms against Buenos Ayres; it was a last resource left to the weak by the strong."—"A circular of the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, dated the 22d ult., invites," says the Moniteur, "the prefects to send him weekly the special returns of the most important corn markets in their department."—A letter from Rouen of the 29th ult. states that the corn market was so well supplied that purchasers could with difficulty be found for other kinds of merchandise. Considerable supplies of corn were shortly expected to arrive from Russia, which would tend to keep down the prices in the market. The accounts of the harvest from various points of the department were most favourable. Tranquillity has been perfectly restored at Dinan and the neighbourhood.—The local papers announce that the Consuls of Great Britain, Belgium, and Holland, residing at Nantes, had been consulted by their respective Governments concerning the state of provisions in the west of France, in order to ascertain how far they can rely upon supplies from that quarter.—The Oregon question still excites great attention in Paris. The Siècle observes that the difficulties created by the possession of Oregon have so much excited the passions of the parties interested that other nations ought to maintain the gravity of judges. It says—

"The faults of our Government, and the misfortune of circumstances, have condemned us to remain spectators of the gigantic development of the United States and Great Britain. The question of the Oregon is no longer a new question. America has recognised the rights of England to part of the disputed territory, and England in return acknowledges the rights of the United States. The entire globe has witnessed these reciprocal engagements. Neither of these two Powers have a right now to violate them. Let them negotiate therefore a treaty of partition, or let them refer the question to an arbitrator, for that nation of the two which would draw the sword in order to set at nought a diplomatic compromise which has endured more than half a century will, independent of the danger it may incur, incur the censure of all civilised nations."

The Ministerial Débats takes a very unfavourable view of the matter, and considers that in the event of Mr. Polk maintaining his assertion of last year, there will only remain the last argument of kings and people; that negotiation would be of no avail thereafter, and that no other arguments can be brought forward besides those which issue from the cannon's mouth. On the results, however, of such a war the Débats says—

"A war between America and England will be a calamity for the civilised world, and by degrees every maritime nation may be drawn in to take part in the conflict, in consequence of the vexatious interruptions which neutrals will not fail to meet with in the desperate struggle which will desolate the surface of the ocean. But for England and for America it will be such an overturning of interests that we cannot but think that, whatever the language of the President in his message may be, the cause of peace will not on that account be irretrievably lost. If war should break out, New York, New Orleans, and Boston would be closely blockaded, and their merchants ruined; but, at the same time, what injury would be inflicted on British commerce, which covers every sea, by American cruisers. What would become of Manchester, if a supply of American cotton failed it? and how would the south-western states of the Union, whose principal produce is cotton, be supported without that market? What a shock would it even be for the Constitution of the Union itself? We must, therefore, still hope that there will be found in America courageous orators, who from the tribune of the Congress, which is about to open, will make heard the accents of truth to the American people, and that their eyes will be opened. The English Cabinet, on its side, will understand that the immense interests of British manufactures demand that silence shall be imposed on the susceptibilities of national honour, and that even should President Polk be so blind as to pronounce the imprudent words that are talked of, it is to be hoped that peace will continue to spread over Great Britain and the United States the benefits with which it has loaded those two great nations, to the great advantage of all other countries."

The subjoined article on the late secessions from Oxford, is extracted from L'Epoque:—

"Monsignor Wiseman, bishop of Melipotamus, in partibus, and coadjutor to the apostolic vicar of the central district of England, has just addressed a letter to the bishops of France, in which he expresses the hopes which the feeling now manifested in England gives rise to. According to Monsignor Wiseman, the conversions to Catholicism on the other side of the Straits are not only becoming numerous and more brilliant, but the old prejudices are disappearing, and more people than ever are intent on the return to unity and anxious for it. The Catholics of England have learnt with gratitude the sympathy with which their continental brethren watch their progress; Monsignor Wiseman demands that the Catholics of France will continue to join in their prayers, and solicits of the Archbishop of Paris a grand manifestation in behalf of the English Church. The reply has not been long awaited; the Archbishop of Paris has addressed a letter to his clergy, wherein he urges the priests of his diocese, who may have due devotion, to offer up once at least the holy sacrifice, and all pious souls to take the communion once or several times for this pious purpose."

Spain.—Our accounts from Madrid are of the 22d inst. The re-elections of deputies generally were favourable to the Government. At Cadiz, Huelva, Almeria, and Valladolid, the Conservative candidates were at the head of the lists.—The Barcelona journals state that on the 20th the Captain-General of Catalonia had marched with a division from Gerona, in order to check another disturbance at Figueras, arising from the execution of the Conscription law.—The resignation of General Roncali, Captain-General of Valentia, was considered positive. It was said that he had been greatly affected by the late execution of the four soldiers and corporal implicated in the military revolt of the 3d, and sooner than sign other death warrants, he had determined to retire.

Germany.—Letters from the Rhine state that on the 19th ult. a riot took place at Mannheim, in consequence of the Government having dispersed, by military force, a meeting of 800 respectable citizens who had assembled to deliberate on various subjects, among which were the censorship of the press, the violation of the rights of the citizens by the police, &c. The interference of the military caused great excitement, but the meeting dispersed quietly, and sent a deputation to Carlsruhe to represent the matter to the Government. The Grand Duke, however, would not receive them, and the audience which they had of the chief officers of State seems not to have answered their expectations.—The splendid bridge which the city of Mannheim has just built over the Neckar has been opened in a manner which deserves to be imitated; it was crossed by 80 waggons loaded with provisions, wood for fuel, and turf, which were immediately distributed among the poor.—It is understood that ten German States have resolved to send deputies to the council to be held at Berlin. The Minister of Ecclesiastical Affairs is said to have sent to Czerski, Post, Bernard, and Sylvester, the four protesting Catholic clergymen, calling on them to agree to a united and special confession of faith, in which they may be recognised by the State.

Italy.—The city of Trent is preparing to celebrate with great pomp early next year the third centenary of the reunion of the Council of Trent. A special committee, charged with regulating the ceremonial of the commemoration has been appointed, and the Patriarch of Venice, the Cardinal Archbishop of Salzburg, the Prince Archbishop of Goritz, and a number of German Prelates have already promised to attend. The Pope on his side has granted a jubilee of six months on the occasion; the Bishop of Trent has caused the colossal crucifix, before which the fathers of the council signed the acts, and the chapel of the cathedral in which it is deposited, to be magnificently decorated, and the inhabitants have erected to the east of the church of Sta Maria Maggiore, where the council assembled, a monumental column surmounted with the statue of the Virgin "ever victorious over all heresies." The first stone was laid on the 26th October, and the monument is to be inaugurated on the 13th inst.—A letter from Genoa of the 20th November says—"Ibrahim Pasha has been within our walls since the 16th, and has been received with the greatest distinction by King Charles Albert. Upon the evening of his arrival the Egyptian Prince attended a ball given by the Marquis of Brignoli-Sales, Sardinian Ambassador at Paris. His entrance produced a lively sensation, and the curiosity to see the conqueror of Koniah and Nezib was so great, that the dance was for a moment stopped. Ibrahim Pasha is of short stature, and very stout, his beard, which is light-coloured, he wears long down to his chest; his face, notwithstanding its being marked with the small-pox, is noble and imposing; his eye, fiery and penetrating, announces a man of command and resolution. His dress is simple and unostentatious. He wears an Egyptian vest of brown, and a cashmere shawl around his waist. Ibrahim will shortly go to the waters of Vernet, in the Pyrenees; and it is also thought that he will ultimately go to Paris."—Letters from Rome state that the Emperor of Russia was to arrive at Naples on the 28th ult., and at Rome in the early part of this month. A rumour was current that something more important than to obtain from the Holy See a dispensation in favour of the marriage of the Grand Duchess Olga, is the object of the proposed visit of the Emperor to Rome, his desire being to discuss with the Pope the great difference between the doctrine of the Roman and Greek Catholic churches respecting the third person of the Trinity, with a view to the reunion of those churches.

India and China.—An Extraordinary Express, in anticipation of the Overland Mail from India, reached town yesterday. The dates are—Bombay, Nov. 1; Calcutta, Oct. 22d; and China, Sept 30th. The news is not important. The state of affairs in the Punjaub had not improved. The Government had been conducted by the Ranee, or Queen Mother, assisted by Lalla Singh, the Commander of the Forces, Ghoolab Singh not having signified his assent to the arrangement which was to precede his elevation to the Vizeership. Meanwhile he continued to reside in his mountain fort of Jumoo. The feast of the Dusserah, during which disturbances had been expected, had passed over more quietly than could have been anticipated. It is a curious fact illustrative of the weakness of the present Government of Lahore, that no steps had been taken to punish the murderers of Jowahir Singh. The belief that Peshorah Singh had fallen a victim to the intrigues of Jowahir Singh had gained ground, but the rumour of his assassination had not been confirmed. The Governor General arrived at Agra on the 16th October, four days before he was expected, having travelled with unexampled speed from Calcutta. He was expected to leave that station for Delhi, where he had appointed the Commander in Chief to meet him on the 28th. The utmost secresy has been observed as to the ultimate intentions of the Government with regard to Lahore. Looking, however, at the great preparations which have been made, it is far from improbable that hostilities will ere long be commenced for the purpose of coercing the Sikh soldiery, whose conduct had rendered all attempts to establish anything like a permanent government abortive. It seems impossible, indeed, that they can be permitted to convulse the frontier any longer. The news from Scinde is unimportant. Although sickness had rather increased at Shirkapoor and Shahpoor, the troops stationed in the lower districts of the country were comparatively healthy. An attempt to convey stores and ammunition to the enemy from the British magazine, by the Lahore Vakeel, is said to have been discovered, and to have excited a strong sensation. This act of perfidy had been countenanced by the Lahore Government. From Southern Mahratta, beyond the execution of the celebrated robber chief, Soobanah Nickum, there is nothing to record. The Nizam's dominions are still in a most unpromising condition, and it is generally conceived that a crisis is approaching which will render British interference inevitable. We have advices from Hong Kong to the 30th September, but they contain nothing of striking importance. Trade both at Canton and Victoria was extremely dull, but less inactivity existed to the northward, particularly at Shanghai. It is said that the British inhabitants of Hong Kong have determined to refuse payment of the tax against which they appealed some time ago to the home government, and which Sir John Davis declined suspending, as they wished, pending the reference to England. A destructive fire had taken place in the native town of Bombay, occasioning considerable loss of life and property. Fifty persons appear to have perished; 190 houses were burnt, and the value of the property destroyed is estimated at 70,000*l*.

United States.—By the arrival of the Caledonia steam ship from Boston we have New York dates to the 15th ult. The tone of public opinion had become less warlike, notwithstanding the appeals made by some of the papers to the passions of the democracy. The news by this conveyance relates principally to the Oregon affair, but about which there is nothing decisive. The general feeling is, however, represented to be more temperate, and the right-minded portion of the community appear to deprecate both war and violence. The President's Message at the opening of the ensuing session of Congress is expected to be firm in language, but not offensive, in reiterating the claim of the United States to Oregon. The official paper, the Washington Union, has considerably modified the position it had assumed at the date of the last advices, and corrects the statement made that it was declared they must have "the whole of Oregon or none." Its language it says was—"The whole of Oregon or none—this is the only alternative as an issue of territorial right." In saying the whole or none, says the Union, "we spoke distinctly and exclusively of our title." The Union then goes on to show that all previous Administrations had taken the same ground, and that Mr. Clay, when Secretary of State, had declared in equally strong terms their absolute right to the whole of Oregon, in the very despatch in which instructions were given to offer to the British Government the 49th parallel of latitude as a compromise. The inference from all this seems fairly to be, that notwithstanding the positive claim of right to the whole territory, the American Government does not mean to shut the door to any expedient compromise.—A great Whig meeting had been held in Boston, at which Mr. Webster made a brilliant speech, foreshadowing the position that Mr. Webster and the New England portion, at least, of the Whig delegation to Congress, will take in opposition to the Administration. It is important, also, when taken into view with the article from the organ of the Administration. The following are extracts from the speech, which is the more interesting as forming a marked contrast to the insulting language lately held by the American papers towards this country. Mr. Webster said:—

"In the first place, I say to you, and through you to the country, what all know, that in the whole scope of this question, it appears that this is a subject for negotiation, for discussion, for amicable settlement; and so it has been regarded by both Governments for the whole length of time. It was true the two Governments could not agree as to the proper line of the territory, or upon any other satisfactory arrangement; that in 1818 they determined on joint occupation until they could come to some understanding about it. And with the same view this Government, at three different times,—in 1818, in 1824, in 1826—has proposed to the British Government a straight line division, the parallel of 49 degrees, all north of which should be assigned to England, and all south belong to America. While the English Government did not accede to this proposition, our Government, it did not insist upon any right to the whole of Oregon. Therefore the position of the question is, that the admission of both Governments through this long series of years, is that of a question for discussion, and negotiation, and compromise, and amicable settlement. * * * Now, gentlemen, I do not purpose to express to you an opinion upon this subject. I have no better opinion than any one of you as to the manner in which this adjustment ought to be made, but I have full confidence, the utmost confidence, that it can be made, that it can be made by wise and moderate measures in a manner perfectly consistent with the honour and with all the rights of all parties. I am the more confident of this when I look forward and see the state of things which is not far in advance. Where is Oregon? On the shores of the Pacific, 3,000 miles from us, and twice as far from England. Who is to settle it? Americans mainly; some settlers undoubtedly from England; but all Anglo-Saxons: all men educated in notions of independent government, and all self-dependent. And now let me ask, if there be any sensible man in the whole United States who will say for a moment that when 50,000 or 100,000 persons of this description find themselves on the shores of the Pacific Ocean, that they will long consent to be under the rule either of the American Congress or the British Parliament? They will raise a state for themselves, and they ought to do it. I look forward to the period when they will do this as not so far distant, but that many now present, and those not among the youngest of us, will see a great Pacific republican nation. I believe that it is in the course of Providence, and of human destiny, that a great state is to arise, of English and American descent, whose power will be established over the country on the shores of the Pacific; and that all those rights of natural and political liberty, all those great principles that both nations have inherited from their fathers, will be transmitted through us to them, so that there will exist at the mouth of the Columbia, or more probably farther south, a great Pacific republic, a nation where our children may go for a residence, separating themselves from this Government, and forming an integral part of a new Government, half way between England and China; in the most healthful, fertile, and desirable portion of the globe, and quite too far remote from Europe and from this side the American continent to be under the Governmental influence of either country. This state of things is by no means so far off as we may imagine; by no means so remote from the present time as may be supposed; and, looking to this state of things, this question becomes one upon which intelligent and well disposed men might very readily come to an agreement. * * * The proposition has been made to the British Government three successive times,—in '18, in '24, and in '26—again and again, to follow up the 49th parallel, westward from the Lake of the Woods, not only to the foot of the Rocky Mountains, but over the mountains, and onward to the ocean. I am not about to say whether this is a proper division of the territory or not, but I do say, that as it has been so often repeated in this manner, 25 and 20, and 18 years ago, is an admission that there is something to negotiate about, and treat about for either side; that it is not a question free from difficulty on either side. Now, gentlemen, who is the man at the head of either Government who will take upon himself the responsibility of bringing on a war between two nations like Great Britain and America, upon a question of this kind, until he is prepared to show that anything and everything that he could do has been done to avoid such a terrible ultimate result? (Mr. Webster was interrupted here by renewed cheers.) If a British Minister, under whose administration a war should ensue on the question cannot stand up in Parliament and show that it is not his fault—cannot show that he has done everything which an honest and sensible man can do to avert the conflict, I undertake to say that no power or popularity can uphold his shaking position for an hour. And in the same sense and spirit I say, that if in this country any party shall, before we are aware of it, plunge us into a war upon this question, it must expect to meet a very severe interrogatory from the American people—must expect to prepare itself to show that it has done all it could, without any bias from the pride of success or the love of war—all that it could do to keep the nation safe from so great a calamity, with the preservation of its rights and its honour. Gentlemen—It appears to me that any man (Prime Minister of England or President of the United States) who should unnecessarily light up the flames of war upon such a subject—flames let me add, that will burn over the whole globe—may well consider the genius of his country addressing to him the words which the orator of Rome supposed the genius of his country would address to him if he did not quell the Cataline conspiracy—"An cum bello vastabitur Italia, vexabunter urbes, tecta ardebunt; tum te non existimas invidiæ incendio conflagraturum." No gentlemen! the man who shall incautiously, or led on by false ambition, or by party pride, kindle those fires of wars over the globe on this question must look out for it—must expect to be himself consumed in a burning conflagration of general reproach. There will be a public indignation before which no popularity, public or private, can stand. It will melt down every monument of the dead, it will destroy all respect for the living; it will burn up every vestige of respect for individual worth, if unnecessarily, if recklessly, if ambitiously, it has plunged the subjects and citizens of two civilised Christian states of the world into war—a war which shall cause the loss of millions of wealth—shall turn cities to smoke—shall cost thousands and hundreds of thousands of lives—and those smoking cities, and that destruction of property, and that sacrifice of life shall be found over the whole globe, in every latitude and longitude surrounding the ball on which we live. Now, gentlemen, I do not propose that on this subject we take any alarm. I propose that we keep ourselves cool and calm. In some of the southern cities there is now some agitation for fear of a war. I regret this much. I hardly say I regret the feeling—that is natural. But I regret the cause. It is a common mistake of men, not in the most elevated position, that they think they can play the small patriot safely, in a small style. These are those who think that they can talk of a war with England and any other nation, and get credit for their patriotism and lofty love of country, but keep the game in their own hands. That may not happen. At any rate that is not the way nor the course which just and lofty and respectable men feel on the great question of peace or war. This constant speculation, this supposition that war may come, is half as bad as war itself. It interferes with all the business and arrangements of life. It confounds and confuses men in regard to their own business plans. What we want is settled peace, and the conviction that peace will remain until there is some just and sensible cause for war."

The affairs of Mexico and Texas are said to be in a train to hope for a speedy and amicable settlement. There had been further trouble amongst the Mormons. Another expedition to California, to start from Arkansas, had been projected.—The Canadian accounts contain no news, except that Lord Metcalfe continued to improve in health.

City.

Money Market, Friday.—Three per Cent. Consols, 91⅝; for the Account, 94¾; New Three-and-Quarter per Cent. 95⅛; Exchequer Bills, 12*s.* to 16*s.* ⅛ prem.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK.

TUESDAY—BANKRUPTCIES SUPERSEDED—J. Swallow, Manchester, Sharebroker—S. May and P. Morgan, Shrewsbury, Drapers.

BANKRUPTS—L. Lang and A. B. Smith, Charter-house-square, Private Boarding house keepers—J. Clark, Crescent, Minories, Merchant—S. Phillips, Kingston-upon-Hull, Hatter—W. G. Taylor and E. Guy, Liverpool, Hosiers—B Baldwin, Liverpool, Warehouseman—J. Baomilly, Bolton-le-Moors, Lancashire, Manufacturer—E. Radwood, the younger, Windmill-street, Lambeth, China and Glass Dealer—J. Mayland, Fetter-lane, City, Grocer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS—A. Fraser, Inverness, Grocer—D. Young, Dunkeld, Merchant—J. C. Bancks, Edinburgh, Ironmonger—T. Tarnch, Edinburgh, Wood Merchant.

FRIDAY—BANKRUPTS—J. Strong, Ockham, Coal Merchant—J. C. Edwards, Crescent-street, Bill Broker—J M Dermott, Gray's-inn-lane, Victualler—E. Ln. Roy, Upper Norton-street, Portland place, Wine Merchant—J. Elliott, Brandon-hill, Bristol, Coal Merchant—J. Mann, Warwick, Grocer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS—J. Young, Macduff, Banffshire, Fish-Curer.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Opening of the Ports.—The meetings in the metropolis, and throughout the country, in favour of an immediate opening of the ports, and of the total abolition of the Corn-laws, have been very numerous during the last 10 days. Among them have been meetings at Bradford, Wakefield, Paisley, Liverpool, Leicester, Kendal, Nottingham, Glasgow, Gloucester, Gateshead, Leith, Stockport, Bury, Dunstable, Oldham, Norwich, Manchester, Warrington, Leeds, Edinburgh, Stroud, Dundee, Kingston, Southwark, Mary-le-bone, Hackney, Finsbury, Tower Hamlets, Lambeth, &c. The proceedings at these meetings present little novelty to call for separate notice, the resolutions in favour of Free Trade, and petitions founded upon them, either to the Queen or Sir R. Peel, having been unanimously adopted. The Morning Chronicle of Saturday published a full account of the Bradford meeting up to 9 o'clock on the Friday night, although it took place at a distance of about 220 miles from London.

Buckingham Palace.—Above 100 workmen are engaged in making alterations and re-embellishing the interior of this palace, and the whole are to be completed by the second week in January for the reception of her Majesty and suite.

The Overland Mail.—It is announced that Mr. Waghorn is now actively engaged in preparing for six trials of the Trieste route as regards time against that by Marseilles, and that a meeting of the London, East India, and China Association will shortly take place, in order that the merchants of the city may choose the six months in summer and winter to practically settle all doubts on the subject of the present superiority of the Trieste route.

The Bernard Testimonial.—A subscription was last week set on foot, under this title, to provide for the families of the gallant men who volunteered to bring the plague-ship Eclair from Africa to England, and who fell victims in the attempt. Mr. Sidney Bernard was the surgeon, who went on board at Madeira as a volunteer; and his name was therefore given to the proposed testimonial. It was, however, announced on Thursday, by an advertisement in the Times, that the contributions already received will be returned, as it has been ascertained that it is unnecessary to promote a public subscription for the purpose.

Presents to Her Majesty and Prince Albert.—Mr. Thomas Lane, one of the principal manufacturers of Birmingham, has had the honour to present to her Majesty and to Prince Albert some splendid specimens of his new invention of enamelling pearl on glass. The presents to her Majesty, says the Times, consist of a very elegant pair of fire-screens. The ground of the enamelling is white of the purest character, and very clear, on which are painted the rose, the thistle, and the shamrock, the national colours being introduced. The imperial crown is introduced, with all the brilliant effects of the jewels, &c, represented in mother-of-pearl; beneath this is a dove in mother-of-pearl, with an olive branch. St. George destroying the dragon appears amongst the devices, and around him is an illuminated foliage. The brilliancy and variety of the tints are surprising; they resemble the gay and golden effect of the feathers on the neck of the mallard, or what is called the shot in certain manufactures of silks, and radiate as the surfaces are exposed to the diversities of light and shade. The present to his Royal Highness is an elegantly designed chess-board or table. The board is formed of enamelled glass and pearl, surrounded by a very gorgeous and elaborately worked border of papier maché. The squares of the board are surrounded by quatre foils, they contain alternately the lion and unicorn, beautifully picked out in pearl and gold, and most delicately tinted. The rose, thistle, and shamrock are introduced, minutely accurate in the outline and colouring; the queen bee is also amongst the detailed portions, whilst a frame of dolphins in pearl on green ground, to represent the sea, forms the exterior limit of the whole. The pillar by which the table is supported is of the richest and most highly gilt and coloured papier maché or japan. The combination of glass and mother-of-pearl produces an admirable effect; it is more vivid than the ancient painted glass, and has a somewhat semi-opaque appearance. The enamelling is of great strength, and as durable as the hardest marble. This novelty in the arts is entitled to the patronage of the rich, and is greatly to the credit of the manufacturer.

Defences of the Coast.—The daily papers state that the recent experiments with a one-gun battery in the Woolwich marshes, recommended to be made by a board of officers appointed to consider and suggest the best mode of constructing defences for the coasts, having been highly satisfactory; batteries on the same principle will be erected at Sheerness, Portsmouth, Plymouth, Pembroke, and other places on the coasts. A great number of traversing platforms, 16 feet long, to be fixed by pivots to the masonry of the embrasures, are in progress of construction at Woolwich, and in the carriage department, where five or six years ago only about 100 hands were employed, there are now about 350 men at work, aided by new improvements in machinery equal to the work of many more. The contractors for timber for the Royal Arsenal have not been able to supply the extra demand for seasoned timber, in consequence of the unexpected consumption; but fortunately the dockyards were all well supplied with suitable pieces for gun-carriages and traversing platforms, and consequently no delay has occurred. Numbers of large guns have been forwarded to Jersey, the Cape of Good Hope, and other possessions, and the greatest activity prevails in strengthening every place at home and abroad. A number of block ships, heavily armed, will soon be ready for their respective stations, and will add greatly to the defence of the coast. The papers add that the gradual manner in which the country has been preparing for any untoward event, has placed it at the present moment in a most commanding position, ready to repel the attacks of an enemy, or maintain its rights in all quarters of the world.

The New Poor-law Unions.—At the meeting of the Marylebone Vestry on Saturday, Mr. Hume, M.P., reported to the Board, that since the meeting of the committee appointed to resist the attempt of the Poor-law Commissioners to interfere with the parish of St. Marylebone, he had, at the request of the committee, put himself in communication with Sir Robert Peel on the subject. The vestry clerk had addressed a letter to Sir J. Graham requesting him to appoint a time for receiving the deputation from the Vestry and Board of Directors and Guardians; and, in reply, Sir James Graham stated that he was unwilling to give to the deputation the trouble of coming to the Home-office, for the act of the Poor-law Commissioners of which they complain is not within the control of the Secretary of State, the decision of this matter being by law vested absolutely in the Poor-law Commissioners. Sir J. Graham added that any objection to the proposed arrangement should be addressed to the Commissioners; and, having no right or authority to interfere, he declined to take cognisance of the matter in dispute. Mr. Hume, upon this, addressed a letter to Sir R. Peel, requesting that he would give the deputation the opportunity of stating to him the consequences to this parish if the orders of the Poor-law Commissioners are inforced. Sir R. Peel, in reply, suggested that Sir J. Graham had misunderstood the object of the deputation; and a letter from Sir J. Graham having confirmed this view of the question, the deputation were requested to wait upon him at the Home Office on Wednesday. The deputation accordingly attended, and at great length stated the case of the parish. Sir J. Graham, having listened with the greatest patience and attention to the various arguments for upwards of an hour, observed that the Government had no desire to destroy the integrity of the parish of Marylebone, or to interfere with the privileges of the rate-payers. The matter should, therefore, have his most serious consideration, and he would communicate the result to the parish authorities.

Sale of Autographs, &c., of Gray the Poet.—During the last few days the auction rooms of Messrs. Evans and Son, in New Bond-street, have been crowded by eminent bibliopolists to witness the disposal of a portion of the library of a gentleman containing a collection of autograph poems, letters, books, and elaborate manuscript notes, by Gray, the poet. The style of writing of the poet excited the admiration of all who beheld it, the writing being very small, but most clear and distinct, having more the appearance of engraving than pen and ink. Many of the books containing merely the autograph of Gray, fetched large sums; but those interspersed with notes by the poet realised enormous prices compared with their intrinsic value in the market. "Linnæi Systema Naturæ," 2 vols. in 3, interleaved, with MS. notes and beautiful pen and ink drawings of birds and insects, by Gray, fetched 40 guineas. The "Elegy in a Country Churchyard," in his own handwriting, created great competition. This manuscript contains five stanzas omitted in all the editions of Gray's poems, and the names of Milton and Cromwell are substituted for Tully and Cæsar. The original title given to the Elegy in the manuscript is "Stanzas wrote in a Country Churchyard." The competition was most spirited, and it was knocked down for 53*l.*, but there being a dispute as to who bid that sum, it was again put, and was eventually knocked down to Messrs. Payne and Foss, of Pall mall, for 100*l.* The two following lots, an "Ode on the Installation of the Duke of Grafton at Cambridge," and "The Fatal Sisters," an ode in the handwriting of Gray, sold for 22 guineas. "A Long Story," in Gray's handwriting, with a complimentary letter to him from Miss Speed, 45*l.* A playful letter to West, containing a supposed dialogue between some books in his library, and a letter of Gray to West, containing a poetical translation from Statius, 27*l.* Satyrical Verses; On the Heads of Houses at Cambridge; Humorous letter to Dr. Wharton, from Florence, by Gray, 30 guineas. Three pen and ink drawings, and four insects painted on vellum by Gray, 10*l.* Epitaph on a child, in verse; a song beginning "Thyrsis when we parted swore," and transcript Latin verses; letter of Gray to Mr. Stonehewer on the death of his father, 40*l.* Seven small note books containing memoranda by Gray made during his tours in England and on the continent, 30*l.* Many letters of the poet fetched from 8 to 20 guineas each in the second day's sale. The following are worthy of notice:—Gray's Odes, with numerous manuscript notes, containing the author's avowal of the sources from whence he borrowed his ideas. In the first ode, "Awake, Æolian lyre, awake!" Gray states "that he alludes to the psalm, 'Awake, my glory! awake lute and harp,' &c." In two other stanzas he refers to Pindar, on the "Power of Harmony," and observes, "borrowed from the Pythian of Pindar." On "Night and all her sickly dews," the poet remarks, "To compensate the real and imaginary ills of life, the muse was given us, by the same providence that sends the cheerfull presence of the day to dispell the gloom and terrors of the night." In the 2d ode, "Ruin seize thee, ruthless king, &c." he acknowledges his obligations to Shakspeare, Spenser, Dryden and Cowley. He also states that he copied some ideas from "Raphael's Vision of Ezekiel," from an ancient Scaldic ode, and assigns his reason for giving the double cadence in the third stanza. Throughout Gray has marked the musical time. The auctioneer stated that Horsley set this ode to music almost in the style Gray wished, although he never saw Gray, or the book marked by him. The first offer for this was 10*l.* 10*s.*, and, after a most spirited competition, was knocked down to Messrs. Payne and Foss for 100 guineas. Stowe's Survey, with manuscript notes by Gray, sold for 14*l.* 5*s.*, and Clarendon's History of the Rebellion, also interspersed with MS. notes, fetched 23*l.* 10*s.* A few drawings in a book by Gray, when a boy, 6*l.* 10*s.* Fabyan's Chronicle, 2 vols. in one, with MS. notes by Gray, which, according to the catalogue of this library, cost him 2*s.* 6*d.*, fetched six guineas. A letter of Gray to Mr. Brown on the Haughty Conduct of Lord Sackville to the Members of the Court-martial, &c. 14*l.* 10*s.* A letter to the Rev. Mr. Brown, on the death of George II., on the legacies of George II. to the Duke of Cumberland, and description of Queen Charlotte's present manners, &c., 17*l.* 10*s.* Letter to Mr. Brown on Mr. Pitt's spirit and contempt in his treatment of Bassy's proposals, &c., 17 guineas. Account of the Death of the Duke of Cumberland, Alarming State of the Metropolis, and two other letters, 15 guineas. A long autograph translation from Dante, Canto 33, with a note by Mason, 18*l.* The other lots sold fetched equally high prices, and the sale is said to have realised upwards of 1500*l.*

Literary Trial.—A trial of some interest in the literary world will take place in the Court of Exchequer, either in the present or the early part of the ensuing term, which will excite some curiosity in the literary world. It is an action brought by Trinity College, Cambridge, against the trustees of the British Museum, for their possession of a manuscript alleged to have been stolen from the library of the former. This MS. has been intermediately in the possession of Mr. J. O. Halliwell, F.R.S., whose suspension from the library of the Museum has recently caused a good deal of interest in literary circles.

Early Closing of Shops.—On Tuesday a public meeting of the drapers, shopkeepers, shopmen, and others in the west-end interested in the early closing of shops, was held at the Institution, Leicester-square. General Sir De Lacy Evans presided, and the meeting was addressed by Dr. Epps, Mr. Leigh, Mr. Thornhill, and other gentlemen, and resolutions in favour of the objects of the meeting were carried unanimously. Meetings of a similar character have also been held at the east end of town, at which addresses were delivered by Mr. Wire under-sheriff, Mr. G. F. Young the extensive shipbuilder, and other gentlemen.

The Leman Property.—The immense property left by Sir John Leman, who was Lord Mayor of London about a century and a half ago, will shortly be contested in the courts of law, proceedings having been taken for that purpose, by the party who claims as the rightful owner. The property which is valued at 2,700,000*l.* (exclusive of 1,300,000*l.*, which is in the name of trustees in the Bank of England), consists of the manor of Northam, in Hertfordshire, the manor of Rampton in Cambridgeshire, the manor of Warboys in Huntingdonshire, and the manor of Barnes, better known as Goodman's fields, in the parish of St. Mary, Whitechapel. It is stated by the claimant's solicitor, that in the last estate the greater number of tenants pay no rent, and it is the custom when a person gives up the occupation of a house to sell the key, which is parted with for a sum of between 20*l.* and 30*l.* On one occasion an occupier, who was not able to get the sum he required for his key is said to have pulled the house down, and sold the materials. These statements are denied by the opposite party, but it seems from the correspondence in the daily papers that they are not without foundation.

Spafields Burial Ground.—On Friday Mr. Bramhall, the barrister, appointed arbitrator by the Court of Queen's Bench, to decide upon the proper steps to be taken with respect to Spafields burial ground, sat at Westminster, to institute the necessary inquiries. It will be recollected that during the early part of the present year, great excitement was caused in the metropolis by the statements which were made concerning this burial ground. The matter was partly investigated in Clerkenwell Police-court; and it was there stated by several respectable witnesses, that the parties in care of the burial ground were in the habit of burning the corpses and carrying away the human flesh from the graves in baskets full, having previously chopped them up with a shovel. The magistrate had no jurisdiction, but the affair became the subject of discussion in Parliament, and the Home Secretary at length took it up. A prosecution was instituted against the lessees and grave-diggers, and finally, with the consent of both parties and the court, the present arbitration was appointed. It appeared, on Friday, that the arbitrator and solicitors of both parties had conjointly made an inspection of the burial-ground. In the greater part of the ground the coffins were only 3 feet 6 inches and 3 feet beneath the surface, whilst in one place only 18 inches of mould covered the dead. The bone-house, and the house where the burning took place, were likewise viewed, and were found to be clean. The solicitor for the prosecution said that he had 14 witnesses in attendance who were willing to depose to the truth of the statements which some of them had previously made regarding the practices carried on in the burial-ground, and its unfitness for future burials. But before proceeding into such a mass of evidence, he had a proposal to make, which, if acceded to, would save much time and trouble; it was, that a chemist and surgeon should be appointed by the arbitrator, who would examine and report upon the condition of the grave-yard. The defendant's solicitor acceded to this proposal, and the arbitrator decided that such an examination might be made by a surgeon and chemist forthwith. In a few days the examination will be made, and it is confidently expected that it will end in the final closing of Spafields burial-ground, which has long been a nuisance to the inhabitants of Clerkenwell.

Fall of Three Houses.—On Tuesday evening, three houses which had just been erected in Cavendish-place, Wandsworth-road, fell in, and buried two sons of the builder and a labourer in the ruins. The latter escaped with a few bruises, but some time elapsed before the two brothers could be extricated, when the eldest was found dead.

Fire and Loss of Life.—Yesterday morning the premises of Messrs. Cooper and Willard, boot and shoe manufacturers, Bedford-place, Commercial-road East, were destroyed by fire, and a poor woman 80 years of age perished in the flames. The cause of the fire is unknown.

The Late Murder at Newington.—On Wednesday, at the inquest on the body of Daniel Fitzgerald, the Jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against Samuel Quennell, who has accordingly been committed for trial.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Nov. 29:—West Districts, 136; Northern, 174; Central, 178; Eastern, 226; Southern, 249; Total, 962; males, 486; females, 477. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1277; males, 663; females 614.

Provincial.

Incendiary Fires.—The local papers report four other incendiary fires near Nottingham, making ten within seven weeks. One of these occurred on Saturday night, at Ramsdale Farm, five miles from Nottingham, in the occupation of Mr. Whittaker. The fire was confined to the straw stack, which was entirely consumed The last occurred on Thursday at noon in the midst of the stack-yard at Brockstowe-hall, three miles from Nottingham, but owing to an early discovery of the flames, it was prevented doing extensive damage. —Another fire has occurred at Wantage, in Berkshire, on the farm of Mr. B. Clemant, but it was fortunately discovered in time to confine it to a rick of barley.—At Colnbrook, near Slough, an incendiary fire in the farm-yard of Mr. Cane, of Poyle, has destroyed a rick of wheat, one of barley, and one of beans, two barns, in which a large quantity of oats and wheat had been housed for thrashing; the granary, stored with wheat, part of a rick of hay, a large stack of straw, the farming utensils, and all the out-buildings. A man was apprehended on suspicion, but discharged for want of evidence.—In Lincolnshire an oat stack and other valuable property has been destroyed and seven sheep slaughtered, on the farm of Mr. Mossop, in Moulton Marsh.—At Sawley, in Derbyshire, 100 quarters of barley inside the barn, the building itself, a large barley stack, and a long line of ricks of peas, together with a large quantity of potatoes, were destroyed, on Sunday night, on the farm of Mr. J. Smith. At Wisbech, in Cambridgeshire, a fire occurred last week in the rick-yard of Mr. Storey, which completely destroyed three stacks of corn and one of hay.

Bath.—Considerable interest was excited last week among the residents of Bath and Bristol by the disposal of Lansdowne Tower, with a large portion of the rare and valuable property it contained. The sale commenced on Friday week. During the several days of the sale, a numerous company attended, among whom there was a most active and extraordinary competition for the different lots, which, in general, fetched high prices; a great portion having been purchased, through their agents, for the Grand Duke Constantine of Russia, the King of Bavaria, the Duke of Beaufort, the Marquis of Northampton, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Earl of Warrington, Earl de Grey, &c., and also for the British Museum. The tower alone sold for 4,400*l.*, and, with the gardens, brought 8,415 guineas. It was, however, rumoured that the tower was bought in, as the estimated value of the fixtures left in the tower was 1,444*l.*, while the garden cost 45,000*l.* and the land 3,000*l.*; so that at the very lowest calculation the property must have cost Mr. Beckford 23,000*l.* The total sum realised by the sale of the pictures on one day last week amounted to nearly 3,000*l.*, several of them realising high prices from the circumstance alone that they had been in possession of the owner of Lansdown Tower. On this account, several china plates fetched from 30 to 36 guineas the dozen, and cups and saucers from three to four guineas each. Several artists have attended the sale who are in the employment of eminent porcelain and china manufacturers, to sketch the designs on the different vases, which are of the most exquisite character and finish. The sale concluded on Friday. The total proceeds of the sale, including the sum bid for the tower, realised nearly 17,000*l.*

Eton.—Several busts of distinguished Divines and statesmen educated at Eton, have lately been presented to the college, among which may now be added those of Bishop Pearson (author of the "Exposition of the Creed"), and Professor Porson, presented to the institution by the Rev. W. G. Cookesley, one of the assistant masters. They have been executed by Mr. Behnes, and are pronounced to be excellent likenesses. Lord Morpeth has just commissioned the same sculptor to execute a bust of Gray, the poet, which his lordship intends to present to the college.

Great Oakley.—On Monday week the 5th annual meeting and dinner of the Great Oakley Farmer's Club took place. At the dinner Mr. Barker, the President, was in the chair, supported by about 60 gentlemen. After the usual routine toasts, Mr. STANFORD proposed the health of the Chairman in very complimentary terms.—Mr. BARKER, in returning thanks, alluded to the state of the country in regard to corn. He said there was a very great, but not to say general, feeling in the country that there was not a sufficient supply of corn in the country to meet the wants of the population till next harvest. He was not prepared to state that such was not the case, as they were labouring under a dispensation entirely new to them in this case in the potato crop. It was a question of considerable importance, for he did think that the feeling which had been formed and endeavoured to be increased, that we were on the brink of famine, was groundless; and that the report had been got up and circulated by parties interested in creating a panic and who would be benefited thereby. The average growth of wheat had been more than they expected, for it had been thought it would be below the average; but, although it was not equal to last year, still it was not below what they had in general. With regard to the failure of the potato crop, if it existed to the extent which was stated in Ireland, it would be a very fearful thing; but he did not think it was of so much importance in England; for when they looked around them, and saw the manufacturing interest in a state of unexampled prosperity, and considered also that the increased price of corn would enable the farmers to employ all their men, while they saw that the manufacturing and agricultural population had a prospect of employment throughout the winter, he thought they need not be afraid of a famine, the report of which had been got up by a party for the advancement of their own objects, and who by so doing would be the means of increasing that which they pretended so much to fear, by decreasing the supply of the production of other countries, and it had already had that effect in some degree. The increased price of meat which they had experienced for the last six months had mainly, though perhaps not solely, arisen from the alteration in the tariff of 1842, by which the graziers were made to think that the country would be inundated by the importation of foreign cattle, and which caused great quantities of cattle to be pressed to market and sold for anything but remunerating prices, and by that means reduced the quantity both of grazing and breeding stock. Had they remained in the position which they occupied previous to 1842, he thought that even taking into consideration the increased consumption in the manufacturing districts, had they not had a reduction brought about by the apprehensions of an invasion of the profits of grazing, they should not have had meat at so high a price as it was at present. It was the same with corn; anything which tended to decrease the price so as to make it a loss to the grower would diminish the quantity grown.—Mr. HARDY proposed "Success to the Royal Agricultural Society of England," coupling with that toast the name of Mr. Hobbs.—Mr. W. F. HOBBS said he felt proud in connecting himself with that great national association, and he was glad to find that the practical farmers of the kingdom still flocked around it and supported them in their object, which was by the combination of science and facts in agriculture to advance and improve that interest. As long as they did their utmost to support their national association in its endeavours to promote the use of machinery and the improvement of their stock, they would go on prospering. The society was endeavouring to diffuse information throughout the country, and he felt sure that the practical farmers would rally round them, and give them that support which they deserved. He then made a few observations with reference to the report which had been read, and concurred with the chairman in believing that there was no fear of a famine. He thought that at the present time on the landlords of the country rested a great responsibility, as on them rested the prosperity of the country for the time to come; for they must sacrifice a little if the farmers were to grow corn for the whole population, as they could do; for they had for the last 25 years more than kept pace with the population; and he had no doubt that, if the land was farmed as it ought to be—if they would take a lesson from his friend on his left (Mr. Hutley), and other practical men, they would go on more rapidly than they had done. But there must be a better feeling exist between the landlord and tenant—the landlord must encourage the persevering tenant. He must give him something like a fixity of tenure, and he must allow him for unexhausted improvements on leaving his farm. A person in trade, if he builds a manufactory on his premises, and quits them, could take it down and dispose of it; but if a tenant farmer built a boiling-house, or any other building, the moment he puts the timber in the ground it becomes the property of the landlord; and by that means a great check was given to an enterprising tenant. Some landlords who gave leases gave such as they could not act up to. He had one in his pocket which, coming from one of the leading landlords in the county, he was surprised at: it was carrying out the old system of serfdom; and if the tenant were to carry out such a lease he would be in no better position than he was 100 years ago. There was another great grievance—that of landlords selecting men as agents who did not understand practical farming—men in the legal profession, who had estates left to their management, and who, though they might be honourable men, yet could not forget their parchments; they made their leases 10 times as long as they had any occasion, and followed the wording of old leases, which prevented a tenant farming in accordance with the present day, and placed them at their command and dictum, and at any time he could be thrown out of his farm. That was too much the fashion in the present day, if not in all cases, in many. He knew an instance of a friend of his who was obliged to leave his farm on account of the annoyance he received from the agent of the property. The farm had been let to him at four, eight, or twelve years; it might be said he was wrong in doing so; and to his (Mr. Hobbs's) knowledge, he had been advanced a few pounds each time, and had paid 40*l.* 10*s.* for leases on a farm of 330 acres. The whole estate was managed in that way; the agent takes the management of the estate, and the proprietor says, "I shall give you nothing; you must make what you can out of the tenant;" and consequently the agent thinks more of his parchments than he does of doing justice to persevering tenants. The same tenant showed him a list of dilapidations, which was sent to him on leaving, the whole only amounting to 30*s.*, whilst he left on the farm unexhausted improvements to the amount of 10*s.* an acre: and since he had left a bill had been sent in for a pane of glass which had been cracked in one of the windows. They many of them knew the farm, and it was not a singular case; they knew it was too often the case, and that it was a great check to agricultural improvements in the present day. He need not trouble them further on that point, for they all knew his feeling with regard to the position of landlord and tenant; he considered that the tenants ought to have their rights and the landlords theirs; for he did not think that that landlord was the most liberal who let his farms at the lowest rent; there were many other ways in which a man could benefit his tenant; as by assisting him in drainage, by improvement of his buildings, by cutting down some of his surplus timber, by which he could encourage his tenant, and by giving him, instead of restrictive clauses, improving clauses in his lease. There were men who had the lowest rents who did not farm the best; but let them give a fair rent, and then they would go to work and improve their farms and benefit the country in every respect.—After toasts had been proposed and acknowledged by Mr. BOGGIS, Mr. SPERLING, Mr. KERR, Mr. PERTWEE, Mr. W. THOMPSON, Mr. HUTLEY, Mr. CONSTABLE, and Mr. HEMPSON, the Rev. Mr. WILKINS proposed the health of Mr. Mechi, of Tiptree-heath, who, he said, invited everybody to visit his farm and see his experiments, and published the results to the world, so that they would observe that he was not farming for the benefit of himself alone, or of the county of Essex, but of the whole kingdom.—Mr. MECHI, who was received with loud cheers, said he had been gratified to find, in driving through the country that day, that he had got into a part well cultivated, and he had been further gratified in meeting with so many intelligent agriculturists, whose minds were open to improvement. Their buildings were better, and their fences and the absence of trees was much more favourable than in other parts of Essex. Any person who deviated from the beaten track must expect to have his actions severely criticised, and perhaps meet with censure, and sometimes ridicule; but he had always given every gentleman credit for good intentions towards him, and had borne all with good humour; for he could not expect that they should enter into his calculations until some result had been given. But he was happy to inform them that the theories he had propounded had been supported by practice: and if he had to do them again he should proceed in exactly the same manner, with the exception of drainage. His farm was certainly in a wretched state last year, and it could not be expected that after cutting twenty miles of drains, cutting up a great extent of fences, and throwing everything into confusion, the farm could look so well as one which had been in an uninterrupted state of cultivation for many years. When he built his barn he was told that it would be too large for the produce of his farm; but he was happy to inform them that it was quite full, as well as his stack yard. He had grown a crop of mustard on land which before would not grow tares, but which, by the use of the liquid manure, had grown mustard 5 feet high, and he found it very useful for feed. He gave them full credit for all the improvements which they had effected; but there were some weak points, such as deep drainage, which was a point of much consequence to the farmers of Essex; he had proved it on his own farm, and had found that the 5-feet drains drew water when the 2-feet-8 would not; and he should be glad if every one of them would try the system on their farms. He commented on the beneficial effects of the liquid manure, and upon the advantage of steaming the food for hogs, &c. He did not say it was their place to provide the necessary buildings for these purposes; he thought it was the duty of the landlord, who should charge a per centage to his tenant, and if the landlords were too poor or too unwilling to do that, the Legislature ought to interfere, and secure to the tenant his right to be paid for improvements. Many persons had laid out thousands on their farms, and it had been the means of turning them out of them; the system was to send down a valuer, who stated that the farm was then worth so much, without at all alluding to the money laid out by the tenant, and then some greedy fellow or other offers a larger rent for it, in order that he might work out the improvements, not having any capital of his own; and thus the tenant was defrauded of a great part of his capital. He had found that brick walls round the yards were much better than fences, as they sheltered the cattle from the cold. In his third letter he had given a calculation to show where the returns were to come from, and he should be prepared to show that every item in that letter had been not over-valued but under-valued. There was another fact which he would mention—he had sold all his waggons, and he hoped that he should never see a waggon again, for he considered they were a perfect waste of money; he had sold off his waggons, and with four horses and four carts he had got in his harvest. With regard to subsoiling, he thought they could not subsoil too deep. He had no fallows, and he intended to grow half wheat every year. He hoped the time would come when they should have no trees and very few fences, by which means they would be enabled to grow more corn than they could possibly consume, and should be in a condition to export it to other countries, and take in exchange port wine and sherry. In Belgium they were rented much higher than the farmers of this country, and yet they were enabled to get one quarter more corn per acre than they could, and sell it at a less price; which was a proof that they must farm better than the farmers of this country. It was the same in Scotland, where the farmers were rented higher, but still the English farmers could buy their oats.—The CHAIRMAN said Mr. Mechi had alluded to the Scotch farming, and had expressed his surprise at their being able to buy Scotch oats. He (the chairman) thought the reason was that labour was much cheaper in Scotland than in this country, they being able to get for 100*l.* as much labour as the English farmer could for 200*l.*—Mr. HAMMOND proposed the "Health of Mr. Ransome, and success to trade, agriculture, and commerce."—Mr. RANSOME returned thanks. They had heard some excellent remarks from the various speakers, in most of which, especially with regard to machinery, he entirely agreed. He warmly commended Mr. Mechi's conduct in coming forward and trying the experiments he had done, and publishing his results to the public. They could believe what he said, for he was no auctioneer, who praised an estate because he wanted to sell it, as he thought Mr. Mechi would not part with it on any account, and the country was much indebted to him for his exertions.—Mr. HOBBS answered to the toast of the "Farmer's Friend." It might be inferred from some remarks of Mr. Wilkins that the tenant farmers of Essex were totally ignorant of the principles acted upon by Mr. Mechi until that gentleman put them forth; he did not think he should be acting as their friend if he allowed such a statement to go forth without an explanation. He gave Mr. Mechi no credit for originating those principles, but he did so as the great advocate of them. Deep drainage had been practised in the county before Mr. Mechi came amongst them, and he did not think it ought to go forth to the world that they were backward in making their improvements. He agreed perfectly with Mr. Mechi as to the one-horse carts, which would be found very useful on flat ground, but he was afraid they would not answer so well on hilly country. In conclusion he alluded to the manner in which the labourers were paid, and said he thought they ought to be paid the same as manufacturing labourers—by the piece, so that the skilful and persevering labourer might receive proper pay, and not be placed on an equality with the indolent and unskilful.

Leeds.—We noticed in our paper of the 25th ult., the circumstances of a court-martial at Leeds, to investigate a charge against Lieut. Hyder, of the 10th Hussars, "for conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, for that he did, with intent to deceive his commanding-officer, Colonel Vandeleur, endeavour to prevail on S. Oliver, Esq., to lend him a horse, &c." The inquiry terminated in a finding of "not guilty." In connexion with the affair, which made some noise at the time from the circumstance of the destruction of certain documents by the principal witness for the prosecution, in the presence, and with the acquiescence of Colonel Vandeleur, a general order has been issued by authority of the Commander-in-Chief. The order observes that Her Majesty has been pleased to express her displeasure that Col. Vandeleur, hastily acting, as he declares, under an impression that these documents were not in a state fit to be produced in court, and that the fair copies in his possession would be much better, should have acquiesced in a proceeding, the impropriety of which must on reflection be obvious to him, notwithstanding that Lieut. Hyder having been acquitted, has not suffered prejudice, and notwithstanding that Col. Vandeleur had in court, and was ready to produce a paper which he alleged to be a true copy of such a letter, and as to the authenticity and truth of which copy Colonel Vandeleur, who wrote the letter, the clerk who copied it, and the witness who received, might have been examined if Lieut. Hyder had thought fit to do so. The order notices the irregularities which characterised the proceedings, and directs that the charge against Lieut. Hyder, the finding of the Court, and Her Majesty's confirmation be read at the head of every regiment in Her Majesty's service.

Oxford.—The Rev. Messrs. Glennie, Marshall, and Coape, three clergymen of the Church of England, were on Wednesday week received into the Roman Catholic Church, St. Mary's, Oscott. The former is a member of Trinity College, Cambridge, the latter are of Oxford. Mr. C. Woodmason, son of Mr. Woodmason, of Littlemore (who with his lady had been previously received), was admitted at the same time. Mr. T. Hood, barrister, and a member of the congregation of Mr. Richards, at Margaret-street chapel, was also received into the Roman Catholic Church in London last week.

Sunderland.—A coroner's inquest has been held on the persons killed by the late explosion at Bishopswearmouth. After hearing evidence at great length, the jury returned the following verdict:—"That the deceased came by their deaths by the sudden bursting of a boiler, from some cause to us unknown; and the engineman is censurable for not apprising the engineer of the leakage in the boiler; and the said engineer is also censurable for not more minutely examining the engine and boiler."

Taunton.—The annual meeting and dinner of the Taunton Agricultural Association took place on Friday, W. Miles, Esq., M.P., in the chair, supported by about 300 gentlemen and farmers. Among them were:—H. B. Strangways, Esq., F. H. Dickinson, Esq., M.P.; T. D. Acland, Esq., M.P.; Right Hon. H. Labouchere, M.P.; E. A. Sanford, Esq., B. Escott, Esq., M.P.; T. G. W. Carew, Esq., J. Lee Lee, Esq., R. King, Esq., &c. After the customary loyal and some other toasts, the chairman proposed the health of the members for West Somerset, which was the signal for mingled cheers and vehement hissing. Several persons kept their seats, refusing to drink the toast. Mr. ACLAND, on rising, was received with alternate cheering and disapprobation. He said—The generosity of Englishmen, whether friendly or opponents, is always refreshing and cheering to an Englishman. This is not the place for me to go into political matters; I know I should be stopped if I did so. You know, gentlemen, I am not a very old man, but I have been quite long enough mixed up in public life to know what those cries which have proceeded from the lower part of the room meant. I know that those cheers came from those who are my political friends; and I know that those strange cries came from those who are my decided political opponents. But when a man knows he has done his duty—when he knows he has done what he conscientiously believes to be right and correct—why should he fear to meet his friends? Gentlemen, I am quite aware of what has passed in another part of this county, and I suppose I understand it. We are not met to promote any particular party, or any political object, nor to say which party it is that is most favourable to agriculture; and I hope not one word will escape from me which may be taken as supporting those with whom I agree, or against those from whom I differ. I shall be exceedingly glad if the meeting will permit me to do so, but I know it will not. But I must beg to say that, as your representative—as the representative of an important and influential constituency—I have endeavoured to do my best to advance the interests committed to my charge. I know that the course I have adopted has incurred censure, and however confident I am that I have done what in my conscience I believed to be right, I beg to assure you that I am not at all indifferent to the censure of my friends. If I have differed from some of those who may take more decided views than myself, all I can say is, I have not done so without much reflection. I have not acted rashly. I have not acted so to please any man. I have endeavoured conscientiously to do my duty, and to do what I believe to be most conducive to the interests of the country at large, and especially of those whom I represent. If I have not succeeded to your satisfaction, I am prepared to answer for it at the proper time and place. Neither, gentlemen, have I acted without being aware of what the probable results would be, and I have also acted on this conviction (my naval friend on my right will understand me), that no one who tries to hold to the wind can steer a straight course. Gentlemen, I will not trouble you further, except to thank you for the very kind manner in which you have allowed me to say these few words. There was a little difference of feeling when my health was proposed, but I thought it my duty to come here, and I hope I shall not suffer in your estimation from having done so.—Mr. DICKINSON was also received with hisses and cheers. Silence having been obtained, he said: With reference to what had been said of him at another place, he had a conscience clear of all sense of impropriety as to the course he had taken in Parliament. He felt warmly in this matter, and he must say he had acted independently, and the course which he had pursued he intended still to pursue. Whether he met with the temporary disapprobation of those whose approbation he might value, or their approval, his conscience told him the same thing, that the course which he had taken was the right one; and, in the end, he felt assured, it would meet with the sanction of this meeting and the country. He would allude to this topic no further, but thank them for the kind manner in which himself and his colleague had been received. For his own part, solely dependent on agriculture, he was not such a fool as to seek to ruin himself any more than he would seek to ruin the farmers. If he did harm to them, he must do harm to himself also; and he hoped he was not a fool in these matters (the honourable gentleman here appeared to be much excited, and was alternately cheered and hissed by the company). He had looked at the whole subject with great care, and had anticipated what had happened. It did not come upon him by surprise. It was impossible that a man could avoid feeling somewhat warm at hearing the sounds which proceeded from the bottom of the room; but he felt no animosity to any one because he entertained a different opinion to his own, nor because he disapproved of his conduct, and expressed disapprobation of it. He gave them all credit for the feelings which he entertained himself; and if he had shown any warmth, he begged them to excuse it. The honourable gentleman concluded by giving "The healths of Mr. Miles and Colonel Gore Langton."—Mr. MILES returned thanks, and proposed "The health of the Right Hon. Mr. Labouchere."—Mr. LABOUCHERE returned thanks and said: I can assure you, gentlemen, I am highly gratified by the terms which my worthy friend has thought proper to use in proposing my health, and also by the kind manner in which it has been your pleasure to receive the toast. I always experience the greatest satisfaction in attending the anniversaries of this institution—in the first place as the representative of the town, the interests of which are necessarily and inseparably connected with the agriculture of the surrounding country. I also attend here with great pleasure as a landowner in this immediate vicinity. Institutions like this confer substantial benefits upon society. I do not wish to exaggerate the effects which they have in promoting and improving the cultivation of the soil, at the same time I am well aware that these effects are not inconsiderable. I also think it an advantage that there should be an occasion of this kind at which the landowners and yeomanry, without regard to party, may meet for the promotion of a common good. These meetings are productive of many important benefits; they bring different classes together, promote good feeling, and soften asperities, leading people to judge more charitably of each other than they probably would through the medium of party newspapers or the comments of party men. I therefore rejoice on an occasion which brings together the different classes of society; and I entirely agree with my hon. friend in the chair, that the utility—I will go further, and say, the very existence—of societies like this depends upon our keeping ourselves entirely free from political topics. It is almost impossible to disguise the fact that there are political subjects closely connected with the interests of agriculture, which occupy the public mind at the present moment; but I do hold that it is most important that persons who differ upon them should, when they meet here, endeavour to avoid all allusion to any subject likely to degenerate into politics, which frequently so soon arouse the feelings and passions of men. I therefore shall feel it my duty on the present occasion to follow the example which has been set by your worthy chairman, and by the members of the western division, and abstain altogether from entering into those topics to which I have alluded. There remains, however, gentlemen, a subject which may naturally be treated of on an occasion of this kind. All subjects which are connected with the cultivation of the soil, and the cementing of those bonds which unite the different classes interested in the soil—these are the subjects which it is the especial purpose of the Society to discuss, and anything which relates to them is matter for fit comment. I must remark, then, that during the 10 years I have had the opportunity of knowing this part of the country, it has been quite clear to me that a great improvement has taken place. There now exists among the tenantry and landowners an increased sense that they are partners in one common object; that it is not only the duty, but the interests, of landlords to give all fair and proper encouragement to deserving tenants. (A Voice: "Cut down the timber.") And, on the other hand, there is a feeling in the tenantry, a desire to show that they are worthy of it, by exerting themselves in a manner which can alone effect the object we have in view—the good cultivation of the soil. It is impossible, gentlemen, not to be struck with what one sees—draining going on, fences taken down, all those means employed by which the soil of the country is to be improved and rendered more productive; and I have no doubt that we are now only at the beginning of the work of improvement. Gentlemen, to borrow an expression which has been used by your chairman, these are not the times for farmers to go to sleep; they are not the times for any class of individuals to go to sleep. They who do so—who do not prosecute their employment, whatever it may be, with skill and energy—will find themselves fall behind in the race of competition. There is one point on which I cannot help saying a word or two. One of your members has congratulated you on the abundance of your crops. I believe that, generally speaking, his observations are true so far as regards this part of the country. I believe that this part of England has been favoured by Providence rather more than other parts of the kingdom, and that our crops generally are above the average. But there is one very important crop—important to all of us, but especially to the humbler classes—which constitutes a most painful exception; and I should be sorry for a meeting like this to pass over without some mention being made of the unfortunate failure of the potato crop. It is extremely difficult to know exactly to what extent that crop has been affected, or to say with certainty what difficulty may arise from the circumstance in the ensuing spring. But this I hope, that all of us, in our several stations, will recollect that it is our duty to watch closely the condition of the poorer classes during the next three months, and exert ourselves to mitigate any pressure that may fall upon them in consequence of that failure. I will also take the liberty of making a remark in connection with this subject: I have reason to believe, from a communication which I have received from persons of far more skill and experience in agricultural matters than myself, that there are means which may be taken immediately for lessening the evils which have been anticipated from the failure of the potato crop: I mean especially that it is extremely important that the autumnal sowing of potatoes should be resorted to to a considerable extent. It has been ascertained that potatoes sown late in the year (it is not yet too late) yield at least as good a crop as potatoes sown in spring: indeed, I believe that experiments have been made in Yorkshire, the result of which has been that the later sown potatoes have been more productive than those sown in the spring. The potatoes planted in the autumn were put rather deeper into the ground than the others, and thus protected from the frost. This would be of great service if it could be done generally. I have thrown out the hint because I believe it may be the means of mitigating the sufferings of the poorer classes.—The Chairman then gave "The Health of Mr. Bickham Escott."—BICKHAM ESCOTT, Esq., said: Gentlemen, I return you all my most heartfelt thanks for the kind manner in which my name has been received. My honourable friend (Mr. Miles) has been pleased to say that he believed that, according to the best of my judgment, I have always done my duty. Gentlemen, I desire and claim no other character at your hands, nor at the hands of any party of Englishmen, than that which he has been pleased to give me. I have great pleasure in meeting you at these anniversaries, and I quite agree with the members for the county and other gentlemen who have alluded to the subject, in deprecating the introduction of any topic that can create a difference of opinion. I have no occasion to introduce any such topic. I have already, as well as my honourable friend Mr. Labouchere), had my say upon the failure of the potato crop. I have already appeared before my constituents and given them an account of my conduct in another place. But gentlemen when the health of one who by the favour of his countrymen, has been elevated to the high station of a Member of Parliament is proposed at a meeting of this kind, it is generally expected that he should say something; yet I declare that for my own part you having by your wise regulations excluded all questions of a political character, I confess it is somewhat difficult to know what to say, because I am not in a great meeting of practical farmers like this to talk about my own private affairs. That won't do. It is therefore difficult to know how to meet the emergency. Well you will forgive me if I ask you whether you have ever heard the story of old Richard Gubbins. (Laughter). If you have not I will endeavour to tell it. Old Richard Gubbins (I am not joking, for he really was a valued friend of mine) lives in the west country, and very much belies the opinion of a learned serjeant, that the farther you go west the more you are persuaded that wise men come from the east. Some years ago he married his only daughter to a rich tradesman, living in Milsom-street, Bath, to which city he frequently went: and happening once to meet each other on the coach, we went together and were much pleased with the journey. Richard was particularly pleased with the black horses, with their buckled up tails (laughter), and frequently expressed his conviction that the old four-wheel was the best possible conveyance that could or ever would be had. I remember how he admired the pulling up at Dunkerton-hill, myself sitting on the box, and he just behind me, with his knees on each side of me, forming not a very comfortable sort of arm-chair. (Roars of laughter.) Last fall I called on Richard, and after talking to him of the hardness of the times, and the distress of the farmers and other classes, I complained to him that we had never met on the road lately. Richard drew rather a heavy respiration, and said, "The road, sir! it was a very pleasant thing, but there's no coaching to Bath now: and I cannot stand a private conveyance, nor anything of that sort, not being a very rich man." I said it was true there were no coaches, and ventured to suggest the railroad. I told him that not only might he get to Bath, but that by leaving in the morning he would be up there in time to have dinner with his daughter, instead of being seven hours on the road. That moment I saw I had suggested an unfortunate topic. "Sir," said he, "do you suppose that after having lived like an honest man for 75 years, and after having been on a coach so often, I would submit to be drawn behind a smoke-box?" (Roars of laughter.) He asked also what sort of company I had kept to talk of such a subject in his house, and concluded by saying this—"Remember there is no politics here—it is the rule of the house. (Hear, and great laughter.) Suggestions for travelling on railroads may do very well for manufacturers and radicals, but not for Richard Gubbins, nor any of his kin." (Great laughter.) Now the fact is, gentlemen, that there are other Richard Gubbinses, and they do not all live in the west country. (Roars of laughter.) But, whether or not, I am willing to follow the rule of the house, and not speak about politics. I am rejoiced to meet you here, and whether we look to railroads or to buckled up tails of black horses, it will always be a pleasure to me to see men do their duty, at all times and in all places, in the respective vocations in which Providence has placed them. (Loud and long-continued cheering, and hearty laughter.)—The Chairman then said, after the pleasing exhibition they had had, he would ask them not only to show their esteem by what they presented to the labourers, but likewise to drink their good health. If he felt that there was anything to find fault with (this being his first attendance), it was this, that some of the premiums which had been awarded were not sufficiently high, and there was one class of competitors who could not be too highly rewarded, viz, those who had supported the largest families by their own industry, without parish relief. He begged the Society to withdraw the 10*s.* offered for this class, leaving the coat, waistcoat, and testimonial; and he should be most happy to give 5*l.* a year instead. (Loud cheers.) The labouring classes had to struggle with great difficulties, and when the meeting practically understood what those difficulties were—when they saw, as they had seen, aged men come forward—men bowed down with the weight of years; and when they heard how these poor men had maintained large families on very small means, without parochial relief, they must be surprised how they could have effected what they had done—how they could have supported their numerous children—and at the same time feel that such men could not be too highly praised and encouraged. Having said thus much, he would now ask the company to drink the health of those men who had done their work, and done it well—"The Labourers." (Loud cheers.)—The Chairman then next gave "Mr. Sanford." (Tremendous and long-continued cheering.)—E. A. Sanford, Esq., said my hon. friend has alluded to the unfortunate disease which has taken place among the potatoes, and he has rather forestalled me in some observations which I had intended to make; but there can be no doubt, from investigations that have been made by gentlemen who are able to give great science and knowledge to the subject, that autumn planting of potatoes is the most effectual mode of obtaining a good crop, to meet the apprehended inconveniences arising out of the present deficiency. The gentleman to whom Mr. Labouchere has referred, finds that exactly in proportion as the potatoes are planted early in the autumn, so has been the increase of produce—that the difference between October sowing and March sowing was as between 30 and 45; that is, 30 feet of drill planted in October would produce as much as 45 feet planted in March. It is essential that, in a season such as the present, every means should be taken to get a crop of potatoes as early as we can, and I strongly recommend every one of you (and you should also advise your cottagers to do so) immediately to put potatoes into the ground. You will find them perfectly safe from frost by putting them deep into the earth; and I will venture to say that the produce will be very great. Mr. Sanford thanked the meeting for the attention which had been given to his observations, and sat down amid loud and repeated rounds of applause.

Railways.

In accordance with the injunctions of the standing orders, which imperatively provided that plans and sections of projected lines should be lodged with the Board of Trade before midnight on the 30th, deposits for between 600 and 700 schemes, prepared to go to Parliament next session, were on Sunday night lodged with the Board of Trade, in compliance with the injunctions of the standing orders. Of the schemes whose notifications appeared in the Gazette, amounting to about 700, nearly all have thus effected the necessary lodgments, a far larger number, out of the thousand and one that appeared by prospectus, than was ever expected to have reached even this stage of railway maturity. There can be no question, however, that many of this large amount have effected only colourable compliance, in respect of plans, sections, and books of reference; but as a general rule, it is stated that the great and lateral lines connected with established companies, and those that ground claim for parliamentary support on the directness of their route, have succeeded in securing their safety so far as the mere preliminary deposit of plan and paper is concerned. Very few unsuccessful cases can be cited in the case of the Scotch lines, nearly all of which were safely lodged on Saturday. The promoters of the various Irish lines have been equally prompt, and very few are to be numbered amongst the rejected. All the 10 per cent. established lines have, generally speaking, been punctual in their deposits. Last year the number of lines returned as having deposited their plans and sections with the Board of Trade, amounted to 260. This year the number exceeds that of last by upwards of 400. There never was such a week of bustle in the annals of railways as the last. The majority of plans from the provinces were sent up by express trains, and it is whispered that in this respect those companies with the locomotives at their command, and to whom the lines belonged, availed themselves of this advantage to such an extent for the exclusive transmission of their own plans and sections, as actually to refuse special trains to their competitors. In one instance, however, they were adroitly out-generalled, and a stratagem was resorted to that for its originality may excite amusement. One of the established companies, with express powers at their command, peremptorily refused to the promoters of a competing line an express train for their deposits to town. Not to be outwitted, they hired an undertaker's hearse, placed plans, sections, and clerk inside, and despatched it by special train to town. During the last 48 hours Whitehall was a scene of the utmost disorder. The Board of Trade was blockaded and besieged by cabs, engineers, surveyors, solicitors, and Parliamentary agents, and lithographers. The most fearful exertions had been made by the latter to execute the lithographed plans in time. Many of these were but imperfectly done, and the plans for a great many of the lines were deposited with two-thirds in lithograph, and a third in manuscript tracings, which is looked upon, under the circumstances, as a sufficient compliance, lithograph not being imperatively necessary. Many of the metropolitan lithographers found it impossible to execute their contracts. One of the most eminent lithographers was compelled to bring over 400 lithographers from Belgium, and failed, nevertheless, with this reinforcement, in completing some of his plans. Some lithographers threw their contracts overboard, having been bribed by their opponents to give up the work, and in other cases charges are made of surreptitious and wilful pillages of stones. Extraordinary exertions were made by the parliamentary agents and solicitors, who brought to bear upon these matters all the engineering and surveying talent of the day. Special trains were running day and night, on all the principal lines, at an average charge of from 8*s.* to 10*s.* a mile; and so rapidly and numerously did they run on the Great Western, that one train on Sunday night ran into another which had been disabled, but all the parties having left the train, no lives were lost. Relays of post-horses, where express trains were not available, were in readiness in all parts of the kingdom, and similar messengers, with duplicate plans of those lodged with the Board of Trade, have been simultaneously scouring the country, on visits to the various clerks of the peace from John O'Groats' to the Land's-end. As the clock of the Horse Guards tolled 12, the doors of the Board of Trade were barred. At this juncture there was a tremendous rush to the interior of the hall, suffocatingly full of surveyors and agents, on the part of the representatives of three schemes, which had hoped by the appliances of desperate steaming and posting to have anticipated the momentous chime of 12. In this, as their blank countenances too plainly testified, they were deceived. One of these gentlemen, in a fit of chagrin, threw his ponderous pile of plans and sections with a desperate effort through the closing door, and thus, at the expense of the demolished lamplights, effected a deposit of his plan. Even on Monday disappointed agents continued to haunt the Board of Trade. In these cases, it is said, the deposits were received under protest, though it is clear that the lodgments are rendered void by the order of the Board of Trade. Fears may be fairly entertained that, though the legion of schemes, which made the deposits, succeeded in passing safely this second stage of standing orders, a large majority may fail in complying with the third and subsequent injunctions, more particularly with respect to the pecuniary deposits. To obviate such a contingency, it is considered probable that many lines, distinguished by their geographical relationship, will unite their capital, and coalesce for one common object.—An important correspondence has taken place between the Great Western and South-Western Companies. The directors of the latter company, by letter dated the 30th of October, express great surprise at the announcement of an intention to promote a new direct line between London and Exeter, by way of Hungerford, Westbury, and Yeovil, such plan never having been communicated to them or the Board of Trade. These and other events, they say, show that circumstances have so altered with respect to the question of further communication towards Exeter and Cornwall, that the principles which guided the Board of Trade in their report are no longer applicable. They, therefore, propose to address themselves immediately to the Board of Trade, and ascertain their opinion as to the formation by the South-Western Company of a line by Salisbury and Yeovil to Exeter and Cornwall. Consistently with this intention, they address a letter to Lord Dalhousie, requesting him to name a day for hearing a deputation from each of the companies. The Board of Trade declines to interfere; and, in a letter dated the 7th Nov., the directors of the South-Western declare that they have come to the conclusion that their company is at liberty to act as it shall deem advisable for its interests. The directors of the Great Western deny that they have broken the agreement of the 24th Jan., concerning which, in fact, the whole question arises; and consider the other company as guilty of a gross breach of faith towards them. In the meantime the Exeter Yeovil and Dorchester Company at a meeting at Exeter last week, agreed to lease their line in perpetuity at five and a half per cent., to the London and South-Western, and the Cornwall and Devon Central Railway Companies, or any of them; so that the amalgamated companies may have a direct line from London to the Lands' End, which will be a formidable opponent to the proposed Great Western line through the Pewsey Valley.—The Lancashire and North York Company have amalgamated with the Liverpool, Manchester, and Newcastle Junction. The Blackburn, Darwen, and Bolton, an existing railway, has also been amalgamated with the same line.—The East Lancashire Company is to amalgamate with the Blackburn and Preston, and the directors have also confirmed an agreement entered into between the promoters of the Liverpool, Ormskirk, and Preston. For the new line to Bacup and Crawshay Booth an additional capital of 300,000*l.* is to be raised by the creation of new shares; and opposition is to be offered to all projected companies which appear to interfere with the progress of these plans.—The Northern and Eastern Company have accepted the modified terms proposed by Mr. Hudson and the Eastern Counties Company, for the future management and regulation of the accounts of the joint proprietary. It is understood that the North London Junction and the Eastern Counties have resolved that a branch line shall be made from some point on the Eastern Counties at Bow to the North London line at Islington, so that the Eastern Counties may obtain a western terminus at Paddington, and a continuous line be formed from the Great Western at Paddington to the Eastern Counties, a link connecting the East and West of England.—The Brighton and Cheltenham, and the Nottingham and Gainsborough Companies have resolved to wind up, and repay the remnant of the deposit to the shareholders.—The adjourned Coroner's inquest on the body of the policeman Stubbs, who was killed by the collision on the railway near Barnsley, was resumed in Leeds on Monday, and a verdict of "Manslaughter" was returned against Thomas Wheatby, the driver of the pilot engine, that ran into the disabled train.

Prices and Traffic, by permission, from the List of Messrs. Hill, Fawcett, & Hill, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

Name of Railway. Those marked thus * are not yet opened.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Week ending between Nov. 26. & Dec. 2.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Corresponding Week. 1844.	6 Mos. Dividend Per Share. † 3 Mos.	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid up.	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock.
	£	£	£ s. d.	£	£	£
Birmingham, Glo'ster		2,055	2 0 0	100	all	122-4
Bristol, Birmingham
Bristol, Exeter			1 8 0	100	70	75-80
Bristol, Glo'ster			1 0 0	50	30	30-4
Chester, Holyhead	*	*		50	15	14-15
Eastern Counties	6,196	3,634	0 3 0†	avr.	14½	19½-¾
Eastern Union				50	20
Do. Extension				25	1⅛
Edinburgh, Glasgow	2,418	2,063	1 5 0	50	all	65 7
Grand Junction			2 10 0†	100	all
Great North of England		1,557	3 0 0	100	all	295-1/
Great Western	16,196	13,281	3 4 0	100	80	145-8
Gt. South. & Western (I.)	*	*	*	50	15	18-20
Do. Extension	*	*	*	50	2½	2½-10
Hull, Selby				50	all	100-2
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*	*	50	25	39-41
Liverpool, Manchester		4 316	4 10 0	100	all
London, Birmingham	32,014	13,693	5 0 0	s.k.	100	209-13
London, Blackwall	686	708	0 3 0	avr.	16⅜	8½-9
London, Brighton	4,092	3,896	1 10 0	50	all	60-½
London, Croydon	1,231	1,009	0 8 0	avr.	13½	18½-19
London, Greenwich				avr.	19½	24-24½
London, South-Western	5 284	5,021	2 0 0	avr.	41½	71-6
Manchester, Birmingham	3,989	2,975	1 0 0	40	40	69-71
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	930	830	2 14 0	128	96
Manchester, Leeds, Hull	5,731		2 16 0	100	73	126-36
Midland	16,132	8,640	2 2 6	stk.	100	139 41
Do. Birmingham, Derby				stk.	100	110-14
Newcastle, Carlisle	1,930	1,668	2 10 0	100	all
Newcastle, Darlington	2,668	1,031	4 0 0	25	all	50-5
North British	*	*	*	25	15	22-3
Northern, Eastern			1 2 6	50	45	64-6
Norwich, Brandon				20	14	21-2
Preston, Wyre	525	307		50	all
Sheffield, Manchester	1,126	678	5 p. Cent	100	95
South Devon	*	*	*	50	20	26-8
South-Eastern, Dover	5,198	4,035	0 13 4	avr.	33⅓	34-6
Yarmouth, Norwich			0 10 0	20	all	25-7
York, North Midland	5,056	2,259	2 10 0	50	all	100-5
Do. Scarboro' Branch	*	*	*	25	all	48-52
Do. Selby			0 12 8	50	20	63-5
French Railways.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*	*	20	8	8 ½
Orleans, Vierzon	*	*	*	20	10	14-16
Orleans, Bordeaux	*	*	*	20	4	10-½
Paris, Orleans	5,797	4,832	1 0 2½	20	all	45-7
Paris, Rouen	4,923	3,972	0 19 2	20	all	36½-7½
Rouen, Havre				20	14	27 8

Ireland.

Dublin.—The magistrates of North Tipperary at a meeting held at Nenagh on the 10th ult, Lord Dunalley in the chair, adopted an address to the Lord Lieutenant on the alarming state of that county. This address gives a frightful picture of the disorganised state of society which still prevails there, and expresses the strongest apprehensions that the late murder of Mr. Clarke is only the forerunner of still more imminent danger. The address states that "the varied character of agrarian outrage seems now to have settled into a systematic course of private assassination, which utterly defies all the ordinary powers of the law; and unless the government think fit to demand from the Legislature the assistance of some more stringent act than any now in force, to enable them to put down this frightful system, we much fear that the very foundations of society will be shaken. A wholesome dread and terror of the law does not exist, but on the contrary our county seems to be in the possession of a set of hired assassins whom the law cannot reach; and we are only surprised that among the middle and lower classes, in their unprotected state, individuals can occasionally be found bold enough to come forward as witnesses in a court of justice. We feel convinced that all sources of information are dried up through the sympathy of the ill affected with the evil doers, and the intimidation exercised towards the well disposed." The Lord Lieutenant, in reply, expresses his sympathy with the friends of Mr. Clarke, promises the magistrates all the assistance that is afforded by the existing laws, and in regard to their inadequacy to protect life and property, his Excellency states that he has caused the resolutions of the magistrates to be submitted to the "responsible advisers of the Crown." The magistrates disappointed at this answer have since published an "Address to the British Public" on the subject, giving fresh details to show that all confidence is at an end, and that in the present state of things, Tipperary is at the mercy of a band of hired assassins, whose blow falls upon all alike and follows the assertion of the most ordinary rights of society. They state that "From August, 1844, to February, 1845, there occurred in this riding of Tipperary 16 murders, 16 attempted murders, and 52 cases of firing into houses, robberies for arms, grievous assaults, and threatening notices. To each succeeding Government have representations and recommendations been forwarded from the magistracy of this county, similar to those in our late address, and the answer received is in spirit still the same as though the day were gone by when measures of coercion for Ireland could be proposed to Parliament with any chance of success. We hold a different opinion. Jealousy may exist as to anything like an infringement on political rights. We confine ourselves as magistrates to the recommendation of extraordinary measures when all else has failed, to prevent the continuance of a system of terror and assassination, and in this righteous cause we deem ourselves entitled to call on good men of all parties, without distinction, for their support and assistance. The measures which we especially recommend are as follow—first, that a modified insurrection act be placed on the statute-book, to be resorted to by Government only in the case of any particular barony of a county, which shall appear to the Lord-Lieutenant and Privy Council to require the same, and secondly, the creation of a law imposing a fine on any district where a murder, or attempt to murder, shall have occurred, the proceeds to be paid over to the family of the injured party. The insurrection act to which we refer would empower the authorities to enter all houses by night. Persons absent from their homes, or strangers discovered in houses not their usual place of residence, would be obliged to account for themselves, and, failing to do so satisfactorily, might be brought before a military tribunal or a special commission, and subjected to severe punishment. Such a measure would at least afford security during the night to the houses of the humbler classes, who might then be induced with less reluctance to come forward as witnesses in a court of justice. The bad characters, most of whom are well known to the police, would soon be expelled from the country, and detection would be more likely to follow the commission of the crime of murder, inasmuch as the perpetrators of such acts are usually strangers who come from a distance. In the sanguine hope that we have not in vain addressed this remonstrance to the British public, and that the majority of our representatives, of all shades of political opinion, may be prepared to advocate in Parliament the cause of true freedom, and fearlessly stand forward in defence of the outraged rights of humanity, we remain, fellow countrymen, your faithful servants." Signed by Lord Dunalley, as chairman, and 30 other magistrates.—A meeting of the magistrates of Westmeath, convened by the lieutenant, the Marquis of Westmeath, has also been held. The proceedings were conducted in secret; but it is said that the resolutions, which were of the strongest character that language could convey, were carried unanimously; and that between 40 and 50 magistrates were present. An address to the Lord-Lieutenant was agreed upon, representing the frightfully disorganised state of the county; and praying protection for life and property. An expression of the marked thanks and approbation of the magistrates, accompanied by congratulations at his fortunate escape from assassination, and the gallant defence made by him, was voted to Sir Francis Hopkins, and signed by every person present.—The papers contain accounts of further murders and attempted murders in different parts of the country. In Tipperary, since the meeting of magistrates, on the 10th, two extensive robberies of arms have taken place. Mr. Lloyd, of Lorgford-house, has been fired at; a poor man named Guilmartin, at Lateragh, has been also fired at through the window of his dwelling, and severely wounded in the head; and a poor man named Molowney, at Drom, near Templemore, has had his house entered by four men, who beat him to such an extent, that his death ensued in about 24 hours. In county Roscommon, at the residence of Horatio Lawder, Esq., near Elphin, while Mr. Lawder was superintending a parcel of workmen doing some work in the yard, three armed men approached him, and demanded the arms from his house, which, on being refused, they proceeded to enter and take the arms by force. Mr. Lawder courageously resisted, when they attempted to shoot him, but luckily their pistols missed fire. A carpenter at work in the house came to Mr. Lawder's rescue, when the ruffians made off. The most fearful part of the narrative as regards the state of the country is, that not one of the men at work in the yard who were present at the entire scene, attempted to assist Mr. Lawder on the occasion. —On Sunday evening a man, named James Costelloe, a tenant of Burton Persse, Esq., of Moyada Castle, county Galway, was murdered on the townland of Killeshulan, near Freshford. The unfortunate man was seated at supper with his family, and was shot through the window by some unknown assassin, who took deadly aim from the outside, and killed him on the spot. —On Wednesday week, Miss Irvine, sister to the clerk of the crown for the county Fermanagh, was found dead under the feet of her horse, in the stables attached to her house, which stands almost in the suburbs of Enniskillen. She is supposed to have been murdered by her female servant, who has been committed for trial on the capital charge—The jury at the inquest on the 17 persons who were drowned in the late accident in the royal canal, have returned a verdict of manslaughter against the man who was steering the boat, with a deodand on the boat of 100*l*.—It is officially announced that Government have selected Belfast as the site for the Northern College; and the local papers state that the appointment of Principal has been conferred on Dr. Thomson, Professor of Mathematics in the University of Glasgow.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association was held on Monday in Conciliation-hall, Mr. Fitzgerald, M.P. for Tipperary, in the chair.—Mr. O'Connell observed that the painful duty devolved upon him of announcing to the Association the death of the Hon. J. Hely Hutchinson, Esq. The loss of that gentleman was a calamity to Ireland. He had now to return his especial thanks to the "gutter Commissioner of the Times," for being the means of drawing forth such testimonies in favour of the "Proprietor of Darrynane," whom the "Commissioner" had so foully libelled. He (Mr. O'Connell) had been most generously defended against his attack by the Conservative press of Ireland, and, in particular, by the Evening Mail and Evening Packet. He was completely overcome by such chivalrous, such noble conduct, and he now registered a vow—never again to speak disparagingly of the Conservative press of his country. They might abuse him, or they might not—just as they pleased—but never henceforth would he utter a word against them. What a contrast did he find between the Irish and the English Conservative! The Times professed to be Conservative, but it was the greatest liar and calumniator that ever existed.—Mr. Smith O'Brien, M.P., brought forward the report of the parliamentary committee on the subject of the grand jury laws, and afterwards adverted at some length to the state of public affairs. It was impossible, he said, for them not to notice the position of affairs in England at the present moment with regard to the Corn-laws. Within the preceding week Lord John Russell, who had always been found the advocate of a moderate protection, had declared his determination to co-operate with the Anti-Corn-law League, which was pledged to achieve the abolition of all the duties on the importation of food. Such was the success which attended the perseverance of the League in the assertion of a great principle, and afforded to the repealers most ample encouragement. The leaders of the League had stated that they were determined to support no party which would not assist them in repealing the Corn-laws. It was therefore impossible, under these circumstances, for Lord J. Russell to unite his scattered forces, unless he formed a junction with the League. There was another topic to which he wished to advert—namely, the possibility of a war with America. He could not contemplate such an event without the deepest emotion—it was one that could not be deplored too deeply. He knew that the population of this country were so fond of fighting that they had a presumptive feeling in favour of war, and some of their forefathers remembered the high prices of 1815, forgetting the re-action which took place, and which ruined such numbers of the gentry of the country. He would regard a war with America as a most disastrous affair. He had no objection that England should send her troops to fight her battles in America, but he had an objection to her sending his countrymen there. He had no objection to her sending her army to fight her battles on barren fields and sterile plains, but he did object to her sending the Irish there; but he would tell her that they were ready to protect their own land from every enemy. They did not desire to transfer their country to France or America. What they required was, to obtain Ireland for the Irish, and with the blessing of God another generation would not pass till that wished-for event would be accomplished.—Mr. O'Connell then landed in amidst much cheering 100*l*. from Halifax and 10*l*. from Wexford. After some hearty abuse of the Morning Chronicle for denying that Cromwell massacred the people of Wexford, Mr. O'Connell remarked that the magistrates of Tipperary had called on the Government to introduce coercion into that county, but he (Mr. O'Connell) would call on the Government to enact a measure of coercion which would compel the landlords to do justice to their tenants. The rent for the week was 262*l*. 7*s*.

Scotland.

Glasgow.—Cooke's Circus, a large building in this city for equestrian performances was totally destroyed by fire last week, only 12 days after the destruction of the City Theatre. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Law.

Exchequer Chamber.—The Piracy and Murder Case on Board the Felicidade and Echo.—The Judges of the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, assembled on Wednesday in Sergeant's Inn, for the purpose of hearing the arguments of civilians against the conviction in the case of piracy and murder which was tried before Mr. Baron Platt, at the last Exeter assizes. Dr. Addams, for the prisoners, opened the argument, and contended at great length, that the prisoners had been guilty of no act of piracy. He was sure the prisoners had done nothing which could justify their being charged with the offence of piracy, within the meaning of the acts and treaties, and therefore he was prepared to urge that the Felicidade was wrongly seized. Those Acts and instructions required that the capture should not be made by an officer in the Royal Navy of less rank than a Lieutenant. But here the capture had been made by the Echo, which was only under the command of a midshipman. The Echo, however, it was said, must be considered in the light of a tender or jolly-boat of the Wasp, which was under the command of a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy, namely, Lieutenant Stupart. But a case had been cited to their Lordships which wholly disposed of this point. He denied that the prisoners had concocted a plot to murder all the English on board the Felicidade: but they did concert a plan to take all necessary steps to recover their vessel, and they had a perfect right to do so. In conclusion, he submitted to their Lordships that these parties had been wrongfully captured and detained, and the steps they took to recover their liberty were justified by the law of nations, and by no means prohibited by the treaty between this country and the Brazils.—Dr. Harding followed on the same side. He contended that the prisoners had been guilty of no offence against the law of nations, not even supposing they had actually been engaged in the slave-trade. He next submitted to their Lordships that they had been guilty of no offence under the treaties existing between England and the Brazils, therefore they were illegally and wrongfully captured. He followed up this argument by protesting that they were not within the criminal jurisdiction of the British empire; and concluded by arguing, that admitting they had committed an offence against the law of nations, it was of much less importance than the crime of murder.—Sir J. Dodson, Queen's Advocate, then replied on the part of the Crown. He said it was contended on the other side, that because the Felicidade had not slaves on board at the time she arrived off the coast of Africa, she was not liable to be detained and dealt with as a pirate; but if their lordships would refer to an Act of Parliament, which had been much quoted in the course of the inquiry, they would find this was not the case. The Act was the 7th and 8th George IV., which, together with the treaty itself to which it had relation, declared that after the expiration of three years after the ratification of a treaty which had just previously been entered into between this country and the Brazils, it should not be lawful for the subjects of the Emperor of Brazil to be engaged in carrying on the slave-trade, under any pretence, or in any way whatsoever. Their lordships would observe the terms of the treaty and the Act, "under any circumstances, or in any manner whatsoever." He maintained, then, that under their provisions these parties were pirates, and Lieutenant Stupart was quite justified in deeming them such, and in directing their capture accordingly. By the first article of the convention of 1822, British cruisers were empowered to seize Brazilian vessels that might be suspected of having been or being engaged in the slave-trade, and take them into a British port for examination. If, upon that examination, the vessel was found to be a slaver, and to have had slaves on board, she was liable to condemnation; and if it were only on this ground alone, he should contend that Lieutenant Stupart was justified in capturing the Felicidade for the purpose of examination.—Dr. Addams and Dr. Harding replied, and the court adjourned to consider their judgment, which will not be publicly given, but communicated to the Secretary of State.

Police.—The Case of the Ship Tory.—During the past week, Mr. Broderip, the magistrate of the Thames Police Court has been occupied in hearing evidence against Capt. Johnstone, late master of the Tory, who as our readers know, brought a charge of piracy against his crew, but was in the course of the inquiry ordered to change places with the accused men, and put upon his trial for the crime of wilful murder. The evidence now taken consisted of a series of horrible cruelties practised by the captain upon his men, and it has only happened once before that such appalling disclosures have been made in a Court of Justice. The only one case at all resembling this on record occurred about three years since, when a Captain Stewart, master of a small merchant ship bound to Cork, while labouring under insanity brought on by drunkenness, murdered the whole of his crew, except a boy. He is now the inmate of a lunatic asylum in Ireland. In the present case, owing to the vague and contradictory nature of the various statements elicited, the inquiry is involved in extreme doubt and difficulties, but enough has been established to show that three deaths from violence have taken place, that several men have been severely wounded, and that the vessel, from the period of leaving the Island of Ascension, was more like a pandemonium than a well-regulated vessel, exhibiting a series of horrible atrocities almost unparalleled. Our space does not permit us to give even an epitome of the lengthy evidence; but it will be sufficient to state that the captain after leaving Hong Kong was in a state of continual excitement from drink. After passing Ascension, he amused himself by ordering men into irons, and cutting at them with a sabre. He cut up Mars, the second mate, piecemeal whilst in irons, and cut a piece about half the size of a man's hand off his head, with the hair upon it. Mars was frequently sent for to the cabin, where the captain mutilated him severely, and the blood flowed dreadfully from his wounds. Mars prayed for the laws of his country, but the captain said he would have his law. He then ordered the men to carry the poor man upon deck while in a dying state, and directed the men to squeeze him with coils of rope round his loins; soon after which he died, and was consigned to the sea. In another case, that of Thomas Reason, a seaman, it was proved that the captain called him into the cabin, and cut and stabbed him with a sword and bayonet until he died, when the crew carried him upon deck and buried him in the sea. In a third case, that of William Rambert, the chief mate, it was proved that the captain put him in irons, and cut him over the head with a cutlass, so that no feature of his face could be distinguished. He then chased him round the deck with a cutlass, when the mate jumped overboard and drowned himself. At the same it was proved that he had other men in irons in the mizen top, whom he used to cut and maim in the same manner, while he wounded others by firing pistol-balls at them so near that the face of one of them is still black with the gunpowder that has lodged beneath the cuticle. In addition to the three distinct charges of wilful murder, several of the more serious assaults will be strictly investigated. Amongst these are the cases of Gair, Cone, and a poor man named Morris, who is at present on board the Dreadnought, suffering from a pistol-shot wound, which at present prevents his attending the court. The ball, it is said, passed through the fleshy part of Morris's thigh, and lodged in the calf of his leg, whilst he was in a kneeling posture before the captain. Mr. Broderip on Wednesday remanded the prisoner until Tuesday, when these cases will be gone into. At all these examinations the prisoner was in a deplorable condition, and supported by two policemen. When at the bar he convulsively grasped the front of the dock with his hands, and rested his head upon them, as if unconscious of what was passing.

Miscellaneous.

Mr. Faraday's New Discoveries.—At a meeting of the Royal Society last week, the Marquis of Northampton in the chair, Mr. Faraday's paper "On the Magnetisation of Light, and the Illumination of Magnetic Lines of Force," was read. It stated that for a long time past Mr. Faraday had felt a strong persuasion, derived from philosophical considerations, that among the several powers of nature which, in their various forms of operation on matter, produce different classes of effects, there exists an intimate relation; that they are connected by a common origin, have a reciprocal dependence on one another, and are capable, under certain conditions, of being converted the one into the other. Already have electricity and magnetism afforded evidence of this mutual convertibility; and, in extending his views to a wider sphere, Mr. Faraday became convinced that these powers must have relations with light also. Until lately his endeavours to detect these relations were unsuccessful; but at length, on instituting a more searching interrogation of nature, he arrived at the discovery recorded in his paper, namely, that a ray of light may be electrified and magnetised, and that lines of magnetic force may be rendered luminous. The fundamental experiment revealing this new and important fact, which establishes a link of connection between the great departments of nature, is the following:—A ray of light issuing from an argand lamp is first polarised in the horizontal plane by reflection from a glass mirror, and then made to pass for a certain space through glass composed of silicated borate of lead, on its emergence from which it is viewed through a Nichol's eyepiece, capable of revolving on a horizontal axis, so as to interrupt the ray, or allow it to be transmitted alternately, in the different phases of its revolution. The glass through which the ray passes, and which Mr. Faraday terms the dimagnetic, is placed between the two poles of a powerful electro-magnet arranged in such a position as that the line of magnetic forces resulting from their combined action shall coincide with, or differ but little from, the course of the ray in its passage through the glass. It was then found that if the eyepiece had been so turned as to render the ray invisible to the observer looking through the eyepiece before the electric current had been established, it becomes visible whenever, by the completion of the circuit, the magnetic force is in operation; but instantly becomes again invisible on the cessation of that force by the interruption of the circuit. Further investigation showed that the magnetic action caused the plane of polarisation of the polarised ray to rotate; for the ray was again rendered visible by turning the eyepiece to a certain extent; and that the direction of the rotation impressed upon the ray when the magnetic influence was issuing from the south pole, and proceeding in the same direction as the polarised ray, was righthanded, or similar to that of the motion of the hands of a watch, as estimated by an observer at the eyepiece. The direction in which the rotation takes place will, of course, be reversed by reversing either the course of the ray or the poles of the magnet. Hence it follows that the solarised ray is made to rotate in the same direction as the currents of positive electricity are circulating, both in the helices composing the electro-magnet, and also as the hypothetical currents which, according to Ampère's theory, circulate in the substance of a steel magnet. The rotatory action was found to be always directly proportional to the intensity of the magnetic force, but not to that of the electric current; and also to be proportional to the length of that portion of the ray which receives the influence. The interposition of substances which occasion no disturbance of the magnetic forces produced no change in these effects. Magnets consisting only of electric helices acted with less power than when armed with iron, and in which magnetic action was consequently more strongly developed. Mr. Faraday pursues the inquiry by varying in a great number of ways the circumstances in which this newly-discovered influence is exerted; and finds that the modifications thus introduced in the results are all explicable by reference to the general law above stated. Thus the effect is produced, though in a less degree, when the polarised ray is subjected to the action of an ordinary magnet, instead of one that derives its power from a voltaic current; and it is also weaker when a single pole only is employed. It is, on the other hand, increased by the addition of a hollow cylinder of iron, placed within the helix, the polarised ray traversing its axis being then acted upon with great energy. Helices act with equal power in any part of the cylindric space which they inclose. The heavy glass used in these experiments was found to possess in itself no specific magneto-inductive action. Different media differ extremely in the degree in which they are capable of exerting the rotatory power over a polarised ray of light. It is a power which has no apparent relation to the other physical properties whether chemical or mechanical, of these bodies. Yet, however, it may differ in its degree, it is always the same in kind; the rotation it effects is invariably in one direction; dependent, however, on the direction of the ray and of the magnetic force. In this respect it differs essentially from the rotatory power naturally possessed by many bodies, such as quartz, sugar, oil of turpentine, &c., which exhibit the phenomena of circular polarisation; for in some of those the rotation takes place to the right, and in others to the left. When, therefore, such substances are employed as dimagnetics, the natural and the superinduced powers tend to produce either the same or opposite rotations; and the resulting effects are modified according as they are cumulative in the former case, and differential in the latter. In the concluding section of the paper Mr. Faraday enters into general considerations on the nature of the newly-discovered power of electricity and magnetism over light, and remarks that all these powers possess in common a duality of character which constitutes them a peculiar class, and affords an opening, which before was wanting, for the application of these powers to the investigation of this and other radiant agencies. The phenomena thus brought to light confirm the views entertained by him relative to the constitution of matter as being spheres of power, for the operation of which the conception of a solid nucleus is not necessary; and leads to the presumption that the influence of magnetism on bodies which exhibit no magnetic properties consists in producing in them a state of electric tension tending to a current; while on iron, nickel, and other bodies susceptible of magnetism, currents are actually established by the same influence.

Destruction of the Borneo Pirates.—The Gazette of Friday contained a series of despatches from Rear-Admiral Sir Thomas Cochrane, Commander-in-chief on the East India station, giving an account of an expedition which he had made, with the squadron under his command, against the pirates of Borneo. The details of the expedition may be regarded, in some degree, as a set-off to the late disastrous news from New Zealand. The scene of this gallant exploit is Maluda, a town to the northward of Borneo, the stronghold of the most ferocious description of pirates, strongly defended by two stockaded forts of eight and three guns each, and with the view of obstructing the approach to the place, and to expose the assailants to a most destructive fire, a heavy boom, lashed by cables and chains, was strongly moored across the river, about 200 yards below the town. The attack was made on August 19. The ships which composed the squadron were the Agincourt, 72, Commander Lyster; the Vestal, 28, Captain Charles Talbot; Dædalus, 26, Captain M'Quhae; Wolverine, 16, Commander Clifford; Cruiser, 16, Commander Fanshawe; Vixen, steam-sloop, Commander Giffard; and the East India Company's steam vessels Nemesis, Commander Russell, and Pluto, Commander Ayres. From these ships 24 boats were selected, one of them having the Agincourt's field piece, and nine being gun-boats, those from the Honourable Company's steamers having been manned from the crew of the Agincourt. The command of this force was entrusted by the admiral to Captain Talbot, of the Vestal; Commander Lyster, of the Agincourt, seconding him. They started from their ships at daylight on the 19th August, in two divisions, and had to row two miles before they came to the boom above-mentioned. To storm the forts this boom had to be removed. Its destruction occupied above 40 minutes, after which everything was carried in the most gallant style. The achievement appears to have struck terror into the pirates, and might well have done so, considering the dashing character of the exploit, and its complete success, showing that there is nothing that British sailors and marines will not accomplish if well commanded. The loss sustained by the squadron was 7 killed, and 14 wounded. Among the officers, Mr. Leonard Gibbard, mate of the Wolverine, was killed; and Lieut. Heard, of the Agincourt, formerly of the Samarang; and Mr. Pyne, second master of the Vestal, wounded. The following extract from a private letter from one of the officers contains a more graphic account of the affair than that contained in the official despatches:—"The fleet started for Borneo, from Singapore, in July last, touching at Serawak, and thence sailed for Borneo, where the Sultan, who nominally possesses the country, lives. This place being situate up a river, the ships could not get up on account of their great draught of water, consequently the only vessels that could go up were the three steamers Vixen, Nemesis, and Pluto, with the Admiral and all the captains, and about 200 marines on board. The marines were sent as a guard of honour, but, in the end, proved rather valuable coadjutors. They were received very civilly by the Sultan, who appeared delighted to see them; not so, however, a brother of his, and who is a sort of pretender to the throne. He sent a message to the Sultan, "that if he did not send the foreigners away, his brother would most certainly come down, take the vessels, and cut all the English throats." This threat much alarmed the Sultan, who immediately went to the Admiral to request he would depart if he had any regard for his life. The Admiral, however, not being a man to be frightened at trifles, laughed at him, much to the astonishment of the Sultan, who concluded that the English were all mad. The Admiral then sent a message to the Sultan's brother, to say that his object in coming there was peace and not war, but that he was quite as well prepared for one as the other, and advised him, at the same time, to keep a civil tongue in his head. This he would not listen to; but the next morning he came down, with a number of men, to the two forts, near the position of the three steamers, and opened fire upon them, which we lost no time in returning, and in almost as short a time as I am telling you the forts were demolished by shells, the marines landed, and the man that would fight, with the miserable rabble that composed his army, ran off to the hills as fast as their legs would carry them. The guns (brass, and very valuable) were all taken and given to the Sultan, together with everything of value that could be found, and then the Sultan's rival's place was set on fire and burnt to the ground. The Sultan appeared much pleased at this, and concluded upon the spot a treaty of alliance, &c., with the English. Our loss was only one man killed and two or three wounded; that of the enemy is supposed to have been very great. Two prisoners, or rather men who had been prisoners to a set of pirates, and had made their escape, were found here, and, from their information, the Admiral decided upon proceeding with the squadron to the place pointed out by them, at the north end of Borneo, to exterminate the pirates, and teach them a lesson as to English punishment for piracy. We arrived there on the 17th August last. It was an immense bay, at the head of which was a large river divided at its mouth into several branches, up one of which the pirate colony was situate. To all appearance no one would suppose that any human being was ever created there, for as far as the eye could reach there was one mass of impenetrable jungle; nevertheless, in its recesses were concealed a horde of the most sanguinary ruffians, whose greatest pride and glory is the murder of an European. This place, then, it was resolved to destroy, and, to effect a consummation so devoutly to be wished for, an expedition, consisting of three steamers and about 700 men was despatched under the command of Captain Talbot, of the Vestal. On reaching the mouth of the branch of the river, it was found to be too shallow to allow the passage of the steamers, so, as a dernier ressort, we were obliged to take to the boats, with about 350 seamen and 200 marines, and see what we could do with them. This was on the 18th August, about 3 P.M., and, as darkness soon set in, it was deemed advisable to anchor and wait for daylight, knowing the treacherous disposition of the Malays, or pirates, and the disadvantage we should be under did we attack them at night, from their superior knowledge of the country. In the morning we all roused up, and, about 7 A.M. on the 19th, we started up one of the most beautiful rivers I ever saw. There were a great number of monkeys, birds, and alligators, but no Malays. After proceeding about ten miles up, two boats pulled a-head to reconnoitre, and after pulling for about three miles, on rounding an abrupt point, we came in full sight of the pirates' position, which consisted of two batteries of eight very heavy guns on each side of the river, in addition to several large brass wall pieces, and other weapons calculated to do a great deal of mischief. On coming in sight a tremendous row immediately ensued, calling the garrison to arms, and in two minutes the batteries were swarming with men, armed à la sauvage, with shield and spear. About 200 yards below the batteries was an immense boom across the river for the purpose of preventing vessels from approaching the town. Having observed all that was necessary, we pulled back to the other boats, and having made arrangements for proceeding, the plan was this—the smaller boats were to advance and cut away the boom, and the large boats (of which there were 10) with carronades on board, were to cover them by their fire during the operation. This being arranged, off we started. Directly we were seen again, a flag of truce was sent out to us, and after a great deal of palaver to no purpose, returned to the batteries. In about five minutes it was again sent, but with no better success; and it had scarcely got back when the enemy opened fire from the three gun batteries, and the action then became general on both sides. The boom was the great obstacle, occupying 55 minutes in cutting it away; the whole of which time we were under a most galling fire, which killed 10 and wounded 15, some of them severely. But amply were they revenged. No quarter was given or asked; every Malay seen was hunted down and shot. We then landed, and in a short time destroyed all the stores, burnt every house down in the place, spiked and destroyed all the guns, and made, in the brief space of two hours, what was a flourishing town in the morning a perfect desert. The loss of the enemy was very great." The admiral, at the close of his despatch, adds:—"Two or three chiefs are known to have fallen on the present occasion, and there is every reason to believe that Scheriff Osman, so formidable to all the neighbouring country, and whose valour was worthy of a better cause, is among the number slain; at least I have certain information that he was carried off badly wounded; but whether dead or living, I consider his influence to be entirely annihilated, and his confederacy with various piratical chiefs in the archipelago broken up; for his power as much depended upon his being the encourager of other piratical tribes, and their supplier with goods in exchange for slaves, as in the force naturally at his command. I may add that, among many other articles of European workmanship, a bell belonging to the ship Guilhelm Ludwig, of Bremen, was found in the town. This vessel was supposed to have been wrecked on the Garsi Isles, about October or November last, but nothing has been heard of the crew."

PHOSPHORIC RAT POISON.—This preparation is offered to the Public with the greatest confidence, being decidedly superior to all those poisons containing arsenic and other minerals. It is most greedily eaten by rats and mice as long as it is offered to them and invariably proves certain destruction. Prepared only by EDWARD PURSER, 40, New Bridge-street, London. Sold in pots, with full directions for use, at 4*s*., 8*s*., and 20*s*. each.

BAKER'S PHEASANTRY, Beaufort-street, King's-road, Chelsea. By special appointment to the QUEEN and H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT.

PHEASANT POULTS.—Gentlemen stocking their preserves are respectfully informed they can be supplied with any quantity of TAME BRED AND WILD PHEASANTS, as above, also a great variety of useful and ornamental Water Fowl, Domestic Poultry, including Malay, Cochin China, Dorking, Spanish, &c., Fancy Bantams, &c., &c., 3, Half-moon-passage, Gracechurch-street.

WANTED, as FOREMAN for the Advertiser, who is connected with the Seed Trade, in the neighbourhood of one of the largest Market Towns in Lancashire, at the commencement of the new year, an honest, steady, and persevering Man; to such a one, who is experienced in the Propagation and Cultivation of Hothouse and Greenhouse Plants, Florist Flowers, and plants in general, a liberal salary will be given; and as the situation will be permanent, no person need apply who is not possessed of the above qualifications.—Address, stating where lived at, how long, and what situation filled, with salary expected, to A. Z., Gardeners' Chronicle Office.

WANTED by WHITLEY and OSBORN, of Fulham, a PROPAGATOR and PLANT FOREMAN.—Apply by letter only. N.B.—None need apply whose character for sobriety, diligence, and ability, will not bear the strictest investigation.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, a native of Scotland, 32 years of age, who has had extensive practice in every department of his profession, and can be highly recommended by his late employer, whom he served nearly six years.—Direct to X. R., Messrs. Lee's Nursery, Hammersmith.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, 32 years of age, who understands his Profession in all its branches, and can be well recommended. No one need apply where less than two men are kept.—Direct to G. B., Messrs. Whitley and Osborn's Nursery, Fulham, Middlesex.

AS GARDENER.—A Lady is anxious to procure a situation for a Gardener, who has lived sixteen years in her family. He has a good practical knowledge of his business, is a most trustworthy obliging man, and would have no objection to look after a cow, and make himself generally useful.—Direct to J. E., at Mr. Catleugh's, Florist, Hans Place, Chelsea.

A RESPECTABLE YOUNG MAN, aged 22, wishes to get into a large Establishment with a good Practical Gardener; he has had three years' practice in the general Forcing line, and now wishes to obtain a little practice in the Kitchen and Flower Garden. He will give 5*l*. at the going-in to any one that will take him where there is a good collection of plants.—Direct to J. J., at Mr. Newble, 4, Caroline-place, Deptford, Kent.

TO COUNTRY SEEDSMEN.

A YOUNG MAN, respectably connected, wishes for a situation (out of the house.)—Direct to H. H. H., care of Mr. Clark, Seedsman, Bishopsgate-street, London.

LAND AGENCY.

MR. DONALDSON, Professor of Agriculture in the Agricultural College, Hoddesdon, Herts, and author of several Agricultural Works, wishes to be employed in the Management of Landed Property, occasional or permanent. Mr. DONALDSON was regularly bred to practical Agriculture with the most eminent farmers and breeders in Britain, and has had a very varied and extensive practice of the art on the estates of Noblemen of the highest rank. Has been much employed in modern Draining and Planting, in the Erection and Repairs of Farm Buildings, in the Letting of Lands and Drawing of Rents, and in the general Management of Landed Property. Mr. DONALDSON may be consulted on Agricultural Subjects on easy terms, and permanent services obtained at moderate rate. High references for character and capability be given if required.—Hoddesdon, Dec. 6.

TO LANDED PROPRIETORS.

THE Advertiser who has for several years had the management of considerable estates in England, with their Gardens, Pleasure-grounds, Buildings, Woods, and Plantations, is desirous of a similar engagement. He has lately returned from a minute survey of the improved modes of draining and manufacture of draining pipes and tiles at present in practice in the East and Midlothians of Scotland, and has for some time been testing the most approved foreign and English manures as applied to the luxuriant growth of Garden-plants, Agricultural produce, &c.

His references are of superior character, and his testimonials unexceptionable.—Applications addressed to W. M., 21, Prior-street, Greenwich, are respectfully solicited.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1845.

SCOTTISH WIDOWS' FUND AND LIFE ASSURANCE.

Capital accumulated and invested upwards of £1,590,000: Annual Revenue upwards of £235,000. The amount of capital sums insured since the commencement of the Society is upwards of £7,000,000 sterling. The next periodical investigation takes place on 31st December, 1845.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Parties are particularly reminded of the important benefits to be secured by entry before the close of this year, both as regards the advantage of a full year's standing with reference to the profits of the current year, as well as that of coming within the present period of investigation.

Forms of Proposals, and every necessary information may be obtained at the head office, 5, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh; or at any of the Society's agencies.

JOHN MACKENZIE, Manager.
WM. GEORGE, Chief Clerk.
LONDON-OFFICE, 7, PALL-MALL. HUGH M'KEAN, Agent.

ECONOMIC LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 6, NEW BRIDGE STREET, BLACKFRIARS, LONDON.
ESTABLISHED 1823.
Empowered by Act of Parliament, 3 William IV.
The Right Hon. Thomas Frankland Lewis, Chairman.
Henry Frederick Stephenson, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

The following are among the advantages offered by this Society:—

LOWER RATES of Premium than those of any other Office, which entitle the assured to participate in the profits, and considerably lower than those of any other Mutual Assurance Society.

No PROPRIETARY participate in the profits, the WHOLE being divisible among the Assured.

The first Bonus, in 1834, averaged 16*l.* per cent. on the Premiums paid.

The second Bonus, in 1839, averaged 31*l.* per cent. since the first division.

The third Bonus, in 1844, averaged 36*l.* per cent. since the second division.

Prospectuses and full particulars may be obtained on application to the Secretary, CAMPBELL JAMES DOWNER.

NUNN'S VEGETABLE OIL, 4*s.* 6*d.* per imperial gallon, gives a clear and brilliant light in every description of lamp, without smell or smoke, does not corrode the lamps, and they confidently recommend it to the public as being the most cleanly as well as the most economical oil now in use. Finest sperm oil 7*s.* 6*d.*, and solar oil 3*s.* 3*d.* per imperial gallon; best yellow soap 54*s.*, best mottled ditto 60*s.*, per 112 lb.

NUNN'S VICTORIA COMPOSITE CANDLES, 10*s.*; NUNN'S Victoria Wax Candles, 11*s.* 6*d.*; also their genuine Margarine Wax Lights, 16*s.*; also their patent plaited wick Sperm Candles, 20*s.* per dozen lb. THOMAS NUNN and SONS (34 years purveyors to the Hon. Society of Lincoln's-inn), 19, Great James-street, Bedford-row.

PLATE.—A. B. SAVORY AND SONS, MANUFACTURING SILVERSMITHS, 14, CORNHILL, London, opposite the Bank of England. The best wrought SILVER SPOONS and FORKS, Fiddle Pattern, 7*s.* 2*d.* per oz.; Queen's Pattern, 7*s.* 4*d.* per oz. The following are the weights recommended, but the articles may be had lighter or heavier, at the same price per oz.

Fiddle Pattern.	oz.	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	Queen's Pattern.	oz.	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
12 Table Spoons	30	at 7	2	10	15	0	12 Table Spoons	40	at 7	4	14	13	4
12 Dessert ditto	20	7	2	7	3	4	12 Dessert ditto	26	7	4	9	10	8
12 Table Forks	30	7	2	10	15	0	12 Table Forks	40	7	4	14	13	4
12 Dessert ditto	20	7	2	7	3	4	12 Dessert ditto	28	7	4	10	5	4
2 Gravy Spoons	10	7	2	3	11	8	2 Gravy Spoons	12	7	4	4	8	0
1 Soup Ladle	10	7	2	3	11	8	1 Soup Ladle	12	7	4	4	8	0
4 Sauce ditto	10	7	8	3	16	8	4 Sauce ditto	12	7	10	4	14	8
4 Salt Spoons (gilt strong)				1	0	0	4 Salt Spoons (strong gilt)				2	2	0
1 Fish Slice				2	18	0	1 Fish Slice				3	5	0
12 Tea Spoons	10	7	8	3	16	8	12 Tea Spoons	14	7	10	5	9	8
1 pair Sugar Tongs				0	15	0	1 pair Sugar Tongs				1	5	0

N. B.—A Price Current, stamped as a newspaper, illustrated by drawings, and containing information relative to the purchase of Silver or Sheffield Plate, may be had on application, or will be sent into the country, free of postage, in answer to a paid letter.

News of the Week.

THE RESIGNATION OF MINISTERS will come upon the public with surprise after the confident announcement of the Times last week that Parliament was to meet in January, and that the Duke of Wellington would propose the total repeal of the Corn-laws in the House of Lords. It is now proved that the Times was premature in its statements respecting the Duke, but correct in regard to the surrender of the Corn-laws by Sir Robert Peel and other members of the Cabinet. It appears, from all that can be gathered from the contradictory statements of the daily papers, that Sir Robert Peel had proposed to his colleagues a total repeal of the existing duty as the only ground on which he could continue to hold office. This, as the public had anticipated, was the great subject of discussion at the long and frequent Councils which have been held during the past month: and although it was rumoured that there were only three or four dissentients in the Cabinet, it is now stated with confidence that a large majority of his colleagues have throughout been opposed to Sir R. Peel's recommendation. It is, at least, certain that, so far from the Duke having given way, the repugnance of his Grace to the measure at length, rendered it necessary for the Cabinet to tender their resignations to her Majesty. This was done on Wednesday at the Privy Council held by the Queen at Osborne House, at which it was resolved that Parliament, instead of being summoned for the despatch of business, should be again prorogued to the 30th of this month. The Queen accepted the resignation of Ministers, and invited Lord JOHN RUSSELL to form a new Administration.

It appears that her Majesty was aware of the resolution of Ministers as far back as Saturday, and that at the moment when the repeal of the Corn-laws was announced as the intention of the Cabinet, the only decision which the Cabinet had come to, was a decision to resign. On Saturday Sir Robert Peel went to Osborne House, and communicated to her Majesty the difficulties in which he was placed, and tendered his resignation. The Queen, it is said, expressed a great desire to retain his services, if it could possibly be so arranged: but Sir R. Peel could suggest no alternative; and on Saturday evening a messenger was sent to Edinburgh to summon Lord John Russell to her Majesty's councils. On Wednesday the whole Ministry resigned. On the same evening Lord John Russell arrived in town, and on Thursday morning left for Osborne House, having had an interview, it is said, with Sir R. Peel before his departure. His lordship remained at Osborne House on Thursday night, and returned to town yesterday. Under these circumstances it is not likely that anything authentic can be known as to the new Ministerial arrangements. Two lists, however, were generally current yesterday in political circles, which agree in naming Lord JOHN RUSSELL, First Lord of the Treasury; Lord COTTENHAM, Lord Chancellor; Lord LANSDOWNE, President of the Council; and Mr. BARING, Chancellor of the Exchequer. On the other appointments the lists differ. One account makes Lord PALMERSTON Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Lord GREY, Secretary for the Colonies, Lord CLARENDON, Ambassador at Paris; Lord MORPETH, Home Secretary; Lord NORMANBY, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and Mr. CHAS. BULLER, Under Colonial Secretary. The other account mentions Lord PALMERSTON as Secretary for the Colonies, Lord CLARENDON, Foreign Secretary, Lord NORMANBY Home Secretary, Lord FORTESCUE Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, Lord MINTO First Lord of the Admiralty, Mr. LABOUCHERE President of the Board of Trade, Mr. SHEIL Vice-President, Lord BESBOROUGH First Commissioner of Woods and Forests, Lord BEAUVALE Ambassador at Paris, and Lord CLANRICARDE Ambassador at St. Petersburgh. To these rumours it is only necessary to add that the Times persists in affirming the truth of its original announcement. It states that Sir ROBERT PEEL had gained over to a total repeal of the Corn-laws all his colleagues except three or four, that he had won the reluctant assent of the Duke of WELLINGTON and his promise to propose the measure in the Lords, and that it had been settled to summon Parliament early in January for the purpose. Subsequently, however, "the Duke withdrew his assent and joined the minority, and the PREMIER then felt that it was not his place, or perhaps in his power, to carry the measure." This is the statement of the Times in their Leading Article of yesterday, and we give it without comment.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the royal family have continued at Osborne House during the week, but will return to town this day, in order that her Majesty may be in nearer communication with those who are to become her new advisers. On Wednesday the Queen held a Court and Privy Council, at Osborne-house. The Council was attended by Prince Albert, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Duke of Wellington, Sir Robert Peel, Sir James Graham, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Stanley, Right Hon. H. Goulburn, the Earl of Lincoln, and the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert. At the Council Parliament was ordered to be further prorogued from Tuesday, the 16th December, unto Tuesday the 30th December. At the Court the Right Rev. Dr. Wilberforce, Bishop of Oxford, had an audience of Her Majesty, and did homage upon his appointment to that See. After the Council the Ministers returned to town.—The daily papers announce that an event, calculated to strengthen the affectionate attachment of the people to the throne, and at the same time increase the happiness of Her Majesty's domestic circle, may be expected to take place early in April next.—The Duke of Cambridge left Witley Court, the residence of Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, on Friday, for Leicester, and left Leicester on Saturday for town.

THE GRAND-DUKE CONSTANTINE OF RUSSIA.—On Sunday his Imperial Highness, with the Russian 74 and corvette, left Plymouth Sound, where they have been so long detained by unfavourable weather. The Grand-duke on his departure was saluted by the Citadel, the Port Admiral, and all the line of battle-ships now in harbour. On Monday night, however, his Imperial Highness again entered the Sound with both ships, having put back from contrary winds. On Wednesday they again got under weigh with a leading wind to carry them out of the Channel.

The Experimental Squadron.—Her Majesty's brig Daring, 10, came into Plymouth Sound on the evening of the 3rd, after sunset. She was separated from the rest of the fleet during a heavy storm about a month since, and serious apprehensions were expressed for her safety by the commanders of the other ships. All the vessels have experienced more or less damage from the succession of gales which have prevailed throughout their last cruise, and it will occupy some time to refit them. The same difficulty of placing the ships in order as to their sailing qualities still exists; but it is understood that the old French ship Canopus still maintains her superiority, and, in regard to the others, no two accounts agree. It seems, however, that the Vanguard is not much improved by being new coppered. The Daring, Rodney, and Superb have been sent round to Portsmouth, the Experimental Cruize being over for this season.

The Navy.—It is currently reported that the plan for the retirement of 300 captains is abandoned, only 267 captains having intimated their willingness to accept the retirement offered. The Admiralty, to mark their sense of the services of the late Mr. Sidney Bernard, of the Eclair, have promoted his brother, Mr. Robert Pernard, Assistant-surgeon of the Pique, to the rank of surgeon. The following promotions have been gazetted in acknowledgment of the late destruction of the Borneo pirates:—Acting Captain Lyster, H. M. S. Agincourt to be confirmed. Commander Fanshawe, of the Cruiser, to be Captain. Lieut. Morrit, of the Vestal, to be Commander. Acting Lieut. Lowther, of the Agincourt, to be confirmed. Mr. Charles Nolloth, Mate, of the Daedalus, to be Lieutenant. Mr. Philip William May, Mate of the Agincourt, to be Lieutenant.

The Church.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Rev. Lord Charles Thynne, M.A., to the Canonry of Canterbury, void by the cession of the Rev. John Peel.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Paris papers of Sunday announce the occurrence on the preceding day of an event which disproved the belief that had been becoming general that Republican and infidel impulses and movements were no longer to be apprehended. M. Edgar Quinet, to whom is attributed the honour of having invented the phrase "perfide Albion," so much in use by his countrymen when dealing with questions bearing upon England and the English, and who is Professor of Southern Languages at the College de France, has lately attracted notice by his attacks upon the Jesuits. His advertised programme was "the languages and literature of the South," but, in reality, his lectures consisted of a history of the Christian religion and of the French Revolution, in which the former was treated with anything but reverence, and the latter, including the National Convention, received many tributes of admiration. The clergy remonstrated; every respectable class of the community also condemned the lectures; and the Minister of Public Instruction, as well as his colleagues, considered that, as the Professor was remunerated by the State, they had a right to require him to confine his theme to "the languages and literature of the South." Many amicable attempts to keep him within the limits of his programme were, however, fruitless, so great was his popularity with the ultra-liberal party. On the renewal this year of the lectures, M. Quinet was again entreated, and subsequently ordered by the Minister, to avoid propagating his notions of Christianity, the Revolution, and Socialism, but he resigned his chair. On Saturday last the students met in order to congratulate him. They mustered to the number of about 2000, and walked in procession to the Professor's residence, being joined on their way by many other turbulent persons. M. Quinet thanked them for their sympathy, and wisely advised them to retire in peace and disperse as promptly as possible. They marched back to their quarter, but, on passing the private residence of M. de Salvandy, the Minister of Public Instruction, shouted "Vive Quinet?" "A bas les Jesuites!" "A bas Salvandy!" On reaching the Place Saint-Sulpice they would appear to have again cried, "A bas les Jesuites!" and one of them began to address the crowd, when strong detachments of the municipal guards and line made their appearance, and a charge of cavalry closely followed. The students were routed. No killed or wounded are mentioned, but between twenty and thirty of Professor Quinet's admirers were captured; among them was M. Emile Deschatel, Professor of Rhetoric in the Royal College of Louis-le-grand. It was in vain that he mentioned his profession; he was collared, and, it is said, ill-treated by the police agents and municipal guards. The prisoners were then placed between a double file of soldiers, and thus marched through the city to the Prefecture, where they remained confined until a delegate of the Commissary of Police came to inquire into the cause of their arrest. M. Deschatel remonstrated with that officer, but it was only after two or three hours' confinement that, no charge being adduced against him, he was at last liberated. Some of the police agents having penetrated into the School of Medicine in pursuit of the rioters, and arrested a number of the pupils who were quietly attending the lectures or engaged in dissecting, M. Orfila caused the intruders to be expelled and the gates of the school to be closed, at the risk of being himself apprehended. He next proceeded to the Prefecture, and obtained from the Prefect the immediate release of the prisoners. The Siècle publishes a document from Professor Deschatel, which condemns, in the strongest terms, the conduct of the police in these disturbances. "Far be it from us," says that journal, "to condemn the police force, which has such arduous duties to fulfil, without just grounds; but let any one peruse the version of the affair given by M. Deschatel, an eye-witness, and it must appear evident that the police agents acted in a most unjustifiable manner." "It is not the fault of the police," says the National, "if the Place de l'Ecole de Medicine was not on Saturday the theatre of a sanguinary collision. A great number of letters have been addressed to us, which all agree in stating that the police agents appointed to maintain order conducted themselves in an unworthy, odious, and provoking manner. We regret that we cannot, in our present number, publish these communications, but they are so numerous that we have not had time to analyse them. Besides the young men of the schools, several witnesses, whose testimony cannot be suspected, amongst others a Captain of Engineers on half-pay, two merchants, and a lawyer, have fully confirmed the above statement."—The English Corn-law question continues to excite great interest in France, and the Government papers still speculate on the total abolition of the duty; but as their articles were written before the resignation of the British Cabinet was known, they have lost their usual interest to the English reader.—The Siècle states that a Dutch vessel, coming from the Island of Mauritius, was surprised while landing, in face of Fort Dauphin, gunpowder and fire-arms intended for the natives of Madagascar, with whom the French Government is at war. The supercargo of this vessel is M. Leguerel de Lacombe, the identical person who three years since acted as the confidential agent of M. Guizot, at Madagascar. The expedition against Madagascar it is thought will not sail before the end of January.—The railway excitement is not abated in Paris, and the papers are chiefly taken up with the forthcoming adjudication of the Paris and Lyons and the Creil and St. Quentin Railroad lines, and with the "fusions" of the several companies.—Ibrahim Pacha is to visit Paris in February, and it is said he will afterwards pay a visit to London.—His Excellency Lord Cowley met with a very serious accident on Wednesday week. His lordship in returning from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, where he had been transacting business with M. Guizot, and, having to cross the Boulevard at the part which is higher than the road, descended the steps, and in doing so missed his footing and fell. His lordship's head, being protected by his hat, escaped injury, but he had the misfortune to dislocate both shoulders. He was immediately taken up and conveyed in a coach to the Embassy, where Sir Robert Chermside, the physician, and Mr. O'Grady, the surgeon to the Embassy, were, with M. Blandin, the surgeon, soon in attendance. The dislocations were reduced by these gentlemen with great skill and promptitude, and his lordship was fortunately free from fever. During the night, however, the patient experienced considerable pain; but we are happy to learn that the case is proceeding very favourably.—Accounts have been received from Marshal Bugeaud of the 23d ult., giving an account of an enormous razzia made by the Marshal in the neighbourhood of Rion, of which the horrors are so great that they must shock every one having feelings of humanity. The French army has not made any movement towards the frontier of Morocco, and the province of Oran is still in a very disturbed state.

Spain.—We have accounts from Madrid to the 3rd inst., the result of the elections that were proceeding in several provinces was likely to be highly favourable to the Government; the success of the Ministerial candidates was doubtful only at Saragossa and Vila. The Ministry intend to raise M. Castro-y-Orosco to the Presidency of the Chamber of Deputies, and it was generally believed that he will be elected by a very large majority. Whether a royal speech will be delivered on the opening of the session is as yet undecided. On the 24th ult., the Captain-General of Catalonia, Breton, was at Figueras, engaged in arresting and throwing into prison the relations of some eight hundred young men, who had fled from their homes rather than submit to the Quinta law.

Portugal.—We have accounts from Lisbon to the 2d instant. All kinds of Government securities and shares in public companies were depressed. A proceeding of Government against the Union Company of a jobbing character, to promote the interests of a rival company, with which some members of the Government are closely connected, had tended to the injury of the public credit. The company thus dealt with is the one which lately undertook the payment of the dividend on the foreign debt, and furnished the means in London of so doing, to the amount of upwards of 170,000*l*.—The papers speak of Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg, who is now in Lisbon, as the English candidate for Queen Isabella's hand. The hopes of the family are said to be at the highest pitch, and the Portuguese Court looks upon the Prince as their own candidate. The Prince will shortly proceed across the country, and enter Spain by Badajoz.—A cargo of Wheat was despatched from Lisbon for Falmouth on the 27th ult., in the expectation that the ports were about to be opened.

Germany.—Letters from Dresden, of the 27th ult., state that M. Ronge, accompanied by his brother, arrived in that city on the 23d, in the evening, and had scarcely reached the house of a merchant, where he was to lodge, when a commissary of police appeared and invited him to go immediately to the police-office, where a communication would be made to him. The elders of the German Catholics who were present remonstrated, and observed that the communication had better be made where they were, and if the police would not agree to this, Ronge would rather prefer departing immediately. The commissary withdrew to get other instructions, but soon returned with an actuary, who stated that it was agreed that the communication should be made to Ronge at his residence, and read a document, providing that, if his passport and other papers were in order, Ronge was permitted to remain as long as should be necessary, but he was to refrain from all public harangues in public assemblies, from all preaching during the week days, and from all ministerial acts; but he might preach on Sundays and holidays.—A Berlin letter of the 27th ult. states that by a royal ordonnance, lately published, the decree of Napoleon, which obliged all Jews not having a hereditary family name to adopt one, and which decree is still in force in the Rhenish provinces, where the French laws have been preserved, is now extended to all the rest of the kingdom of Prussia. A delay of six months is given to those Jews who have not a family name to choose one, and which is to be submitted to the Minister of the Interior for his approval.

Italy.—At a Consistory, held at Rome on the 24th ult., M. de Carvalho was appointed to the patriarchal chair of Lisbon; M. Biaro-Sforza to the metropolitan chair at Naples; and M. Jacques Baillès, vicar-general of Toulouse, to the episcopal chair of Luçon (France); and M. Lorenzo Simonetti and M. Giacomo Piccolomini were proclaimed Cardinals. It is said that the Pope, in fulfilment of promises made to the different Powers, intends to create six Cardinals, two of whom will be French, two Austrian, one Sicilian, and one Spanish.—The Emperor of Russia was expected at Rome on the 5th or 6th inst. The Frankfort Journal states that the differences between the Court of St. Petersburg and that of Rome have been arranged, and that Russia will in future strenuously avoid all harsh measures against the Roman Catholic Church, whilst the Holy See is to take care that the Catholic Church shall not interfere in any movements against the state. Letters from Palermo, 20th ult., state that a grand gala was given on the previous day at the Court, on the occasion of the fête of the Queen Mother. The Emperor and Empress of Russia were present, and were received by the King at the foot of the staircase. The sedan chair, without which the Empress cannot ascend the stairs, not having arrived, the Emperor took her in his arms and carried her up.—A letter dated Florence, Nov. 29, states that a sad accident had befallen Lady Drumlanrig. She was riding in the Cascine mounted on a race-horse belonging to Mr. Vansittart, when the animal ran away, and threw her with great violence against a tree. For awhile it was thought her ladyship was killed, as she lay senseless, her nose perfectly flattened, with several gaping wounds on the forehead. No bones were broken, and she is now out of danger.—It is said that the Pope has, in some degree, withdrawn his opposition to the construction of railways in the states of the church, and thus the principal obstacles to the establishment of railways in Italy are removed. The Papal Government has granted permission for the construction of a line to unite with the Appeninian line, and extend it from Poretta, through Bologna, and join the Lombardo-Venetian. In an easy day's journey, a traveller may thus proceed from Leghorn to Venice—a circumstance of much importance to both towns.—Mount Vesuvius has for some time been sending forth large volumes of smoke, accompanied occasionally by flames, and red hot ashes, threatening an eruption. It appears, however, by a letter from Naples, that this does not deter foreigners from ascending the mountain even to the verge of the crater. Among them has been Prince Albert of Prussia, who was struck by one of the burning cinders, and had part of his coat burnt, but happily sustained no other harm.

Switzerland.—Advices from Lucerne of the 27th ult. state that the grand jury had issued warrants against M. d'Eschembach, former member of the Grand Council, and Captain Corragioni and M. Ineichen of Rothenburg, for participation in the murder of M. Leu. Three other individuals involved in the same accusation had fled from Lucerne. These were Antoine Muller, brother of the principal accused; M. Buhler, former member of the Court of Appeal; and Troller, innkeeper at Lucerne.—An accident has lately taken place on the St. Bernard, by which the lives of one of the monks, and three domestics attached to the hospital, were sacrified. The latter were inhabitants of the Valais, and the former was M. Cart, canon of Sallanches, in Faucigny. The accident arose from an enormous avalanche from Mont-Mort, to the east of the hospital. It was in contemplation to trace out the road along the Combe, on the side of the valley, and Canon Cart, who was known to be bold, robust, and the most intrepid among the brethren in braving storms, went to direct the operations, as several travellers were expected on that day; he and his three companions were thus cut off while in the performance of an act of hospitality and charity.—A conference on the subject of the Swiss Customs duties is about to be held shortly by delegates from the Cantons of Berne, Soleure, Argau, and Basle country. It will take into consideration a plan for a Customs Union, so that the dues at all the frontiers shall be uniform, and the commercial traffic be relieved from the embarrassments with which it has hitherto been attended. The negotiations are already far advanced.

Egypt.—We have accounts from Alexandria to the 19th ult. Mehemet Ali continues to reside at Cairo; he is not so much pleased as was expected with a present sent him by Louis Philippe of the Riband of the Legion of Honour, having received it at the same time with two persons of lower rank than himself. He had been much annoyed with an intrigue got up lately by the widow of Ismael Pasha, who arrived three weeks ago from Constantinople, the object of which appears to be to prevent the marriage of his daughter with Kiamil Pasha. His Highness is, however, determined to accomplish his desire, and the festival, it is said, will take place during the Kourban Bairam, the beginning of this month, which he intends celebrating with great splendour.—The Breeze, of Kirkaldy, which had gone to sea in charge of the captain alone, has been discovered some leagues down the coast riding at anchor, where she had been brought to by the captain after finding it was impracticable to pursue his passage to Malta. The captain and crew of a vessel lying in harbour, on hearing of the vessel's position, put to sea in a long-boat, and succeeded in bringing the vessel back to harbour, where she now lies, without having sustained any damage whatever.

South America.—Accounts to the 27th September have been received from Buenos Ayres by a vessel arrived in the Channel. The contents are important. The contemplated blockade of the port had been instituted on the 24th. The term allowed for the departure of neutral vessels had been extended to 30 days. The British and French Ministers had addressed to the Argentine Government a strong note, detailing the grievances of which they complain. It was rumoured that the forces under Urquiza had gone over to the Monte Videan Government. The Danish Consul had protested against the blockade, and the time granted for neutral vessels to leave. The American Minister refused to acknowledge the blockade at all. There was no popular excitement at Buenos Ayres, and no molestation has yet been offered to foreigners.—Monte Videan advices to the 20th have been received. A loan of 300,000 dollars to the Monte Videan Executive had been proposed by the British Minister. Commercial intercourse with Corrientes and Paraguay would, it was anticipated, be shortly resumed.—Since the above advices were received the Madrid papers of the 3d mention that accounts had been brought by a vessel, which arrived at Malaga from La Plata, of an insurrection at Buenos Ayres, in consequence of which the British and French entered that city, and deposed the President Rosas. It is probable that this is but an exaggerated edition of the taking of Colonia. No date is given.

West Indies and Mexico.—The Medway steamship arrived at Southampton last week from Mexico and the West Indies. She brought home his Excellency Sir Charles and Lady Mary Fitzroy, Lord Mark Kerr, and about 30 passengers. The papers are remarkably destitute of interest. The islands were all healthy and had not been visited with hurricanes this season. The crops were generally looking favourable. The Jamaica papers are still fully occupied with the discussion of railways in the islands and immigration, both popular subjects with the colonists. An influential meeting of the parish of St. Mary had been held on the latter subject, and petitions unanimously carried, praying the House of Assembly to offer every encouragement to immigration on an extended and efficient scale. The Legislature accordingly has made arrangements for the reception of 5000 Coolies during the ensuing season.—By this arrival we have accounts from the city of Mexico of the 30th Oct. The Mexican Government had agreed to receive a United States Minister and to negotiate for frontiers and settlement of claims. The American fleet had left Vera Cruz, that being the first step of the arrangement. The city of Mexico was tranquil, though reports of Federalist conspiracies were frequent. The Indians called Camanches had ravaged the departments of Durango and Zacatecas, and one body was within seven days of the city of Mexico. The financial state of Mexico was deplorable. One-third of the new Congress to be renewed on the 1st January was composed of Radicals and friends to Federation. The French Minister had left Mexico, in consequence of the disturbances that occurred four or five months ago. He came passenger from Vera Cruz in the Medway, and landed at Havannah to await the instructions of his Government. Santa Anna was still at Havannah.

City.

Money Market, Friday.—Three per Cent. Consols, 93¼; for the Account, 92⅝; New Three-and-Quarter per Cent. 94¼; Exchequer Bills, 23*s.* to 21*s.* prem.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK.

TUESDAY—BANKRUPTS—R. W. Sheppard, now or late of Fareham, Oxfordshire, Innkeeper—C. K. Lock, Southampton, Mercer—H. Gamble, Grimstone, Norfolk Grocer—T. Batsell, Cambridge, Tailor—J. Foulton, jun., Luton, Bedfordshire, Straw Hat Manufacturer—A. S. Tucker and G. M. Bidwell, Melcombe Regis, Dorsetshire, Grocers J. D. Williams, 9, Newcastle-street, Farringdon-street, City Blacking Manufacturer—T. Mortimer, East-lane, Walworth, Victualler—T. Magee, Holborn-hill, City, and Coventry-street, Haymarket, Poulterer—R. G. Sprigings, late of 30, Queen-street, Cheapside, and Bush-lane, Cannon-street, City, Wine Merchant—W. Lewis, Barnsley, Yorkshire, Tobacconist—F. Sanford, Manchester, Woollen Draper—C. Iles, Bristol, Grocer—J. Pope, formerly of Bristol, but now of Stapleton, Gloucestershire, Lime Burner—W. Ogierston, Liverpool, Hide Merchant—T. Friedlanskel, Birmingham, Chandler—

FRIDAY—F. Taylor, Orange-street Red Lion-square, Tea Merchant—T. Magee (and not Magra, as advertised in last Tuesday's Gazette), Holborn-hill, Poulterer—H. Harris, Lemon-street, Goodman's-fields, Teacher at the Jews' Orphan Asylum—G. Watt, Old Jewry, City, Linen and Cotton Factor—F. Whitworth, Shawforth, Lancashire, Cotton Manufacturer—R. Buckley, Saddlesworth, Yorkshire, Woollen-cloth Manufacturer—W. Fay, Bath, Innkeeper—J. Rothschild, Bristol, Watchmaker—H. Rowbotham and R. J. Kenworthy, Brinkway, Cheshire, Calico-printers—J. Butterworth, Manchester, Plumber—F. Lumsden, New Elvet, Durham, dealer in Musical Instruments—W. Emery, Kidderminster, Iron-founder, Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Agricultural Protection Society.—On Tuesday the Annual General Meeting of this Society was held in Old Bond Street, the president the Duke of Richmond in the chair. Among those present were the Marquis of Salisbury, Mr. Heathcote, M.P., Mr. Stafford O'Brien, M.P., Mr. Newdegate, M.P., Mr. Miles, M.P., the Rev. Mr. Cox, Rev. Mr. Gwilt, Messrs. Sutherland, F. Hobbs, Healy, Shackell, G. Brown, Pickin, Bennett, Jonas, Turner, Lewis, Hudson, Weale, Umbers, Allnat, Rodwell, W. R. Browne, and other members of the society, and representatives of country Protective Associations from all parts of the kingdom. Communications had been received from the Duke of Buckingham, Viscount Ingestre, M.P., Mr. R. Baker, and others, who were all desirous of being present, but were unavoidably prevented from attending. The whole number of persons present was about 50. The Duke of Richmond opened the proceedings by a long speech in which he called attention to the present position of the agricultural interests. His Grace expressed himself as glad that Lord John Russell had spoken out. "I always," said his Grace, "regarded his proposal of a fixed duty as nothing but a declaration of an anti-protection principle, and I thought then, and still believe now, that if that proposal had reached a third reading, absolute free trade would have been established." In regard to Lord Morpeth, the Duke regretted that a man of such high honour and noble principles should have sent 5*l.* to the League, to create fictitious votes in every county in England. But these things would not frighten the bold yeomanry of England. His Grace said :—

"There is one thing I particularly wish to mention. I will tell you at once plainly, that I believe the alarm so industriously spread about, as to famine, to be a gross delusion. From what you have been already able to bear up to the present moment, and from the returns which will be presently read to you, you will see that the cry which has been raised is a delusion, which no men of respectability would have put forth if they had been acquainted with the facts as we are. At the last general meeting of the society I said that I did not think it desirable that we should agitate the country in favour of protection. I felt that it was not our business as farmers. I knew that it would be against the wishes and inclinations and habits of us all to excite a general agitation in this momentous question—to set man against man—to beget those evils which in my opinion agitation must always produce. But in the present posture of affairs I say that it is our bounden duty to speak out. I say that it is the bounden duty of every farmer to proclaim his opinion and determination. I say it is our bounden duty to appeal to the yeomanry of our country and ask them if they have changed those views with which they triumphed four years ago? For my own part, I still believe that protection is necessary for all the interests of this great country. No one would be less disposed to support it, if I did not think it of vital importance to the welfare, the happiness, and the independence of the nation. [illegible] Lord John Russell may tell me that protection is the bane of agriculture, but I know what really is the bane of agriculture. It is the spirit of party—those party politics which induce men to stick to their party leaders when they know that those leaders are wrong. Yes, these party politics are the real bane of agriculture—the great and grievous curse of evil to the country at large—party politics, which induce the men in opposition to vote higher than the Minister for power which, if the Minister bids 2*s.* 6*d.*, induce them to bid 5*s.* This it is that has been, and still is, the bane of agriculture. But now, Gentlemen, in your hands, and, with the Protection Society, rests the weal and welfare of this country. I have not come to this conclusion without much reflection. I beg of you not to be weak enough to be deluded into any compromise. Your real enemies, who falsely profess to be your friends, will say to you, "Do it now, now consent to a compromise: later you cannot: after this it will not be offered to you." But, Gentlemen, remember, this is a question of principle. Once consent to any compromise, and we shall not have a leg to stand on. So I say to you, act according to the Constitution of the country: for I will not recommend to others what I could not and am not ready to do myself; and come what may, I, for one, must stand by the Constitution. But the Constitution gives you power, and power enough, to accomplish our purpose. The Protection Societies throughout the country must be up and doing. By all fair and legitimate means you must show your determination to the Min[illegible] and to the Legislature. I say nothing of the League. For the League would be nothing were it not led and supported by such men as Sir R. Peel and Lord J. Russell. I hope and trust that the recent report of an intention on the part of the Government to move the repeal of the Corn Laws on the first or second day of the session is not correct. I, for my own part, do not believe it: I cannot believe, upon such authority at least, that such perfidy would or could enter into the mind of man. If, however, such should turn out to be the case, all I can say is, that I most sincerely hope that the House of Commons—that the representatives of the agricultural constituencies returned for the express purpose of defending agricultural interests—will turn it out in the Lower House. But if they do not, I look to the hereditary peerage of England. I have thought it my duty to say this much, and in saying what I have said, I have spoken my own individual opinions. No one else is compromised or committed by anything which has fallen from me as an independent member of the Protection Society; but what I have said here I am willing to repeat in the House of Lords or anywhere else: for upon my conscience I believe every word I have uttered to be strictly true: I will now say no more, than to request my friend, Mr. Stafford O'Brien, to read the report of your committee; then, gentlemen, it will be for you to express your opinion as to that report, and to state what you recommend for the purpose of preventing protection from being taken away from us either as a whole or in part. His Grace resumed his seat amidst loud and general cheering.

Mr. S. O'BRIEN then read the Annual Report, which expressed the belief of the Committee that there was no truth in the assertion of the Times that Government intended to repeal the Corn laws; and concluded by "reminding the society that the declaration of Lord John Russell, and the renewed efforts of the League, have rendered necessary every watchful exertion on the part of the friends of protection, and calling on all country societies to use all the means they may, in their several localities, judge best suited for the enunciation and maintenance of the common principle which binds them together." Mr. MEALE moved that the report be approved of, which was seconded by Mr. FISHER HOBBS, and unanimously agreed to. Mr. BYRON, the secretary of the society, then read an analysis of reports which had been sent up from local societies in almost every part of England, respecting the result of this year's crop; the result of which was that in every district from which returns had been received there was stated to be a full average of wheat and other crops, in many of them considerably above an average; and that though in almost every district the Potato crop was more or less diseased, still that disease had been in almost every instance greatly exaggerated, and that in the words of the Noble Chairman, the labourers throughout the whole of the agricultural districts had full work, and at good wages. Mr. THOMAS moved, and Mr. BENNETT seconded, the first resolution, that "The Agricultural Protection Society of England having made inquiries in every county of England as to the probable yield of corn for the sustenance of man, have the most entire satisfaction in stating that an average crop of corn has been secured for the maintenance of the people of this nation." As extensive agriculturists and being well acquainted with the state of agriculture in their neighbourhoods and in the country generally, both gentlemen bore testimony with regard to the crop, not only that it was an average crop, but that there was enough for man and beast. Mr. ALLNATT, of Berkshire, supported the resolution in a speech of great length, declaring that the agriculturists distrusted Lord John Russell and Sir R. Peel alike, and that the time would soon come when the voices of the farmers would be heard. The resolution was then agreed to. Mr. MILES, M.P., moved the adoption of a petition to both Houses of Parliament, calling firmly upon the Legislature, either to uphold in their integrity the present system of Corn-laws, or by an appeal to the constituencies of the United Kingdom call a national opinion upon the expediency and policy of adopting, or not, the principles of free trade. Mr. NEWDEGATE, M.P., and Mr. HEATHCOTE, M.P., supported the motion, and the draft of the petition was recommended for general adoption throughout the country. Mr. MEALE recommended all tenant farmers to register; Mr. UMBERS moved that all the landed proprietors in the Kingdom should be solicited to join the society. Mr. SHACKELL and Mr. HEALEY supported the motion, but on the suggestion of Mr. MILES it was withdrawn, and the subject left to the consideration of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD O'BRIEN said it had been affirmed that this was a landlord's question, but all he had heard that day from those who had addressed the meeting, as well as those in the room with whom he had had the pleasure to converse, was to the effect that the landlords did not take up the question as they ought. But if these popular promises of plenty and cheapness were held out, and if the landlords, in taking up the question only to the extent they did, thought that they would be able to meet all those promises and all this popular cry, strongly urged as it was with a great amount of talent, and by means of a great deal of money, they were mistaken. That was not sufficient, as was to be gathered from all who had spoken there that day. He called therefore on all farmers to come forward boldly and state the high grounds on which they took their stand, and let the general election prove whether the principles they approved were represented or not. The position of the society was in his view essentially different at present from what it had been. When they found that free trade had become by the adhesion of Lord John Russell not merely the cry of an energetic and clamorous body, but had occupied against them what had been hitherto called neutral ground, and that not only the cotton lords, but various great landed proprietors had joined them—then, he said, the society was placed in a different situation from that which it had hitherto occupied, and they might therefore fitly seek who was willing to co-operate with them.—On the motion of Mr. FISHER HOBBS, seconded by Mr. Turner, a tenant farmer, the Duke of Richmond was unanimously re-elected president for the ensuing year.—The DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM said, that to protection, he was strongly convinced, and to protection alone it was owing that they were prosperous, free, enlightened, and independent. His conduct in presiding over the society had always been actuated by that conviction. He was deeply grateful for the manner in which they had responded to their situation. Entertaining strong views, as he did, on this subject, he was aware that he was open to many attacks and much calumny; but he was well aware that it was important in a great country like this that there should be a perfect freedom of the press of the country; he was aware that it was not possible for the conductors of that press to analyze all that was sent to them, and that they therefore often put contributions of a vituperative character into print; being pretty well aware that persons in public life were not very sensitive to attacks such as those to which he referred. He was pretty well acquainted with the tenant farmers of this country, and he would say that he never went among them without meeting with those expressions of kindness towards himself which showed that they at least thought he was determined to steer a straightforward course. He exhorted them to do this in their several counties: it was but little he could do, but he should endeavour to bring into the field the strength of free born English men: if they would do that he was convinced the Agricultural Protection Society of England was the body that could lead them to the day of victory. On the motion of the Rev. Mr. Gwilt, the Duke of Buckingham was re-elected Vice-President. The general committee was then re-appointed: the Dukes of Norfolk, Rutland, and Cleveland, and the Earl of Yarborough, were re-appointed as trustees.

Rights of Tenant Farmers.—A special general meeting of the Farmers' Club was held on Wednesday evening at their rooms in the York Hotel, Bridge-street, for the purpose of taking into consideration tenant farmers' rights. This was the most numerous meeting of the club that has yet taken place. Among those present were Messrs. George Emery, of Barnwell, Somerset; Cuthbert W. Johnson, Jonas Webb, Babraham; T. Chapman, Stoneleigh; Daniel Trinder, Cirencester; George Boddington, Sutton Coldfield; John Barnard, Canfield Hall; W. Fisher Hobbs, Marks Hall, Essex; W. R. Browne, Chisledon: Henry Cheffins, Little Easton: William Cheffins, Islington: Richard Gates, Branly-in-Gulage; Charles Page, Southminster; George Kilby, Leicestershire: John Kemp, Southminster; T. W. Burney, Chelmsford: Jeremiah Birdits, Bretford, Coventry; Robert Page, Bradwell, Essex; J. F. Kemp, jun., Southminster; James Thomas, Lidlington Park; James Grove, Great Baddon; Robert Baker, Writtle; John Browne, Chisselden, Wilts; Kersey Cooper, Euston, Suffolk; John Beck, Congham, Castle Rising, Norfolk; George Turner, Barton, Exeter: Robert Smith, Burley Park, Oakham; J. A. Ransome, Ipswich; Thomas Pope, Kidbrook, &c. Mr. BAKER having been called to the chair, said the subject for discussion was tenants' rights. The question was then introduced by Mr. SHAW, in a speech of great length and detail for which it is impossible to find room. A long discussion ensued in which Messrs Bodington, Burn, Stokes, W. Bennett, Pope, S. Bennett, Ransome, Johnson, Cheffins, Shaw, junr., Turner, Emery and Aitcheson, took part. Mr. SHAW replied and moved, "That in the opinion of this meeting, a system of tenant rights would promote the interests of both landlord and tenant, and most materially conduce to the advancement of practical agriculture." Mr. BENNETT suggested the propriety of adding the following to Mr. Shaw's motion:—"And that in the opinion of this meeting the character of the tenure and covenants under which tenant farmers in too many instances hold is disadvantageous both to the landlords, tenants, and labourers of the country, and have a strong tendency to retard the improvement of the soil and the increase of production; and that facts illustrative of the disadvantages arising from the present usages be collected and diffused, and that to this end the secretary be requested to communicate with the local farmers' clubs, requesting them to communicate the result of any discussion that may have taken place, and that a committee be appointed to collect from various places the usages in respect of bargains between landlords and tenants, and lease, contracts, and usages; such information to be reported to a future meeting of this club."—The CHAIRMAN said he also had a short resolution which he wished to submit to the meeting—"That the Legislature should give to the tenant an extended time to extract the capital he has invested in the soil, and that the landlord should be compelled to pay a valuation for such improvements."—After some conversation the two latter propositions were withdrawn, Mr. Bennett seconded Mr. Shaw's motion, and it was carried unanimously.

The Opening of the Ports.—The meetings in favour of Free Trade and the Opening of the Ports continue numerous throughout the country. Among those which have been reported since our last, have been meetings at Bath, Dundee, Birmingham, Dudley, Preston, Nottingham, Derby, Chorley, Bristol, Wotton-under-Edge, Carlisle, Stockport, Doncaster, Greenock, Lancaster, Dublin, Kilkenny, and in the following suburbs and parishes of London—Kingsland, Ward of Farringdon Without, St. Pancras, St. Martins in the Fields, Hammersmith, and Clerkenwell. The Court of Common Council on Thursday, the Lord Mayor in the chair, passed the following resolutions:—"1. That great, powerful, and wealthy as this nation is, by far the largest portion of Her Majesty's subjects in England, Scotland, and Wales, have long been reduced for their principal support to potatoes; that all classes, but especially the poor, have been and are great sufferers from this result of the national economy; that the blight which has now fallen upon that root has subjected the people to great anxiety and distress, and to the danger of famine; that these sufferings are attributable to erroneous legislature, which, by excluding the importation of food and restricting commerce, shuts out from the people the bounty and goodness of God. 2. That this Court do present a dutiful and loyal address and petition to Her Most Gracious Majesty, founded on the foregoing resolutions, earnestly and anxiously praying that Her Majesty will graciously use all the means in Her Majesty's power to open the ports of this kingdom for the free importation of food."

The Coast Defences.—Active means continue to be taken for the purpose of completing the defences of the coast and of the Channel ports. An invention of Captain Addison for heating shot red hot, has been recently tested in the marshes at Woolwich, and been approved by the board of officers appointed to ascertain and report on its advantages. This invention will prove a great acquisition to the coast defences, as its power of rendering 32-pounder and other shot red hot in a limited time has been fully tested, and the object is attained at much less expense than by any other mode hitherto adopted. Each furnace possesses the advantage of being able to supply 30 32-pounder shot at a red heat every 20 minutes after it is heated, and retain a similar number of shot at a red heat for many successive hours without much waste in the metal, or perceptible reduction in the diameter, which is effected by the exclusion of atmospheric air and regulation of the fire accomplished by checking the draught and using coke or charcoal mixed with the usual description of coal, principally supplied at the first heating of the furnace. Through the recommendation of the board of officers, Captain Addison received 100*l.* from the Lords of the Treasury, previous to the last experiment, as a reward for his exertions in perfecting the invention; and it is said that Government intend to have 200 furnaces completed forthwith.

Improvements in the Quadrant.—In consequence of the abolition of the glass duty, a great improvement is being carried out at the Quadrant by removing the roof of the colonnade to substitute one of glass. From the darkness of the shops, the original design of forming a promenade, garden, or conservatories on the terrace was necessarily given up, in order to cut skylights, &c., of divers sizes and forms. It will now be uniform, and be convenient both to the shopkeepers and customers.

Pauper Children at Brixton.—During the past week much excitement has prevailed throughout Kensington in consequence of the circulation of a report that the pauper children belonging to that parish, who have been for some time past at Mr. Drewett's establishment at Brixton were in a half-starved state. The following particulars have been ascertained. There are seventy-one boys and girls belonging to Kensington parish, which, for want of room in the workhouse, have been sent to Mr. Drewett's establishment. The Board of Guardians determined on paying the establishment an unexpected visit, in order to see how the children were situated. The visit was paid on the 24th ult., by a deputation of the Board. On arriving at Brixton, Mr. Drewett was not at home, but the deputation saw his wife. On entering they were surrounded by the children, who earnestly begged to be taken home, alleging that they were half-starved. The deputation went over the whole establishment, ascertained that the place in which the children have their dinners was a boarded building, with an open tiled roof; that they have no seats allowed them while eating it, but have to stand on a brick floor. The guardians were much dissatisfied with the accommodation provided for the children, and determined to remove the whole of them as soon as they can provide a place. At a vestry meeting held on Friday last, a statement of the circumstances was given by Mr. Nixon, which has tended greatly to increase the excitement in the parish.

Handsome Legacy to Lord Brougham.—The late Miss Mary Flaherty, after leaving by her will charitable bequests and a few legacies, has appointed Lord Brougham her residuary legatee, "out of respect and admiration for his unequalled abilities, public conduct, and principles." The amount coming to his Lordship, from the funded and personal property alone, will considerably exceed 20,000*l.*, the personal estate being valued for probate duty at 30,000*l.* To his Lordship's brother, William Brougham, Esq., Master in Chancery, she has left a legacy of 500*l.*; to the Rev. N. Conway, chaplain of the Benedictine convent at Hammersmith, 500*l.*; to the Associated Catholic Charities, 500*l.*; to the Benevolent Society for the Relief of the Aged and Infirm, 500*l.*; to the Society for the Houseless Poor, 500*l.*; legacies to her executors and a few friends. Her death occurred on the 9th ult., at the advanced age of 84, and she was buried in Kensal-green Cemetery, in that part consecrated to Roman Catholics. Miss Flaherty was much interested in the subject of the general extension of education, without regard to any religious direction. In 1836 she presented the council of University College with a donation of 5000*l.* Three-and-Half Bank Annuities, with which the "Flaherty Scholarship" was founded.

Suburban Villages for the Poor.—A project for the improvement of the condition of the industrious poor who have been expelled from the crowded localities of St. Giles's, Lambeth, Westminster, Wapping, Spitalfields, and in many other equally populous districts of the metropolis, with respect to their habitations, has been set on foot. According to the "suggestions" printed by the promoters of the scheme:—"The plan proposed is to build villages in the surrounding neighbourhood of the metropolis, sufficiently distant to ensure a pure atmosphere and healthy soil, on which dwellings may be erected at a moderate price, yet so connected with the metropolis by distinct lines of railway, and stations to each, as to leave no portion of London more than one mile distant from some one station; thus bringing the daily place of occupation of the working classes within 10 minutes' distance of their residence, and enabling them to resort to the one and the other, with the same order and facility as though still inhabiting the precincts of the great city itself." It is added that each village should contain about 5000 cottage residences covering 500 acres of land, and that taking the probable average of the inhabitants of each cottage at seven in number, it will give to each village 35,000 inhabitants, making a total population, supposing the 10 villages to be in the course of time erected, of 350,000 removed from the dens of the Metropolis. It is contemplated to erect only 10 cottages to an acre, which, built in pairs, will give to each residence a good garden—will secure perfect ventilation, and incite the occupant to industry, regularity, and neatness. It is intended that churches, chapels, cemeteries, and other religious and social conveniences should be attached to each village, as well as public baths and washing establishments for the promotion of cleanliness and health. The parties to be principally benefited are to be, if disposed, allowed to participate as shareholders in the undertaking.

New Oxford-street.—In consequence of some accidents having occurred to the foot passengers in the new street, between Holborn and Oxford street, by the passage of the numerous vehicles, there being no paved footway, the commissioners of Woods and Forests have given directions that at each end of the new street barriers should be set up to prevent the passage of vehicles. They will remain there till the houses which are now being built on either side of the street are completed. Stone pavement will be laid down throughout the street.

The late Fire in the Commercial Road.—The aged blind woman who was supposed to have been destroyed in the late fire at Messrs. Cooper and Wellard's, was found on Friday among the ruins perfectly uninjured. It is remarkable how she endured the extreme heat to which she must have been subjected for the two hours during which the fire was burning.—A fire recently took place in Braimes Buildings, Cripplegate, which induced the coroner to hold an inquest, in order to ascertain the cause. After a long investigation the Jury returned a verdict, finding the occupier, Mr. G. J. Ford, printer, guilty of arson. Mr. Ford has since been committed to Newgate for trial.

Murder in Westminster.—Another murder has been committed in the metropolis, which has been brought to light in a very singular manner; and in consequence of the facts elicited before the magistrate, a young woman called Martha Browning, 25 years of age, has been committed for trial, charged with the wilful murder of Elizabeth Mundell, an elderly woman with whom she resided. The old woman was found dead by her daughter on Monday morning, and on the evening of that day a coroner's jury sat upon the body, and returned a verdict "that deceased had committed suicide whilst in a state of temporary insanity." Since that period some circumstances of a suspicious nature have transpired, tending to criminate the accused as the murderer of the deceased female, and on her being found in possession of a sham bank-note, which it was obvious she had considered genuine, as she had attempted to get change for it, she was closely interrogated by the husband of deceased's daughter, who at once recognised it as corresponding with one of two which the ill-fated woman had been seen to have in her possession the day before her death, and a desire on the part of the prisoner to possess which, supposing them to be genuine bank-notes, it was inferred might have induced her to put a period to the existence of their possessor. The accused's replies were anything but satisfactory, and she endeavoured to effect her escape from the house, but was detained. The husband of deceased's daughter insisted upon her accompanying him to the station, and before their arrival there she became much agitated, and confessed that she did it. The accused during the whole examination before the magistrate was perfectly insensible, and was supported in the dock by police officers.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Dec. 6:—West Districts, 129; Northern, 173; Central 177; Eastern, 215; Southern, 268; Total, 962, males, 478; females, 484. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1292; males, 648; females 644.

Provincial.

Incendiary Fires.—Another incendiary fire has taken place in Berks, making three within a very few weeks, and all within a very short distance of each other. The present one took place on the premises of Mr. Gerring, an extensive farmer, at Great Coxwell, near Farringdon. A bean and straw rick was entirely consumed, and but for the active exertions of the neighbours, the whole contents of the rick-yard would have been consumed. Rewards of 120*l.* are offered on conviction of the offender.—A fire broke out on Wednesday week, at Blada, near Oxford, on the premises of Mr. Wilson, which consumed a hovel and stable at the back part of the premises.—On Saturday morning a fire broke in the farm-yard of Mr. King, at Haycock's-green, Yardley, about four miles from Birmingham, by which nine large stacks (of which two were wheat, two hay, two barley, two beans, and one straw) were totally consumed.—On Thursday week, about 6 P.M., an extensive fire broke out a few miles from Huntingdon, at Gravely, on the farm of Mrs. Fielding. The fire originated in a straw stack standing close to the farm buildings, and spread from one to the other with great rapidity, until, with the exception of one barn and an outhouse, the whole were consumed. The labourers had not left the premises, but they refused to work at the engines, and assembled at a public house near, drinking and singing during the raging of the fire.—On the 1st inst. a fire broke out in an out-building, containing about six loads of unthreshed wheat, the property of John Shand, Esq., of Reny-Birn Hall, near Ruabon, Denbighshire, by which the building and its contents were consumed.—On Saturday a barn filled with corn, with several stacks and out-houses, on the farm of Mr. Tilbrook, of Wilbraham, Cambridgeshire, were destroyed.—In Essex about forty acres of unthrashed barley, a large barn, cow shed, cart lodge, four calves, and a pony, the property of Mr. Thomas Pollett, of Latton, near Harlow, have been destroyed.

Arundel.—The annual dinner of the Arundel Agricultural Society took place on Tuesday, the Duke of Norfolk in the chair, supported by about 150 gentlemen and farmers. The customary toasts having been gone through, Sir R. Hunter in proposing the health of the Chairman said he had been a tenant of his Grace for more than 17 years, and there could not be a more considerate or indulgent landlord. He would give one example, and that was his admirable manner in employing the old and worn-out poor during the severe weather. The toast was drank with great applause. The Chairman on rising to return thanks was much applauded. His grace made some allusion to some remarks in a local paper, which had designated him "the pig-feeding Duke;" but he thought that if he could breed a good pig he was doing some service. He had a great respect for the press when they were doing that which was right, but when that press turned into contempt what a man stated in the hope of doing good, that part of the press degraded itself, and ought to be treated with utter contempt. They might depend upon it that they would always find him speaking his mind, whether the press liked it or not. The noble duke then made some observations relative to drilling and stacking, and then returned to the journalist. If the man he said who abused him in the paper were to write his fingers off he (the Duke), should treat him with silent contempt. Subsequently the Chairman proposed "the health of the labourers," in doing which his Grace said he had recommended the farmers last year to attend to the comforts of the labourers, and to provide them with the means of enjoying the festivities of Christmas: and he need scarcely say that the call upon them, under the present failure of the potato crop, was still more urgent. At the same time he was rejoiced to find at the show to-day a great number of sound potatoes. He should follow the Duke of Richmond's example with regard to procuring potatoes from Portugal and Scotland, and should be happy to give a few seed potatoes to any person who might apply for them. The noble duke then introduced the subject of curry powder, on which he had made some remarks at the Steyning meeting (a report of which will be found in another column), and said that the lady who had suggested the idea to him had tried it among the labourers of several parishes; that there was at first a difficulty in making them take it, but that when she did prevail upon them, it had a good effect. Most people knew what curry powder was: it was made of cayenne pepper and hot spices of different descriptions, and he thought it was very pleasant mixed with rice. The article was dear; it varied from 4*s.* 8*d.* to 8*s.* per pound, but a pinch of it thrown among the potatoes, or in hashed meat gave it a flavour. If a man came home to bed wet and cold, and he had nothing better than warm water, a little of this spice put into it would make him go to bed warmer and more comfortable than he would without it. He hoped he should not be misunderstood; he made the statement in the hope of doing good.—Mr. George Ollivier then proposed the following toast:—"May the tenant farmers of England live on their farms." He would have the tenant farmers enjoy the comforts and conveniences they ought to have for the employment of their capital, so that their homes might be the home of an Englishman's happiness, undisturbed by any fear of a sad deficiency creeping into their concerns and consuming their capital. The tenant farmer had also his duties to perform, in carrying on the cultivation of his land, and carrying up the produce of the land to the highest pitch. If he did that, let him receive his due, the reward of his exertions; and if the reward should involve a modified distribution of the farmers' produce, let that distribution be looked into, and if the landlords' share were too large, it ought to be made smaller, and if the labourers' share were too small it ought to be made larger. Should the tenant farmer be by losses through circumstances over which he had no control be distressed, let him be put into that condition which would enable him to live. He did not intend to say any more on the subject, and he hoped that he had not infringed the rule laid down with regard to the propriety of not introducing political discussions at their meetings. But if the noble duke would bear with him, he should like to make a few observations touching the principle of that rule. He (Mr. Olliver) agreed with the rule that it was a good one; but with regard to general politics, relating exclusively to agriculture, he thought they might be discussed with advantage. Mr. Olliver was here about to make some allusion to the ministers and the corn laws, when he was interrupted by the Chairman who said he felt bound to say Mr. Olliver was out of order. He was quite aware that they were all at sixes and sevens at this moment, and that a very little said would create a blaze, which he desired to avoid. They were met to talk about cattle and turnips, and various things of that description, and whilst he sat in that chair he could not allow discussion about a minister, when things were hanging over them as they were at present. And he, therefore, under these circumstances, had thought proper to call Mr. Olliver to order.—Mr. Olliver said he should bow without hesitation to the chairman, but he thought that in meetings like these more latitude should be allowed for the discussion of agricultural matters, for unless the tenant-farmer could live on his farm and the labourer on his labour, meetings like these went for nothing.—The Chairman said that he should have no objection to meet elsewhere for the purpose of discussing the subject, but he did not think it right to introduce such subjects at meetings of that description, and, added the noble duke with emphasis, "I for one will not sit in this chair if the discussion is continued."—Mr. Olliver said he was not at all desirous of trespassing on the rules.—The Chairman: You are running them confoundedly hard.—Mr. Olliver was again about to address the company, but was interrupted by loud cries of "chair."—The Rev. Mr. Hart, with a view to putting an end to the discussion, proposed the "health of Lord Edward Howard."—Lord Edward Howard, in returning thanks, said he respected the sentiment of "Live and let live," and that he was pleased to see so excellent a meeting.—Mr. Olliver again presented himself to the meeting. He said he had proposed a toast in which he thought all parties would readily join him, and he hoped the noble duke would allow it to be put to the meeting.—The Chairman—Oh, certainly.—The toast was then drank, and a few others followed of local interest.

Croydon.—A special meeting of the members of the East Surrey Agricultural Protection Association has been held at Croydon for the purpose of receiving a report from the different parishes in the county of the amount and quality of the crops and roots, particularly potatoes, with a view that some steps in reference to the subject should be adopted by the Association.—Mr. J. W. Sutherland president of the association took the chair. Most of the principal farmers in the neighbourhood were present, and appeared to take very great interest in the proceedings.—Mr. Drummond, the secretary, read returns that had been made from 25 parishes, the general result of which showed that of wheat there was an average crop, of barley and peas somewhat more than an average, oats, were deficient about one-fifth, and the potato crop appeared to have failed to the extent of about one-half.—Mr. Sutherland in his address to the meeting after the returns had been made congratulated them on the fact of the wheat crop being an average one. He then alluded to the report that it was the intention of the Ministry to repeal the Corn-laws, and he observed that although that report might be premature, yet he apprehended there could be very little doubt that eventually some great alteration would be made in the law regarding the importation of corn, and he thought it was a very important consideration whether the agricultural interest might not, by taking the question in time, obtain some satisfactory arrangement of it, and avoid having to submit to extreme measures. If any alteration was to be made, he considered that our own colonies ought to have the benefit of it, in preference to foreign nations generally.—Mr. Hampden Turner, of Rook's Nest, said that he did not agree with the observations of the Chairman. They were not met to suggest any modification of the Corn Laws, but to devise the best means to support the present system of protection to agriculture.—Mr. Antrobus, M.P., said that he had read the statement in the Times respecting the positive intention of the Ministry to repeal the Corn Laws, with great surprise, but he did not believe it to be true, and it had since been contradicted, apparently from an official source, and he was inclined to believe there was no foundation for the statement. A very great outcry had, however, been raised upon the subject, and the apprehended scarcity of food had no doubt tended to increase the excitement, but the returns that had been read showed that there was no ground for alarm, at all events to the extent that had prevailed, and the state of the crops was by no means such as to warrant any extreme course being resorted to. With regard to the question of protection, he and his colleague had, in the character of their representatives, in common with the majority of the Conservative Members of the House of Commons, consented to a very considerable alteration and modification of the old law, feeling themselves called upon to do so by the depressed condition of the manufacturing classes at that period, and they had hoped that the present law would have been considered satisfactory. That, however, did not appear to be the case, but should any extreme measure be proposed, the Government would certainly be opposed by the Conservative Members, who were pledged to the support of agriculture, and he had no doubt that they would be found strong enough to prevent any such measure from being carried.—Several other gentlemen addressed the meeting, and resolutions were passed, declaring an opinion that there was no ground for the extent of alarm that prevailed respecting the sufficiency of provision for the people, or for any alteration of the law regarding the importation of corn, and calling upon the Members of the House of Commons to support the present Corn-law.

Leicester.—The annual dinner of the Leicestershire Agricultural Society took place on Friday last, in this town. The Duke of Rutland presided, and was supported by H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, Baron Knesebeck, Lord C. Manners, M.P.; the Hon. H. W. Wilson; Sir H. Halford, Bart., M.P.; Sir A. Hazlerigg, Bart.; Mr. C. W. Packe, M.P.; Colonel Wollaston; Colonel King; Colonel Chenery; Mr. Charles Hay Frewen; Mr. T. Miles; Mr. Edmund Burnaby; Mr. G. Kemp, Belton; Mr. Charles Stokes, Kingston; Mr. Sills, of Honington; and about 120 other gentlemen. After the usual routine toasts, his Grace the Chairman proposed the health of their royal guest, "the Duke of Cambridge."—His Royal Highness, in returning thanks, remarked that he felt great pleasure in being able to attend the meeting on two accounts—first, because he had been prevented attending on previous occasions, as he had been desirous; and, secondly, that he understood there was a panic in this neighbourhood. He should not feel so convinced of what he was about to state, if he had not had means of examining into its correctness, and he thought from what he had the means of becoming acquainted with, that no class of persons in this country had cause of complaint. The state of things had certainly been made much worse by the reports of the potato disease, but he was glad to say that it was not so bad as had been first represented—not even in Ireland, where so great complaints had been made. He believed that the report of a panic was a false one; and he should be the last person to make such a statement if he had not a full opinion of its correctness. His royal highness concluded by expressing his satisfaction at the manner in which his health had been proposed and received, and sat down amidst loud applause.—The distribution of prizes to labourers then took place, his Grace the Duke of Rutland presenting the greater portion personally, and his royal highness the Duke of Cambridge also presenting several to the labourers. This task having been completed, the CHAIRMAN said he could only liken the great society of this country to a vast chain, the links of which were all of equal importance, and one of which if injured must produce injury to all the rest, and after wishing health and happiness to the recipients of the premiums, recommended them to retire to their respective homes and follow out the example they had set which would be beneficial not only to themselves, but to all around them.—The Duke of CAMBRIDGE proposed "the health of his Grace the Duke of Rutland, the lord lieutenant of the county," which was drank with enthusiastic cheers.—The Duke of RUTLAND acknowledged the toast, and proposed "Success to the Leicestershire Agricultural Society." He said these associations had now been sufficiently long established to show that the agriculture of this country was of the highest importance to its interests and stability as a nation, and he would go so far as to say that to the industry and energy of the cultivators of the soil was owing the great importance of this country as a great and commercial empire. For the efficacy of agricultural associations it was only necessary for him to refer to what had taken place in that room that evening, when individuals of every class in society, from a prince of the blood to a peasant at the plough, had taken part in their proceedings. No one, not even the most venomous Leaguer, would deny that it was the most advantageous course that could be adopted to push forward into the market the greatest amount of native produce. He had said at an agricultural meeting a few months ago, and he repeated it now, that he should be satisfied when this country produced sufficient for the consumption of its own population, that no fear need be entertained of competition from foreign countries. There were two topics which were of the utmost importance at the present moment—he referred to the unfortunate disease amongst the potatoes, which he believed might be considered a very important ingredient in the food of the population, and which he always relished himself; and had the disease been so extensive as represented it must have proved very lamentable in its effects. He made the remarks with respect to potatoes forming an important item of the food of the poor from his own experience, being a large owner of allotments, and he would suggest to those gentlemen who were similarly situated to afford the allotment holders every assistance in their power when the spring, which would be felt to be the pinching time, came. For his own part he was resolved to devote his most serious consideration and attention to the subject, so far as regarded his own allotment tenants. He hoped, however, that much that had been urged as to the diseased potatoes was exaggerated, as well as what had been said of the deficiency of the harvest, both of which he considered had been endeavoured to be shown to be greater than they really were by persons for motives which he could not, of course, conceive. He did not know whether it was owing to the influence of the skies, or the insular position of the country, but there must be something really affecting the British character to make one person in every three what were termed "croakers." His Grace then referred to the wheat crop in Cambridgeshire and Bedfordshire, which he considered, from the information he had received, to be above the usual average; and taking into account that the harvest of the previous year had carried them over eight weeks of the present year, and that the harvest in the present year would afford a supply for ten or eleven months, there could be no doubt of any serious deficiency. From accounts which he had procured, he found that the imports of wheat from Canada were—from Jan. 1 to the 5th of November, 1844, 203,784 quarters; for the first ten months of 1845 the imports of wheat were 147,301 qrs.; from other parts, for the ten months prior to November 5, 1844, the imports of wheat were 1,109,276 quarters; while imports from the same places during the corresponding months of 1845 were only 559,755, or a total, in the ten months of 1844, of 1,313,000 quarters, and, 1845, of 660,000 quarters. His Grace also referred to the increase in the number of cattle imported, remarking as one instance of the little effect it had on the price of meat, that beef was now sold at the same price in Smithfield as it was in 1841; and after giving some statistics relative to the quantity of cattle in Smithfield-market, concluded by proposing "Success to the Leicestershire Agricultural Society."—Sir H. HALFORD, Bart., M.P., in returning thanks for the Vice-Presidents, adverted to the deficiency of the potato crop, which was a serious calamity, but was not so bad as had been anticipated. They could not, however, shut their eyes to the uses which had been made of the deficiency of the crop. It had been represented not as a visitation of Providence, but as the consequence of a system. This could not be maintained, for all other countries were suffering equally with ourselves. It was a matter of pleasure that great part of our sustenance was still supplied by this country, subject indeed to the laws of God, but not of man. Suppose the deficiency to have arisen solely from the deficient growth of our own soil, we should have been compelled to beg of our foreign neighbours, for the supply of corn would then have to be regulated by the same laws of supply and demand as other articles of consumption. It had been said that when there was a dearth in one country it did not exist in another. Now he did not agree with this, and although he differed from many of the doctrines of Mr. Malthus, he agreed with him when, in 1817, before a committee of the House of Commons, he exposed this fallacy, and showed that when there was a deficiency in this country it extended to the Continent also. There could be no doubt that the people of this country were fully entitled to corn at as cheap a rate as it could be afforded, but this was not to be attained by the importation of foreign corn, but by increased cultivation, improved modes of farming, and other means within our own resources. If the farmers had such a degree of protection as to exclude all other corn but their own, they might then grow lazy; but he did not hesitate to say, that if protection were so far withdrawn as to throw the poor land of this country out of cultivation, it would be the most disastrous event that had ever occurred to us as a nation. The hon. gentleman read some extracts to show the superior farming of the English over the French farmer, at least as evinced by the larger amount of production per acre in this country.—Mr. C. W. PACKE, M.P., in proposing the "successful candidates," observed that he had heard much of a panic, but he was glad to be informed that it had been greatly over-rated, and was not of that serious character they had been led to imagine. He had the gratification of stating, for his own part, that the quantity of wheat he had thrashed out was five quarters per acre; and he had reason to hope that the remaining portion would grant a similar produce on its being thrashed. He could not stand there as a member of Parliament, as their representative, without alluding to what had appeared in the Times newspaper (hear, hear, and tremendous cheers). He believed it to be a complete and wilful falsehood, and a weak and malicious invention of the enemy to paralyse the country. But, whatever might occur, he should certainly be one of the foremost to oppose what had been very properly designated by his hon. friend (Sir H. Halford) as one of the most disastrous innovations which could occur to this country. He expressed his belief that in so acting he should be conferring as much benefit upon manufacturers as upon agriculturists. Several other toasts were responded to, and his royal highness and the noble chairman left the room amidst loud applause.

Oakham.—The annual dinner of the Rutland Agricultural Society took place last week in the Agricultural Hall, in this town, the Hon. W. M. NOEL in the chair, supported by about 90 gentlemen. After the usual loyal toasts the chairman proposed "Success to the Rutland Agricultural Society." He was sorry that he was not able to congratulate the meeting on the state of the potato crop; the murrain or distemper amongst the potatoes seemed so general in every climate and soil, that its real cause seemed to puzzle the wisest men. However, it was gratifying to know that a remedy had been found for stopping the contagion, so that he trusted they would still have enough, in moderation, for their consumption, as well as enough for seed next year. He thought they must look upon this calamity of the potato failure as one of those all-wise dispensations or judgments of the Almighty, which were intended to warn them that they were to look to Him, and not to themselves, for all the blessings and comforts which they enjoyed in this life. Mr. GEORGE BETTS of Ketton, responded to the toast. He did not know to what cause to attribute the success of the Rutland Agricultural Society. Although many had suffered severely in the share market, yet he knew of no description of share which was at so high a premium as the plough-share. He hoped it would be stated by the gentlemen of the press that at the Rutland Stock Exchange the stock of all classes was at a high premium; but in one class there seemed to be some heaviness—the "swinish multitude"—for many of them did not like to get up. As a tenant-farmer he was glad to say that the observations he made last year had been met by the landlords in the manner he had hoped, and with which he was much gratified. He did not see what occasion there was for so much fear and alarm with reference to the harvest as had been excited by the newspapers, many of which circulated erroneous statements in this respect, principally because there was a dearth of other news. As to bulk, he never had a better stack-yard in his life. Certainly the yield of corn was not so great this year as the last, but it was not so deficient as many had been led to suppose. He should wish the impression of scarcity to be removed. A friend of his had stated that the consumption of the crop of last year was considerably less than that of the year previous, which was a matter of great importance. He would now conclude by returning his thanks to the Chairman for the kind manner in which he had expressed his desire for the success of the Rutland Agricultural Society, merely adding that a friend of his had been asked "What do you farmers want?" His friend's reply was "We want nowt—only let us alone."—The Chairman gave the "Health of the High Sheriff of the County," and Mr. S. O'BRIEN, M.P., gave the health of the Lord Lieutenant, the Marquis of Exeter.—Mr. HEATHCOTE proposed the health of the Earl of Gainsborough, which was acknowledged by Mr. O'BRIEN, who said that his lordship had ever taken a lively interest in the pursuits of agriculture, with which his interests were also bound up. The events passing around them must colour their proceedings with their hues. It was, however, a most wise regulation of this Society not to mix up political matters in their proceedings; yet public matters could not be less interesting to the agriculturist than to the manufacturer. If they were to dilate on the question of opening the ports, or of free trade, it would be as unwise as it would be opposed to the rules of the Society; but to dilate on the subject of scarcity, coupled with thankfulness to God that he had not extended that scarcity to these lands, could not be objected to, as they were feelings in which every patriot and true-hearted man must concur. They were not trespassing on forbidden ground when they said that it was a source of just pride to British farmers, while they read of one country depending on oats, another on barley, another on wheat, another on potatoes, to know that they were so well practised in the noble science of agriculture, as to be independent of foreign supplies of every sort of grain, even of wheat, in a season of such an antagonistic character. Without expressing an opinion, good or ill, of the conduct of those at the head of affairs, yet they might challenge comparison, taking extent of surface into consideration, with regard to agriculture, with any nation on the face of the globe. But did he mean to say to them, practical agriculturists, that the farming of this country had arrived, even in theory, to perfection? He believed the sentiment would be re-echoed by every one present, when he said the man who averred that it was the opinion of the farmers of England that agriculture in this country had attained perfection, would err as much as if he were to say that agriculture had made no progress. Every British agriculturist knew that it was by a knowledge of the elements of temperature, soil, climate, and season, and by cautious discussion and slow induction, that any practical result could be arrived at. Great outlay of capital, energy, and enterprise, and industry had been necessary to enable the British agriculturist to take the high station which he had attained. He believed they would still possess the confidence of the legislature: he believed that between landlord and tenant there would be full co-operation; and, therefore, he believed that the science of agriculture, without which all others were worthless, would progress in this country. Yet they must feel that in the future they must have occasion for many anxious thoughts. Never, in the history of agriculture, was there a time when a more thorough understanding was required between landlord and tenant—between tenant and labourer—between constituent and representative—than was required on the present occasion. He could safely say thus much without provoking hostility on the ground of party politics, which certainly ought not to enter into their discussions. If they admitted party politics on these occasions, they would be turning the pruning-hook into a spear, and the ploughshare into a sword. But they were citizens of an empire on which the sun never set; and being composed of different classes and interests, they must remember that the adjustment of the claims of these varied interests, rights, immunities, and privileges, must be the subject of careful investigation with those who represented them in the House of Commons. He would say that those men whom they had sent to that House were firmly attached to their cause. He believed the agriculturists enjoyed the confidence of the country, because they had deserved it, and he trusted that they would continue to deserve it. Of course, they would consider what was for and against them; how far they had a right to call upon other classes for support; and how far they were able to achieve their own great work themselves. Although he had not the honour of representing them in Parliament, yet only a very narrow river divided that county from Northampton—so narrow that, when he came to Rutland, he forgot that the division existed at all; and wherever he might raise his voice on behalf of the farmers of England, not the least pleasant recollection of his mind would be his connection with this, he was proud to call it, his native county. In returning thanks on behalf of one uncle, he had now to propose the health of another, who once represented that county in Parliament. They all knew his good qualities; he had come to the meeting at some personal inconvenience—no, he would not say that—it ought to be no inconvenience to come to Rutland; nevertheless, their worthy friend had come some distance, and he had now great pleasure in proposing the health of the Chairman.—The CHAIRMAN in returning thanks said he had considered that the glory of England was chiefly based upon that great combination of strength put forth by her agriculture, her commerce, and her manufactures united. All these different classes had hitherto flourished; if not all together, at any rate in their respective turns, and the prosperity of each had contributed to the health of the whole, like the limbs of the human body; for they all knew that when the little finger ached, the whole body felt the pain. He considered that on the prosperous condition of the great agricultural body depended the prosperity and well-being of the British empire; for in fact, after all, the agriculturists were like the camels of Egypt, they were the real beasts of burden. He did hope that their prospects as landlords and tenants would not be meddled with again. The sliding scale had been so tinkered and patched, that it would not bear mending any more, and he hoped that our Prime Minister would be faithful to them, and that he would never forget the memorable day when his three hundred friends placed him in triumph where he was! With their permission, he would give as a toast, before he sat down, "Agriculture in all its branches, and with it the Agricultural Labourers;" who, in his opinion, were the best guardians of old John Bull's title-deeds. The Chairman then gave "The Judges of the Stock," for which Mr. UMBERS returned thanks. The CHAIRMAN proposed "The health of the Members for the County." Mr. HEATHCOTE, M.P., responded to the toast. They were bound to adhere to the consideration of the mechanical part of agriculture; but allusions had been made of a political tendency, and the great warmth of feeling which they had exhibited at these allusions sufficiently demonstrated the strength of their feelings on the subject.—When he last had the honour of addressing them, he alluded to the state and prospects of agriculture, especially as it regarded the harvest. It might not now be inexpedient to make a few observations on this subject. He believed that the late harvest was one of the most expensive and anxious to the agriculturist that had ever taken place. Few harvests had occurred in which so many vicissitudes of weather, so much anxiety and expense, heavy and severe, so long and so protracted, had taken place as during the late harvest. But he would express a hope that it would be found that many of those fears that had been expressed in the public press with reference to the probability of scarcity and famine, would not be realised. In fact, he believed that many persons had expressed their opinion on the harvest long before it was over. The late weather had enabled them in Scotland to save the harvest to a greater extent than usual. He knew that some injury had been sustained by the wheat crop; compare it with that of last year it might not be so great, but last year was one of great produce, and had left, he hoped, stocks of old wheat in hand. In reference to spring corn this deficiency did not apply, and especially was this the case in reference to oats in those parts of the country where the food of the people was of a coarser kind. If there was scarcity, he did not think the agriculturists were receiving scarcity prices. In 1800, the year of famine, wheat rose to 113*s.* per quarter; in 1801 it rose to 119*s.*, and in 1812 to 126*s.* per quarter. What was the result of Stamford market last week? Why wheat was at 54*s.* The Gazette average had been 58*s.*, and last week it was 57*s.* This showed that the prices of grain were moderate, and were even falling, at the rate of 1*s.* per week. In 1842 it had been stated by high authority, that the probable range of price under the new law of that year would be from 54*s.* to 58*s.* Previous to 1842, the average for thirteen or fourteen years was just 56*s.* Prices, therefore, at present, were usual and moderate; and the Gazette showed they were falling. If there was a scarcity, some rise in price would be proper; which would be just to the producer to make amends for his losses, and also just to the consumer, to prevent waste. He scarcely took up a newspaper which did not allude to the subject of the potato failure. He admitted that scarcity existed in some degree, but he thought the extent of that scarcity was exaggerated. A very large proportion of potatoes was given to pigs and cattle, and it was known the disease did not prevent the use of them, and also for seed. He did think that some attempt had been made to get up a case, founded on an exaggerated view of the potato failure, for the purpose of educing certain changes which they knew would be the greatest evil. On such questions they ought not to rest upon mere rumour, but go to the bottom of the matter, and obtain facts. Another subject of congratulation was that by the accounts they received from the Continent and other foreign parts, it would appear that if we were badly off, yet we were much better off than foreigners. Why was this? It arose from the fact that up to this time we had endeavoured to protect and foster agriculture. There was another species of fostering agriculture, of which he would not now speak, but he could of the Cork Agricultural Society, and experience bore this out, and this much mitigated the evil. The object of those present was to foster in every way the mechanical process by which the agriculture of the country is carried on. It was to improve the breeds of cattle, find out the best seeds, and shorten the process by the improvements carried on; and that country was happy which trusted for its supply of food to that superior and skilful cultivation which was so manifest in this country, instead of that inferior and uncertain process which marked the agriculture of barbarous and uncivilised countries. It was also another cause of satisfaction, that although the harvest had been expensive to the farmer, it had been gainful to the labourer; harvest wages both for corn and hay had never been so long, and wages were now much better than they had been. He knew no one grudged them. The labourer was worthy of his hire, and so was the farmer of his just and fair profit.—The Hon. W. H. DAWNAY also acknowledged the toast. The CHAIRMAN then gave as the last toast the health of a Member of Parliament now present, who had given the agricultural interest the most strenuous support—Mr. O'Brien.—The toast was drank with great enthusiasm.—Mr. O'BRIEN then rose, and was received with rapturous applause. After some preliminary remarks, the Hon. Gentleman observed that the commercial interests of the country ought to be subservient to the agricultural interest, not that they prized commerce less, but that they valued agriculture more. This should ever be his endeavour either in public or private.

Steyning.—The annual dinner of the Steyning Agricultural Society took place on Monday, the Duke of Norfolk in the chair, supported by the Duke of Richmond, Lord E. Howard, Sir C. M. Burrell, Bart., and about 130 gentlemen and farmers.—The Duke of RICHMOND, in proposing the health of the chairman, thanked him for his constant attendance at these meetings. They owed the noble duke great thanks for showing so good an example to the landowners of the country, for his zeal in promoting the interests of agriculture, and for his anxiety to ameliorate the condition of the labouring classes.—The CHAIRMAN, in returning thanks, said he should be always proud to fill the chair whenever his attendance was wished for by this society. It would be always his anxious desire to promote the welfare of the agriculturists, and likewise the benefit of the poor labourers. —"The Lord-Lieutenant of the County," was the next toast.—The Duke of RICHMOND assured the company that he was most happy in again having the opportunity of meeting them, and at finding again those warm expressions of kindness and of esteem which he had ever received when it had been his good fortune to meet the farmers of his native country. He felt it to be a matter of deep gratification to be able to mix with the tenantry of the country at large. He felt also that these societies were of great use, not only in enabling us to judge by the stock that were shown which had the greatest aptitude to fatten, but he felt it to be a great privilege to the landowners of the country, that they had these opportunities of mixing with those whose interests were one and the same with their own. After some remarks on the paucity of the day's show, the noble Duke said "You will not expect from me a long speech on the present occasion. I can only assure you that the sentiments which I have formerly uttered in this room, and in its neighbourhood (alluding to the great meeting at which the Sussex Society for the Protection of Agriculture was formed in January, 1844) remain unchanged. You will ever find me on all points, and on all occasions, come forward to advocate the interests of yourselves, and to defend your rights; for I believe in my conscience that those interests and those rights are the mainstay of the prosperity of this great country. I am not one of those who will be led away by temporary and popular clamour. I have formed my opinion; by that opinion I will stand or fall. I can only again return thanks for the compliment that you have paid me, and express to you that I do not feel myself deserving of the great honour which the farmers of the country have ever put upon me. (Cries of "Yes, yes.") But you must take the will for the deed; and the will will never be found wanting in your cause. (Great applause.)—"The Members for the Rape of Bramber" having been drunk, Sir C. BURRELL, Bart., M.P., acknowledged the toast. As a public man he had little to say on this occasion, because politics were forbidden thear and "no"). He should merely say on the same principle as the noble duke had expressed to them, that at all times he hoped he should be found doing his duty as the farmer's friend to the best of his ability, and the benefit of the nation at large. He had for many years devoted himself to agriculture as a sincere and grateful friend. He believed it to be one of those occupations in which a gentleman might serve his country in the best manner by trying various experiments which it was not convenient for the tenant farmer to try. Some of these experiments he had been very unsuccessful in, and he had not been ashamed to own his errors; and when he had been successful he had not concealed it for his own private interest; but he had given it publicity in the hope that it might be conducive in promoting the interests of agriculture. The hon. baronet then proceeded to speak of the cultivation of white carrots and under drainage. He had under-drained between 800 and 900 acres at a great expense; but the expense had been returned to him in the increase of crops. He proposed "The health of Lord Edward Howard."—LORD E. HOWARD acknowledged the compliment, and lamented the paucity of the show.—The CHAIRMAN proposed "The Members for the County."—Sir C. BURRELL took the opportunity of eulogising the services of Mr. Darby, one of the members for the Eastern division. He was sorry to learn that Mr. Darby had expressed his intention to resign, having accepted office as an Enclosure Commissioner, and he suggested that the electors of the east part of the county should press upon him not to resign.—The DUKE of RICHMOND entirely concurred with Sir C. Burrell in the merits of Mr. Darby, who, he was sorry to hear, was about to resign his seat. He stated that the Earl of March, one of their members, was not present in consequence of the expected confinement of the Countess. He could assure them that the Earl of March would maintain those principles which caused them to place him in that honourable position; and he would maintain those principles, not only because he pledged himself on the hustings, but because he felt that by fulfilling that pledge he was best conducing to the interests of this country.—The CHAIRMAN said there was one toast which must not be forgotten before they parted, and that was the health of the "Industrious Labourers." In consequence of the badness of the potatoes in this county, they ought to pay more attention to the labourers this year than on ordinary occasions. There was a thing, said his Grace, suggested to me the other day which I am almost afraid to repeat, because a portion of the press perverted what I said on a former occasion, and turned it into ridicule. But I assure you that matters very little to me, if I can add one moment's comfort to any poor man. Gentlemen, a thing was suggested, in a letter by a lady the other day, which certainly is very warm and comfortable to the stomach, if it can be got cheap. The other day when I was in London, I went to several places to inquire, and I bought a pound or two of it, because there is more difficulty attached to it than what we at first imagined. They have not been accustomed to it, and, perhaps may not like the taste. I like it very much myself. In India a vast portion of the population use it; in fact, it is there to them what Potatoes are in Ireland. I mean "curry powder." (Laughter.) People may smile at it at first, but it is a very warm thing, made of peppers and a variety of things of that description. If any gentleman will try and take a pinch and put it into hot water—I don't mean to say it will make a good soup, but this I say, that if a man comes home, and has nothing better, it will make him warm and go to bed comfortable. (Laughter.) It may create amusement, but if any gentleman will try it, he will find out what I say. I don't say it may be given in quantities; but with Potatoes, or a little bit of bacon, or anything of that kind, it is like a pickle. People whose appetites are fastidious take pickle; and with this article, a pinch of it will make a meal extremely palatable and comfortable. I mean to try it among my labourers; and by doing that I am sure that if the winter comes on severe, we may add very much to the comforts of the poor. I may be ridiculed hereafter for what I say; but, as I said before, I don't care what is said, so long as I can make the poor comfortable. I only recommend this to your notice, gentlemen. I give their health with every respect and esteem; and I trust we shall all do what we can to add to their comforts.—The Duke of RICHMOND rose to second the toast of his noble friend—to drink the health of the industrious labourers of the country. There were no men whose services were more necessary for the owners and occupiers than those of the labourers. Theirs was a service of toil; and when they do their duty to the farmers and landlords, the latter always do their duty to the labourers. I believe not in that cry (continued the noble Duke) of scarcity and famine which has been held forth throughout the breadth of the land by the press of this country. I am not one of those who will deny the benefit of a free press in this great country; but you must be well aware that the press may be deceived as well as others. I have not tried the experiment which my noble friend has suggested to you; but I believe, that in the county of Sussex, though there has been prevalent a disease amongst the potatoes, yet that there are a great many good and sound ones. I assure you that in the north of Scotland, from which I have lately come, in three or four counties no potato disease has exhibited itself at all. I know that my noble friend wishes to do his duty to the labourers on his estate; I know that the farmers of Sussex have ever done theirs. He will permit me, then, to suggest to him on the present occasion how we, the landowners, may be of service. I own that I do feel it to be somewhat dangerous, that where the potatoes have failed, the same seed should be used again by the labourers in their gardens next year. I feel that this is of great importance; and we, as farmers, know well the great advantage which it is to us to vary the seed on our farms. Most of us in every season sell seed-wheat, but we buy seed-wheat from another country, or another soil. I believe, therefore, that the landowners of Sussex will best consult the interests of their labourers, if they will take care that where the plant has been diseased this year the labourer may be enabled to plant next year potatoes that have not been diseased. I hope and trust that I have never preached anything that I do not practise. I have myself brought from another county a large quantity of potatoes, for the purpose of giving to my labourers, and to those who live in my cottages, seed from a distant part of the country, because I think that though this year we have not to complain of an entire failure, yet I do feel that if we continue to plant these diseased potatoes, perhaps another year we may have a failure of a more dangerous and extensive character. The noble Duke proceeded to say, that the crop of potatoes at Lisbon was never better than this year; and if there should be a failure in this country, there would be no difficulty in bringing potatoes from that country to this at a price which, if beyond the labourers' means, the landowners ought to pay for.—The CHAIRMAN said, as his noble friend had spoken about the seed of potatoes, he might mention that, for an experiment, he had planted three of the worst potatoes, three middling ones, and three of the best, and had put them into a hot-house to see what they would yield. They had not been long enough there for him to ascertain yet, but the worst ones had not shown, the middling ones had, and the best had not. His view was this, that if the worst ones showed and produced potatoes, to see whether the disease would be generated in the young potatoes. He should watch them in the most careful manner, and whatever happened to turn out he should put in the papers, that people might know exactly how far his experiment had gone. They had ten thousand ways of treating potatoes, most of them ways which rich people could try, but not the poor. He believed the secret was to keep them as dry as possible, and dry them over the fire, or something in that way. That was the simplest and the best mode yet found out. The noble chairman shortly after vacated the chair.

Yeovil.—The annual dinner of the Yeovil Agricultural Society took place in this town on Friday. Mr. E. A. Sandford presided, and was supported by the two county members, Mr. Acland, M.P., and Mr. Dickinson, M.P., and also by Mr. R. Neville, M.P. for Windsor; the Revs. J. Wickens, W. Newbolt, J. Jekyll, Captains Steele and Hoskins; Messrs. W. Hoskins, W. Sandford, W. Richards, E. Newman, and about 180 of the neighbouring farmers. The dinner was remarkable for the vehement uproar with which the farmers received their two county members, whom they regard as having betrayed their cause. Their repeated and angry interruptions, of which we give a specimen below, proved how excited the farmers of Somerset are on the subject of the Corn-laws. After the usual routine toasts, the chairman proposed the healths of "Mr. T. D. Acland, M.P., and Mr. F. H. Dickinson, M.P." He need not impress on them the fact that their Society had no political motive whatever; their object was to improve each other in agricultural pursuits in the best manner they could possibly devise, and he was convinced that such meetings as these could not be otherwise than of unmixed good if altogether divested from politics: but if not, then they must be of unmixed evil, and having said this much he would give them the health of two gentlemen who had the honour to represent them in Parliament. He (Mr. Sandford) himself had once a seat in the House of Commons, and could, therefore, speak by experience what it was to undergo great toil by night and day. He was of opinion the best manner in which they could advance the interests of such meetings as these was to divest them entirely of political feeling, and he was sure that the gentlemen present must be of the same opinion. He would, therefore, ask them to join with him in drinking the health of the two county members. (Cries of "No, no." Here groans and a general hissing followed, which lasted for a very considerable time. The Chairman resumed most emphatically.) They had done their best. (Cries of "No, no!" and "What have they done?" and here followed a scene of great confusion, which lasted some minutes): in the meantime the two hon. members whose healths had been drunk rose, when cries of "We do not want to hear you," "Sit down," &c. prevailed, and at length the Chairman rose, but the confusion was too great to hear him for some minutes, when he said—He most certainly was in hopes that the observations which he had made would have terminated this affair, that they would have listened to the replies of their county members? He gave them this advice. He would not, however, call it advice, but his opinion, thinking that those gentlemen merited a fair hearing, and this opinion he gave them, believing, as he was their Chairman, and representing the meeting on this occasion, that he should have been heard and attended to; and it was merely by virtue of his office that he attempted to propose that toast, and he begged most distinctly to be understood that he had no object in view by so doing: he would, therefore, appeal to them again to desist from the course of interruption they had pursued by remaining silent while those gentlemen responded to the toasts. He did not ask this favour of them for the sake of his friend on his right hand, or his friend on his left, but that he, the Chairman might be enabled to discharge his duty—it was for his own sake that he claimed their indulgence (cries of "No, certainly not;" "Let him speak;" "Order, order," and "Chair").—At this time Dr. TOMPKINS, the vice-chairman, rose and said, he thought that this was a meeting of gentlemen, and he trusted they would conduct themselves in a proper and becoming manner. (Cries of "Sit down, Tompkins," "What do you know about it?" and confusion and uproar followed.)—Mr. ACLAND, M.P., then rose, and in a very audible voice inquired if he were to speak, or not? He should be very much obliged to them to allow him: he was glad that order was being restored, and was much obliged to the Chairman and Vice-Chairman, and also to his friends, for in endeavouring to obtain for him a hearing—(here the uproar again commenced, and) The CHAIRMAN again rose and said, he had requested them for their own sake, and for the good of the society, to allow the county members to respond to the toast—now would they give Mr. Acland an opportunity?—Mr. ACLAND, M.P., then added he wished it to be understood that he did not claim to himself any merit for being there that day: but he thought if he had not come among them, he should have offended every person in that room. (Cries of "You have done that already." Laughter.) They were aware he had been unavoidably absent in another part of the country: still, he had that day come there on purpose to support their worthy chairman. (Cries of "That will not do.") No doubt, many young farmers had found it to their interest to attend, both in times of political excitement as well as others, in order to meet their friends: and he was strongly of opinion that gentlemen should encourage such meetings, not only by their presence, but also by giving premiums for stock as well as for rewards to husbandmen: and he could not help thinking that the society was much obliged to gentlemen who exhibited stock, which did a vast deal of good. He was very glad to add that no circumstances had altered his opinion in that respect, and therefore it was with very great pleasure that he met them on the present occasion. (Cries of "Oh! dear," followed by hisses and groans, and "Sit down, it is all humbug.") There were several other objects which rendered the meeting interesting to him. ("Yes," said a voice, "You come here and support this society, and then go away and support free trade." Another voice, "That's about the sense of it.") He was quite ready to explain. (Cries of "It is all humbug—you come here and talk about cherishing agriculture, and then go away and do all that you can against it.") The speaker here endeavoured again to be heard: he said, he had already expressed his entire ignorance and——(Cries of "That's all very fine." "Humbug," "What good is it to laugh and get up there and grin and say nothing?") The speaker again tried to be heard: he said, he should very much like to say a few words with reference to himself. He was aware what had happened of late, but he could justify his own conduct. (A voice, "Why don't you?") He was afraid they would hunt him down. He had been their representative for eight years (A voice, "That is eight years longer than you will be again"), and he feared at length that his views were misunderstood. Now, he would tell them this most plainly, that any man who did his duty to his constituents fairly, honourably, and independently, that man must at times make up his account to be misunderstood. (Partial cheers.) He would say more, that man must also, at certain times, refrain from expressing his sentiments on passing events for fear of widening a breach which he had no part in making. He would add, that for reasons he had abstained from joining the Agricultural Protection Society: and with reference to that subject his intentions had also been misconstrued: however, he was willing to take the consequences on himself, and although unwilling to enter into a justification in that room, still there would be an opportunity and in its proper place, and then he should most cheerfully make every explanation. (Cheers, groans, and hisses.)—Mr. DICKINSON, M.P., then rose, but the uproar increased to that extent that not a single word could be heard, but various voices uttering epithets showing disapprobation.—At length the CHAIRMAN said, if they wished him to continue as their chairman, he must beg they would allow Mr. Dickinson to address them. Such conduct no one could appreciate; and while they thus continued to annoy him, it was quite impossible that any one could hear him. (Cries of "He is a free trader.") The Chairman continued, that whatever may be the opinion of Mr. Dickinson or any one else, he had privilege of right and a privilege of speech as an Englishman.—Mr. DICKINSON then said—If they would but hear him, he should, he believed, be enabled to satisfy every one of them by the time he had concluded, and he presumed that no one would regret that the opportunity had been afforded him. The speaker then referred to his conduct as to the observations he made at a meeting there, when the uproar increased, and Mr. Dickinson added, He was [illegible] whether he had made himself audible at the other end of the room. Time was when he met them on terms of friendship, and he most sincerely trusted that that time would come again. (Cries of "No," and "Sit down." Here the uproar again increased, and as there was no chance of his being heard,)—The CHAIRMAN again rose, but it was [illegible] fore even he himself could be heard. He said [illegible] what on earth he could do more than what he had done, to obtain a hearing for the hon. gentlemen whose healths he had proposed. He had asked them that favour which he would most willingly granted for either of them if required. All that he had said, however, had not produced the desired effect. They had chosen Mr. Dickinson as their representative, and had placed him in a proud position, and it was very natural that he should be most anxious to address them. ("He has done nothing to merit a hearing." The [illegible] sumed,)—He came there that day with all good feeling to support the agricultural interest, and so far as he was concerned he would to his utmost do so; but as their chairman he was to be heard.—Mr. DICKINSON, M.P., then again rose and said that he had a few observations to make, but by no means of a political character; and he hoped they would hear him. He had been a fortunate competitor there that day, though he wished that some other person had won the prize. He had examined the stock which had been exhibited, and he must have hoped that there had been a better show. The hon. gentleman concluded by proposing the health of the chairman (Mr. Sandford), which was for a long time not heard, as the uproar continued the greater portion of the hon. gentleman's speech, but when explained by the secretary, was received with long and continued cheering.—The CHAIRMAN having retired, left the room for London, to meet an engagement made for the next morning, when Mr. Pinney took the vacated chair. The new CHAIRMAN then rose and said, perhaps they would allow him the pleasure of proposing a toast: it was that of a gentleman whose health he was sure they would drink with great pleasure. They had already drunk the healths of the two county members, but there still was another hon. [illegible] present. (Cries of "Who is that?" A voice, "The member for Windsor." "Oh," replied they, "he won't do neither, he is a shocking bad fellow too!" Laughter). They would drink the health, continued the chairman, of Mr. Neville, the member for Windsor. (Uproar).—Mr. Neville very briefly replied; after this many toasts connected with the agricultural society followed without further interruption.

Railways.

PRICES AND TRAFFIC, by permission, from the List of Messrs. HILL, FAWCETT, & HILL, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

NAME OF RAILWAY. Those marked thus * are not yet opened.	GROSS RECEIPTS OF TRAFFIC. Week ending between Dec. 2. & Dec. 9.	Corresponding Week, 1844.	6 Mos. Dividend Per Share. † 3 Mos.	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid up.	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock.
	£	£	£ s. d.	£	£
Birmingham, Glo'ster		2,116	2 0 0	100	all	121-3
Bristol, Birmingham
Bristol, Exeter			1 8 0	100	70	75-80
Bristol, Glo'ster			1 0 0	50	30	51-3
Chester, Holyhead				50	15	13½-14½
Eastern Counties		8,585	0 3 0†	avr.	14½	15-½
Eastern Union				50	9½
Do. Extension				25	1½
Edinburgh, Glasgow	2,327	1,903	1 5 0	50	all	66-[illegible]
Grand Junction			2 10 0†	100	all
Great North of England		1,521	3 0 0	100	all	202-7
Great Western	15,626	13,035	3 4 0	100	80	145-7
Gt. South. & Western (I.)	*	*	*	80	15	18-20
Do. Extension	*	*	*	80	8½	9½-10
Hull, Selby				50	all	98-100
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*	*	56	25	40-2
Liverpool, Manchester		4,467	4 10 0	100	all
London, Birmingham	31,028	13,203	5 0 0	sck.	100	209-[illegible]
London, Blackwall	717	642	0 3 0	avr.	16½	9-½
London, Brighton	3,759	3,580	1 10 0	50	all	59½-60
London, Croydon	1,234	378	0 8 0	avr.	18½	18-19
London, Greenwich				avr.	12½	10-½
London, South-Western	5,007	4,986	2 0 0	avr.	41½	72-4
Manchester, Birmingham	3,643	2,855	1 0 0	40	60	62-70
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	993	804	2 14 0	123	93
Manchester, Leeds, Hull	5,773		2 18 0	100	78	198-9
Midland	15,118	8,442	2 2 6	stk.	100	136-9
Do. Birmingham, Derby				stk.	100	166-10
Newcastle, Carlisle	1,603	1,573	2 10 0	100	all
Newcastle, Darlington	2,502	1,011	4 0 0	25	all	52-5
North British	*	*	*	25	15	21-2
Northern, Eastern			1 2 6	50	45	63-5
Norwich, Brandon				20	14	20-1
Preston, Wyre	390	316		50	all
Sheffield, Manchester	1,035	631	5 p. Cent	100	95	96-8
South Devon	*	*	*	50	20	24-5
South-Eastern, Dover	5,162	3,848	0 13 4	avr.	33½	34-5
Yarmouth, Norwich			0 10 0	20	all	28-9
York, North Midland	4,742	2,064	2 10 0	50	all	100-5
Do. Scarboro' Branch	*	*	*	25	all	42-5
Do. Selby			0 12 8	50	20	68-70
FRENCH RAILWAYS.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*	*	20	8	7-8
Orleans, Vierzon	*	*	*	20	10	14-15
Orleans, Bordeaux	*	*	*	20	4	9½-¾
Paris, Orleans		4,886	1 0 2½	20	all	44-6
Paris, Rouen		3,999	0 19 2	20	all	35-7
Rouen, Havre				20	14	26½-7

A meeting of the shareholders in the London and York, has been called, to consider the propriety of requiring the directors to accede to Mr. Hudson's offer of amalgamation with the Eastern Counties Company. It is rumoured that the majority of the London and York directors are not averse to the proposition, and that several shareholders in the London and York are favourable to it, but that some landowners in Bedfordshire form one of the principal obstacles to the arrangement. The directors of the Eastern Counties are taking steps for running short trains at very greatly reduced fares. The establishment is being placed on a much more efficient footing, and, at the same time, a very large reduction of expenditure has taken place.—The Central Kent have made arrangements with the South-Eastern, by which the construction of the line will be effected. In virtue of this arrangement the scripholders will be entitled to a distribution at par of certain shares of the South Eastern distinguished as No. 4.—A project is in contemplation for laying along the line of the Birmingham and Gloucester, pipes for the conveyance of brine from the salt-pits of Droitwich and Stoke Prior, to the port of Gloucester. The Gloucester Chamber of Commerce have resolved to see Mr. Hudson on the subject, believing that if the project were carried out, Gloucester would possess advantages over Liverpool in this great article of export, and that the trade in salt might be so enormously increased that it would not be chimerical to anticipate that 100,000 tons of salt would be annually exported from Gloucester.—The local papers state that the Lords of the Admiralty have signified to the promoters of the proposed bridge over the Severn at the Aust Passage, their assent to the principle of the bridge designed by Mr. Fulljames, and recommended by Mr. Walker, their engineeer; and have required the working drawings of the same to be submitted for their approbation.—The Exeter papers state that during the late gales the sea renewed its sport with the South-Devon line, playing over it in all directions, so that all communication was cut off—no human being could pass along, even on the finished portion of the line. The broken water was thrown many yards in height, and thousands of tuns, on the most moderate calculation, were precipitated over the permanent way, leaving the prospect for future trains anything but encouraging. The stones which are being thrown in large quantities, in order to form small breakwaters for the protection of the wall, will, it is said, entirely ruin the fishing on that coast.—The mahogany wheelbarrow used by Sir Robert Peel on the occasion of cutting the first sod of the Trent Valley railway cost upwards of 40*l*. The Premier has caused it to be placed among his collection of curiosities at Drayton Manor.—An association is about to be formed to enable individuals, by combination, to resist unjust or illegal demands made upon them by railway committees, to search and examine into the circumstances of the various schemes of which the projectors are now threatening with the terrors of the law the imprudent speculators who have ventured within their grasp.—It is estimated that 5,000,000*l*. would not pay the mere outlay for the preparation of the railway plans, &c., that have been lodged at the Board of Trade for the ensuing session, and yet in spite of the multitude of projects which have been advertised, there are no fewer than 20 counties in England, and five in Wales altogether without the benefit of railways. — It is mentioned as a proof of the immense amount of business now being carried on by manufacturers of locomotives, that no firm engaged in the trade will contract to supply engines in less than three years.

Ireland.

Dublin.—The memorial presented to the Lord-Lieutenant by the magistrates of Westmeath, has been published this week, together with his Excellency's reply. The memorial states the grievances of the county in even stronger terms than those employed by the magistrates of Tipperary. "It is," they state, "but too evident that the existing powers of the law cannot reach the evil. We have been compelled to arrive at the appalling conclusion that the ferocious tribunals of the Riband conspiracy have grown to be an over-match for magistrates, judges, juries, constabulary, and Executive, with their present powers. No man can presume that his life is safe. Impunity has long since practised and familiarised the mass of misguided men who are enrolled in illegal confederacy (too ignorant to appreciate the forbearing qualities of British law) to the settled opinion that exercising the right over property to the displacing of any occupant, under any circumstances, is an offence to be punished with death; and that giving any information, or doing any act in support of the law, ought to incur a similar forfeit. In these attempts, although murder be the end and object of the assassin, yet if, by the mercy of God, the victim escape death (although never so grievously maimed), the punishment has been, by the existing state of the law, uniformly relaxed from death into a limited transportation—the same penalty which attaches to the stealing of a sheep, or similar minor offences." The magistrates alluded to the late attempt on the life of Sir F. Hopkins, and conclude by saying:—"We would entreat your Excellency that you would, for the present, be pleased to consider the wisdom and propriety of sending to this county without delay some of the most efficient law-officers of the Crown, to investigate the state of crime, and the nature of the cases at present in the gaol for trial, with the view of following up such inquiries with a special commission, or other measures as may appear best suited to your Excellency in the awful circumstances in which we are situated; and we entreat your Excellency to believe that we do not address you under the excitement of a particular case alone, but to represent our deliberate conviction, sustained by very recent offences" (of which they give a long catalogue). In reply, the Lord Lieutenant states that he "will bring under the notice of Government their address, representing the insufficiency of the existing laws for the preservation of life and property. The acting Crown solicitor of the circuit has been sent to Mullingar, to inquire into the several cases at present for trial in the county gaol, and the probability of convictions in them, in order that he may make such reports upon them as may enable his Excellency to decide whether it be advisable that a special commission be issued for the trial of these prisoners at present in gaol, as suggested by the magistrates."—Murders and attempts at murder have unhappily become so common of late in various parts of Ireland, that they almost cease to be matters of wonder. The most recent is an attempt on the life of Mr. John Trench, the son of the Dean of Elphin, and nephew to Lord De Frayne and Mr. Fitzstephen Trench, one of the Members for the county of Roscommon, in which county the family have not only always been resident, but extremely popular. This young gentleman, who it appears had never given to any class of persons the slightest cause of dissatisfaction beyond expressing his disapprobation of the proceedings of the Molly Maguire gang, was fired at on Thursday last as he was entering the gate of his own residence, and had only a providentially narrow escape from death. —There is no longer any doubt about the Presidency of the Ulster College. Dr. Henry, the Presbyterian minister and one of the Commissioners of the National Board of Education has been appointed President, and Dr. Thompson has been offered the Vice-Presidency, which he is said to have declined. — Dr. Kennedy, Roman Catholic Bishop of Killaloe, has denied, in a letter dated Rome, Nov. 25, that his visit to that city has "any relation whatever, directly or indirectly to the Colleges Act, the Bequests Act, or any other Act." The Bishop states that "To discharge a duty to which I was solemnly pledged on the day of my consecration, and to behold with my own eyes the wonders of the 'Eternal City,' were, and shall continue to be, its sole, its exclusive objects."—The export of grain, and other provisions from this country at present is enormous. No less than 50 vessels thus laden are now weather-bound in the river Shannon, from the port of Limerick alone.—An action brought by a gentleman named Bryan, residing near Nenagh, against his parish priest, the Rev. Mr. Egan, for certain animadversions made upon some part of Mr. Bryan's conduct, by his Reverence from the altar, has, on the point of trial, been compromised by the rev. gentleman withdrawing the offensive expressions, and giving a letter of apology.—On Thursday an archiepiscopal visitation was held by the Lord Primate and the Archbishop of Dublin, in the theatre of Trinity College, under a mandamus issued by the Court of Queen's Bench, directing the visitors to inquire into the claims of a young gentleman named Heron, to be admitted to a scholarship of that college, having earned his right to such admission by undergoing the prescribed examinations, and being only excluded by the board of the college on the ground of his being of the Roman Catholic religion. The case excites a good deal of interest, no Court of Visitors having been held in the college for many years. A very strong bar is engaged on both sides to argue the case, and the visitors have called in as their Assessor the Master of the Rolls, who having been long connected with the college, is acquainted with the bearing of all the statutes by which it has been governed since its foundation.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday, Mr. Kelly, M.P. for Limerick, in the chair. The Chairman apologised for his absence from Conciliation-hall for some time, and explained that that absence was not caused by any apathy in the national cause. The hon. gentleman handed in 40*l*. from some parishes in Limerick. — Mr. O'Connell, having handed in a number of remittances, adverted to a further attack which had been made upon him by the Times "Commissioner." He was aware it was foolish on his part to take any notice of the barking of the Times, nor would he do so on the present occasion, but for the purpose of returning his thanks to the Evening Mail and Packet, conservative journals, for the gentlemanly feeling and disinterestedness which they exhibited towards him. These journals were not only not content with expressing their disbelief of the calumnies heaped upon him, but they actually adduced evidence in his favour. If the Times were guilty of calumniating him, the Examiner was still more culpable, for that journal published every lie that was uttered against him, but never gave one word of the contradiction. He would not condescend to read a line in the Examiner during his life unless that journal changed hands. Mr. O'Connell having entered into some details for the purpose of showing that the Times commissioner did not visit his estate at all, continued to say that no one need be surprised at anything coming from the Times, as it was the mother of lies. Why did the Times fabricate that atrocious corn-law lie? Because its friends and supporters were speculating in corn and the stocks, and hoped to derive profit from the atrocious falsehood circulated on Thursday last. He then stated that he proposed proceeding to Waterford during the present week, for the purpose of reconciling the contending Repealers in that town, but he felt that his mission would be unattended with any beneficial results.—Mr. J. O'Connell acquainted the meeting that Captain Broderick had been deputed by the association to make a tour of Ireland, for the purpose of inquiring into the actual condition of the tenantry of Ireland, and his reports would be from time to time published. It was right that the bloody deeds of the people should be held up to execration, but it was equally just that the murders perpetrated by the landlords should be denounced.—Mr. H. Grattan, M.P., addressed the meeting at considerable length, and entered into an elaborate defence of the landlords of Ireland.—Mr. O'Connell then rose for the purpose of bringing under consideration the present state of this country, in its relations both foreign and domestic. In considering the prospects of Ireland he would not confine his observations to his own land: he would take a wider range, and would inquire what indirect assistance they might obtain from foreign countries in their exertions to achieve the nationality of Ireland. As long as England continued in a state of prosperity, so long was there no hope for Ireland. He did not wish England to be strong so long as she was the enemy of Ireland. "Man's infirmity was God's opportunity," and he did not see why he should not take advantage of the weakness of his oppressor. They had a continuance of peace for thirty years; but there were symptoms which clearly indicated that war was not so remote as some possibly might be inclined to imagine. At that moment England was fortifying her coasts, and was calling into action all the resources at her command. Was there a country in Europe in which, at that moment, the seeds of revolution were not germinating? The social condition of Portugal gave evidence of an approaching change, and any change must be detrimental to the English interests in that country. Spain, he felt delighted to say, was softening down into peace and prosperity, and he could not adduce a stronger proof of the interesting fact, than that the clergy and people were becoming banded together. But what assistance could England expect from Spain? None. There was a period when England was all-powerful in the Peninsula, but French diplomacy had completely superseded her. In the dissensions in Italy he saw the ingredients of future mischief. In Germany, and especially in Prussia, a Jacobinical revolution was on the point of breaking out: in Switzerland, infidelity and atheism were publicly avowed. To the encroachments and ambitious views of Russia he felt it scarcely necessary to allude. But the great subject for consideration was the relations between England and France. The interests of these countries clashed in so many parts—there was so much faded glory to be compensated for—there was revenge for defeat at Waterloo to be satisfied—that he felt warranted in saying that a lengthened peace with France was not to be calculated upon. He did not think England would peril a war for Oregon. That territory would not be worth fighting for; but then the question was, whether England could back out of the matter. If she did so, she would lose much in character and honour, and the fame of England once blighted would never recover its pre-eminence again. Within 10 days they would have the President's message, which would decide the question of peace or war. And such was the infatuation of England, that, in such a conjuncture as this, they were talking of sending the English militia to Ireland to put down the Repeal. Was England in such a state of prosperity as would warrant her in coercing Ireland? If Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright were to be believed, there was a storm lowering over the industrial prosperity of England. The honourable gentleman then proceeded to eulogise the conduct of the Anti-Corn-law League, and strenuously recommended it to persevere in its purposes. The rent for the week was 240*l*. 12*s*. 5*d*.

Scotland.

Edinburgh.—On Thursday week the freedom of this city was presented by the Lord Provost and Corporation to Commodore Sir Charles Napier, M.P., who has lately been visiting Edinburgh. Sir Charles acknowledged the compliment in an appropriate speech, in which he alluded to the fact that he received his education in this city.

Greenock.—The late Sir Gabriel Wood, whose death took place in London a few days ago, has bequeathed the princely sum of 80,000*l*. to be expended in the erection and maintenance of an hospital in Greenock, for the reception of the aged, infirm, and disabled seamen of that port.

Law.

The Case of the Felicidade.—It is announced that the Judges have declared the conviction void on two grounds—first, that it is not piracy for the Brazilians to carry on the slave-trade until they have made it to be so by Brazilian municipal law; and, secondly, that the Felicidade was wrongfully taken, not having any slaves on board, and, therefore, that she did not become a British ship, and was not accordingly justified in capturing the Echo.—The decision was forthwith transmitted to Sir James Graham, as Secretary of state for the Home Department, and, as a matter of course, her Majesty has granted a free pardon to the convicts under sentence of death in Exeter gaol. The pardon was sent from the Home-office on Wednesday, it having been received from Osborne House with her Majesty's signature on Wednesday morning.

Court of Exchequer.—(Sittings in Banco).—Rigby and another v. The Great Western Railway Company.—This was an action brought by plaintiffs, who are lessees and proprietors of the well-known refreshment rooms at the Swindon station, to recover damages from defendants for the breach of an agreement, under which it was alleged that defendants undertook that all trains running on defendants' line of railway, and carrying passengers, except goods trains, express trains, and trains for special purposes, should stop a reasonable time (which was declared not to be less than ten minutes) at the Swindon-station, to allow the passengers the opportunity of obtaining refreshment. The case now came before the Court on demurrer to the declaration, which, after setting forth the lease under which plaintiffs held for 14 years, proceeded to allege in substance, that in consideration of the covenants made by the company, plaintiffs had built the premises in question at Swindon, expecting to be remunerated by the receipt of money from passengers taking refreshments, but that in violation of the covenants, defendants had daily one or more trains passing over their line which took passengers and did not stop at Swindon, such trains not being within the respective provisions contained in the agreement between the parties. On behalf of the Great Western Railway Company it was now contended that the agreement as set forth did not contain any absolute covenant that all passengers' trains should stop at Swindon. There was a provision in the deed, that if defendants thought fit to cease to use Swindon as their "general stopping station," they might do so, upon compensating plaintiffs for their loss, or buying up their interest within five years. It was contended that this was wholly inconsistent with the covenant relied on as absolute, that all passenger trains should stop at Swindon. It was also argued that the breach stating that certain trains taking passengers had not stopped at Swindon, was badly laid, as it did not appear, nor was it alleged that there were any passengers in the trains which passed Swindon, who would have taken refreshments, even if the trains had stopped for 10 minutes at that station. The court, without calling on plaintiff's counsel, were unanimously of opinion that the declaration was sufficient. The defendants, by deed, had absolutely covenanted that all their passenger trains should stop at Swindon a reasonable time for refreshments. It was not necessary for plaintiffs to prove that any particular passenger or passengers would have taken refreshments had the train stopped. According to the declaration, defendants had improperly, and in breach of their agreement, prevented the passengers from taking refreshments at Swindon, if they were so inclined, which was a damage to the plaintiffs, and a sufficient ground of action. The demurrer was, therefore, overruled, and judgment given for the plaintiffs.

Arches Court.—Bishop of London v. Rev. John Day.—This was a proceeding by letters of request, against the Rev. John Day, Rector of Hawridge, Bucks, for the reformation of his manners and excesses. The suit was in pursuance of the provisions of the Church Discipline Act, and as it has proceeded throughout in promptu, the rev. defendant not having appeared to the citation, the articles exhibited were, on a previous court-day, read seriatim, as well as the evidence brought forward in support of them. Counsel was then heard in support of the validity of the charges, and, as total deprivation of the living enjoyed by Mr. Day was asked for, the Court took time to consider the case in order to. The principal articles exhibited against Mr. Day were to the effect:—"That he had from July, 1843, to March, 1844, been a prisoner in Her Majesty's gaol at Aylesbury, for cutting and maiming, and that for two years previously he had been guilty of habitual excesses and intoxication." The concluding ones prayed that the said William Day be duly and canonically corrected and punished according to the exigency of the law, and also be condemned in the costs of this suit.—Sir H. Jenner Fust at considerable length gave judgment upon the case. The articles exhibited were referred to by the judge, and he held that the material charges were proved. Referring to previous cases of the kind, and cited in argument, he was not disposed to hold that this was a proceeding in which deprivation was called for. The Court thought that a suspension of three years from the emoluments of the living would be sufficient, and the party proceeded against must be condemned in the costs. The learned Judge further intimated that the notice of suspension from clerical duties should be publicly announced in the parish church on the 14th inst., and that the Rev. Mr. Day should have a certificate of good conduct during the three years, so that if he reformed his manners he might be restored again to the living and remove that scandal from the Church which by his own conduct had been placed upon it. In the meantime the duties of the office would be attended to; and the Court expressed a hope that its sentence in this case would have a good effect. The sentence of three years' deprivation, with costs, to be entered in the registry.

Miscellaneous.

Discovery of a new Diamond Mine.—"We have received from Rio de Janeira a letter, which gives some curious details relative to the working of a new diamond mine recently discovered in Brazil. For some months past the communications and commercial intercourse with the province of Bahia have been extraordinarily brisk. A large number of inhabitants, speculators, adventurers, and even sugar planters, are emigrating with their slaves to the province of Bahia, where is situate an immense diamond mine, the produce of which is incredible. It was discovered in October 1844, by a slave, who in 20 days had gathered 700 carats of diamonds, and carried them a considerable distance for sale. Arrested and imprisoned the slave obstinately refused to disclose the locus in quo. They therefore let him loose, and put a number of intelligent Indians upon his 'trail.' The latter pursued him for several days, and found him working for the extraction of the diamonds not far from Caxoeira, the second city of Bahia. Investigations were then made on a large scale along a chain of mountains called Sincura, which have given the name to this mine, and on the banks of the river Paraguassu, which falls into the bay of Bahia. The first persons who established themselves at the mine of Sincura were chiefly convicts and murderers. They made known their presence by fires and assassinations. The difficulty of subsisting in the country, and the danger to which those were exposed who proceeded thither to exchange diamonds for the paper-money of Brazil, prevented honourable merchants from entering into the trade. By degrees when the population had become more numerous, a system of police was established by the new colonists, and the mine was then worked upon a much larger and more extensive scale. The population, which only amounted in August, 1844, to 8000 souls, distributed over three villages, was at the end of July upwards of 30,000, and on the increase. The villages at present inhabited and cultivated are seven in number, and are named Paraguassu, Combucas, Chiquechique, Causu-Boa, Andrahy, Nagé and Lancoé. The last-named village, which is 20 leagues distant from Paraguassu, contains alone 3000 families and 20,000 inhabitants. The central point of the diamond trade is Paraguassau, which although sufficiently peopled, has only at present twelve small houses of brick. Almost all the miners go thither on Saturdays and Sundays to sell the stones they have picked up during the week. They receive in exchange different articles of consumption, arms, and apparel, which are brought thither at a great expense from Bahia. The diamonds extracted from Paraguassu are generally speaking, of a brown colour, and of a very irregular formation. White and light green, almost transparent on their first extraction from the mine, distinguish those of Lancoés. They are of an octahedral form, and are the most in request. It is often requisite to dig three or four métres, in order to reach the cascaille, or layer of the diamonds. Diamonds are also discovered in the rocky ravines at the bottom of the Paraguassu itself, and the streams which fall into it. The price of these diamonds varies, at Bahia, from 250 to 500 milreis per octave (670f. to 1340f.), according to their fineness and size. The octave is 17½ carats; but the Brazilian carat is 7½ per cent. less than the French, which makes the Brazilian carat about 67f. to 134f. The present course of exchange at Bahia is 365 reis for 1 franc. The two English steamers of May and June brought about 5,500,000 francs worth of diamonds from this mine. During the months of June and July the mine yielded nearly 1450 carats per day. It is estimated to have produced, during the six months of its working, nearly 400,000 Portuguese carats (about 18,300,000 francs), of which three-fifths were sent to England, another fifth to France and Hamburgh, whilst the last fifth awaits buyers at Rio Janeiro and Bahia. Not all the lapidaries in Europe would be sufficient to polish only one-half of the produce of the Sincura mine; thus a depreciation of that value is expected, which gives rise to the most hazardous speculations. Brazil, which has the privilege of supplying the trade with diamonds, did not produce annually, before the discovery of the Sincura mine, more than six or seven kilogrammes, which cost more than a million for the expenses of working; thus the price, even in the rough state, has always been very high. Hitherto no very large diamonds have been found at Sincura. There are very few in the world weighing more than 20 grammes. The largest diamond is that of Agra, weighing 133 grammes; that of the Rajah of Matan, in Borneo, weighs 78 grammes; that of the Great Mogul, 63 grammes; and that of France, called the "Regent," 28 grammes 89 centigrammes; but it is of a very pretty shape and perfect in every respect. Before being polished it weighed 87 grammes, and cost two years' labour. The mine of Sincura presents the spectacle of an independent colony in the bosom of the mother country. Hitherto the Government has taken no steps to possess itself of the direction of this trade, which promises to be so abundant a source of wealth to Bahia, and it will be perhaps reduced to sanction the regulations formed by the inhabitants themselves for the working of the mine, which already covers a superficies of more than 30 leagues!"—Journal des Débats.

New Motive Power.—Mr. Talbot has taken out a patent for a new power, based on the condensation of carbonic acid gas. By chemical means and great pressure the carbonic acid is brought down to a temperature below the freezing point. Heat is then applied, when its expansive power far exceeds that of steam, while the enormous weight of the furnace, &c., is dispensed with.—Morning Post.

New Oregon Claimant.—It appears that the Emperor of Russia is in the field as a claimant for the disputed Oregon territory. He maintains that his possessions descend to 51° 40′. We cannot learn the ground of His Imperial Majesty's claim, but the following official document has been issued:—"Department of State, Washington, September 26.—The Russian Minister at Washington has informed the Secretary of State that the Imperial Government, desirous of affording efficient protection of the Russian territories in North America against the infractions of foreign vessels, has authorised cruisers to be established for this purpose along the coast by the Russian American Company. It is therefore recommended to American vessels to be careful not to frequent the interior seas, gulfs, harbours, and creeks upon that coast at any point north of the latitude of 54° 40′."—Toronto Globe.

The Duke of Wellington's Victories—In a letter, dated Lesaca, September 13, 1813, the Duke of Wellington writes, "I feel very unwilling to draw the attention of the Secretary of State again to the loss of the guns in the Puerto de Maya. I was very sorry to have lost them, as they were the only guns ever lost by troops acting under my command." Upon this the "Quarterly" remarks that the guns which this letter designates were not taken by the enemy, but only abandoned in a bad road, flung down a precipice, and recovered; and that the writer, after having had the good fortune to capture and keep about 3000 pieces of artillery, principally French, closed his military career without ever having left a single piece of cannon in an enemy's possession.

Extraordinary Instance of Liberality.—The treasurer of the Wesleyan Missionary Society has received, through the Rev. F. A. West, of the first Leeds circuit, the sum of 50*l.*, as a "donation from a female servant, the fruits of many years' self-denial for the Lord's sake." Under all the circumstances, this is one of the most munificent benefactions ever given to the missionary treasury. The donor would listen to no remonstrance, entreating Mr. West to take the roll of bank-notes, declaring her determination to give that sum, which was at last accepted by Mr. West, on the condition that she would promise to let him know, if living, whenever she might be in any need.—Globe.

Fires in America in 1845.—We do not remember ever to have heard of so many great fires in any one short period of time as have happened on this continent in the first six months of 1845. We annex a list of the losses experienced in the order in which they occurred:—Barbadoes, 2,000,000 dollars; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, 3,000,000 dollars; London, Connecticut, 500,000 dollars; Fayetteville, North Carolina, 500,000 dollars; Quebec, 7,500,000 dollars; Matanzas, 1,000,000 dollars; New York, 6,000,000 dollars—total, 21,000,000 dollars. This aggregate surpasses the loss by the great fire in New York in 1835. Then about 20,000,000 dollars of property was destroyed. The amount given as lost in the two fires at Quebec is the estimate given in the New York papers; we are inclined to believe it rather above the mark.—Quebec Mercury.

The Diamond Mine.—The Frankfort journal has an extract of a letter from Rio, giving some curious details of the diamond mines recently discovered in Brazil:—"Hats full of the stones have been picked up and brought away. Two-thirds of them are of a yellowish tinge, and do not possess the usual hardness of the diamond, but many of them are very fine. The house of Bomfim and Reshesler, the largest diamond merchants at Rio Janeiro, at first threw doubts on the reality of this discovery of the mine, but notwithstanding this every one who has diamonds on hand is endeavouring to sell them at the best price they can obtain, fearing a great reduction in the value. The country where the new mines are situate is thickly populated, but the people are mostly very poor."

BIRTHS—On the 24th ult., at Wimbledon, the wife of EDWIN FENNELL, Esq., of a daughter—24th ult., at Ulcomb-place, Kent, the Lady FRANCES FLETCHER, of a son—27th ult., at Bowood, Lady LOUISA HOWARD, of a son—27th ult., at the Vicarage of Swaton, Lincolnshire, the lady of the Rev. HENRY KNAPP, of a son—28th ult., the wife of J. WILLIAMS, Esq., of Her Majesty's Dock-yard, Portsmouth, of a daughter—28th ult., at Twickenham, the wife of the Rev. THOMAS MILLS, of a daughter—29th ult., in Milton-street, Dorset-square, Mrs. GLASIER, of a son—29th ult., at Woodlands, Blackheath, Mrs. WILLIAM ANGERSTEIN, of a son—29th ult., at Holbeach, Mrs. EDWARD KEY, of a son—30th ult., at the Vicarage, Guilden Morden, near Royston, Cambridgeshire, the wife of the Rev. ROBERT MERRY, of a son—30th ult., Mrs. HENRY HENDERSON, of Brixton-hill, Surrey, of a daughter—30th ult., at 89, Eaton-square, the wife of the Rev. G. B. MOORE, of a daughter—1st inst., at Hampstead, the lady of G. W. HARRISON, Esq., of a son—1st inst., at East Dulwich-grove, the wife of the Rev. JOHN R. OLDHAM, of a daughter—17th inst., at Belstead Rectory, near Ipswich, the wife of the Rev. JAMES BANDINEL, of a son—22d inst., at 12, Beaumont-street, Portland-place, the lady of W. B. PONSONBY, Esq., of a daughter—27th inst., at the Rectory, Fledborough, Notts, the lady of the Rev. AUGUSTUS FITZGERALD, of a son.

MARRIAGES—On the 22d ult., at Horsley Church, the Rev. WILLIAM WINSTONE CURTIS HAYWARD to ELIZABETH ESTHER, second daughter of the late Rev. James Phelps, Rector of Alderley, Lancashire—27th ult., at St. Nicholas Church, Hereford, ARCHIBALD ROBERTSON, M. D., of Northampton, to ANNE, fifth daughter of the late John Matthews, Esq., of Belmont, in the county of Hereford—28th ult., at St. John's Episcopal Church, in Forres, ALEXANDER PENROSE GORDON CUMMING, Esq., eldest son of Sir William Gordon Cumming, Bart., of Attyre and Gordonstown, to ANNE, only daughter of the Rev. Augustus Campbell, Rector of Liverpool—29th ult., at St. James's Church, Westminster, JOHN HOUCHEN, Esq., of Thetford, eldest son of John Houchen, Esq., of Wereham-hall, Norfolk, to SUSANNAH, only daughter of the late Daniel Vautier, of Stanton-park, Suffolk—2d inst., at St. Peter's, Belgrave-square, JOHN GURDON REBOW, Esq., of Wivenhoe-park, Essex, second son of T. T. Gurdon, Esq., of Letton, Norfolk, to the Lady GEORGIANA TOLER, fourth daughter of the late and sister of the present Earl of Norbury—2d inst., at St. George's, Hanover-square, CHARLES S. WHITMORE, Esq., to ELIZABETH KATHARINE, eldest daughter of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Brownrigg, and sister of Sir Robert Brownrigg, Bart.—6th inst., at St. Sepulchre's Church, WILLIAM ABRAHAM SALMON, Esq., surgeon, to HARRIETT, daughter of Edmund Fennell, Esq., late of Limerick—2nd inst., at Harborough Magna, Mr. GEORGE F. B. WILLING, of Hampstead, to MARIANNE, third daughter of Frank Marshall, Esq., of Easenhall, Warwickshire—27th inst., at Trinity Church, St. Marylebone, HENRY E. GOLDSMID, Esq., of the Bombay Civil Service, second son of Edward Goldsmid, Esq., to JESSY SARAH, only daughter of L. Goldsmid, Esq.

DEATHS—On the 13th ult., at Bombay, Mr. JOHN MACDONELL ROBERTSON, of the East India Company's Civil Service, and third son of Major-General Archibald Robertson, of the Bombay Army—23d ult., at Macao, Mr. W. H. LEGGETT, Chief Clerk of the Supreme Court, and Coroner of Hong Kong—24th ult., at his residence in Hornsey-lane, Highgate, SAMUEL CROSLEY, Esq., aged 65—28th ult., the Rev. JOHN GRAHAM, aged 32, late curate of St. John's, Hackney, eldest son of John Smith Graham, Esq., Tower Hill—27th ult., at Courtown, the Hon. BARRINGTON STOPFORD, aged 17, youngest son of the Earl of Courtown—29th ult., Mr. SAMUEL CLEARSON, of the Drawing-office, Bank of England aged 58—29th ult., at 32, Chapel-street, Grosvenor-square, FANNY, youngest daughter of the late David Douglas, Esq., and grand-daughter of the late Sir William Douglas, Bart., of Kelhead, Dumfriesshire—28th ult., at Stoke St. Gregory, Somersetshire, the Rev. WILLIAM HALFHEAD, aged 45—30th ult., at his residence, Streatham-place, JOHN SCOTT MORTINEAU, Esq., aged 67—30th ult., in Thurloe-square, ROBERT PEDDER, Esq., aged 77, for many years a resident at Brighton, and a magistrate for Sussex—26th November, aged 75, Mr. T. MOODY, Nurseryman and Seedsman, of Stratford, near Salisbury, Wilts, late of the firm of Gearey and Moody—1st inst., at Eaton-square, LUCY, daughter of Sir Bruce and Lady Chichester—10th inst., at 38, Arlington-street, Camden Town, CHARLES W. W. TAYLOR, eldest son of Dr. Cooke Taylor, aged six years and eleven months—Lately, in Cliffe Workhouse, Lewes, TOWNSEND, the Pedestrian, aged 54, so well known in the sporting circles; he was considered one of the first pedestrians of his day—23d ult., at Dalston, JOHN L. WOODHOUSE, Esq., of Her Majesty's Customs, London, aged 54—23d ult., at his residence at Turnham-green, aged 70, Lieut.-Colonel ALEXANDER DANIEL, of Her Majesty's 63d Regiment—At her house, in Queen-square, Bath, ITHAMAR HODGES, eldest surviving daughter of the late Hon. Rose Herring May, one of His Majesty's Councillors in the Island of Jamaica.

DOCTOR BRIGHT, OF ELY PLACE, HOLBORN, AND HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—Copy of a letter from this celebrated Physician to Professor HOLLOWAY.—"SIR,—I think it but an act of justice to inform you that I have tried your Ointment and Pills in several old cases of Ulcerated sore legs, which, for a considerable time had resisted every kind of treatment, but which were afterwards effectually cured by the use of your Medicines. In cases of bad breasts I have also found them of great service. Indeed, from my practical knowledge, I think them most invaluable in most cases." Signed, RICHARD BRIGHT, M.D. To be had of all Chemists, and at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment, 244, Strand, London.

THE EIDER DOWN QUILT is the warmest, the lightest, and the most elegant covering. It is suitable for either the bed, the couch, or the carriage, and from its extreme warmth is peculiarly adapted for invalids; also Goose Down Quilts, very comfortable, at half the price of Eider Down. List of prices of the above, and also every description of bedding, sent free by post on application to HEAL and SON, Bedding Manufacturers, 196, opposite the Chapel, Tottenham Court-road.

MR. GOADBY having discovered a mode of preserving objects of NATURAL HISTORY, and especially the soft Invertebrata, with a success not before obtained, and having spent the greater part of his life in perfecting the display of the structure of Insects, Mollusca, and other Invertebrata, has formed a collection of such preparations, which he is now, in consequence of the state of his health and other reasons, desirous to dispose of for 500*l.* This sum, which is much below its actual value, it is proposed to raise by subscription, in order that the Collection may be presented to some Public Museum. Mr. GOADBY has made known his processes and preserving fluids through the medium of the British Association, at the meetings of which body, as well as at other public assemblies, the specimens have been exhibited; and the value of both the processes and results has been fully recognised by Naturalists and Comparative Anatomists.

Several specimens in Mr. GOADBY'S Collection are the result of many months' assiduous labour, and are unique. The number of the specimens is upwards of 150.

SUBSCRIBERS.

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
H.R.H. Prince Albert	20	0	0	The Viscount Goderich	5	0	0
The Archbishop of Canterbury	10	0	0	R. I. Murchison, Esq.	5	0	0
The Duke of Northumberland				Rev. W. Kirby	5	0	0
The Marquess of Northampton, P.R.S.	10	10	0	Sir W. F. Middleton, Bart.	5	0	0
The Bishop of Norwich, P.L.S.	5	0	0	G. Lloyd, Esq., M.D.	5	0	0
The Earl of Derby, P.Z.S.	10	0	0	John Wright, Esq.	5	0	0
Rev. F. W. Hope, P. Ent. Soc.	10	0	0	Rich. Owen, Esq.	10	0	0
Thos. Bell, Esq., P. Microscop. Soc.	10	0	0	Wm. Ogilby, Esq.	10	0	0
The Lord Brougham.	5	0	0	Wm. Spence, Esq.	10	0	0
The Earl of Ripon	10	0	0	W. W. Saunders, Esq.	2	0	0
The Earl Fitzwilliam	10	0	0	J. M. Morgan, Esq.	1	0	0
				John Dalrymple, Esq.	1	0	0
				D. T. Ansted, Esq.	3	3	0
				J. S. Bowerbank, Esq.	5	5	0
				G. Busk, Esq.	1	0	0
				W. H. Lloyd, Esq.	5	0	0
				J. Janson, Esq.	5	0	0

Reverend Professor Henslow. .2*l.*

* * Subscriptions may be paid to the account of W. SPENCE, Esq., at Sir C. Price, Bart., Marryat, and Price's, Bankers, King William-street, or by Post-office Order payable to Mr. SPENCE, 18, Lower Seymour-street, Portman-square.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters post-paid.

AS BAILIFF to a Nobleman or Gentleman.—A Sober active Man, age 36, wishes for an engagement as Bailiff. He is well acquainted with agriculture, and is a good accountant. Reference to Nobleman, his last employer.—Direct to Y. Z., Post-Office, Edenbridge, Kent.

A FARMER in East Lothian has Accommodation for another Boarder.—Direct to A. B., at the Office of this Paper.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 35, possessing a perfect practical knowledge of his business in all its various branches. He can have a seven years' unexceptionable character from the Gentleman he last lived with.—Direct to R.A., Mr. Hudson, Abbott's-place, Lewisham, Kent.

TO SEEDSMEN, &c.

WANTED a Situation by a very respectable middle-aged person, perfectly capable of conducting a Seed Business in all its branches.—Direct to B.B., Gardeners Chronicle Office, Charles-street, Covent Garden.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1845.

SCOTTISH WIDOWS' FUND AND LIFE ASSURANCE.

Capital accumulated and invested upwards of £1,590,000; Annual Revenue upwards of £235,000. The amount of capital sums insured since the commencement of the Society is upwards of £7,000,000 sterling. The next periodical investigation takes place on 31st December, 1845.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Parties are particularly reminded of the important benefits to be secured by entry before the close of this year, both as regards the advantage of a full year's standing with reference to the profits of the current year, as well as that of coming within the present period of investigation.

Forms of Proposals, and every necessary information may be obtained at the head office, 5, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh; or at any of the Society's agencies.

JOHN MACKENZIE, Manager.
WM. GEORGE, Chief Clerk.
LONDON-OFFICE, 7, PALL-MALL. HUGH M'KEAN, Agent.

ECONOMIC LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 6, NEW BRIDGE STREET, BLACKFRIARS, LONDON.

ESTABLISHED 1823.

Empowered by Act of Parliament, 3 William IV.

The Right Hon. Thomas Frankland Lewis, Chairman.
Henry Frederick Stephenson, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

The following are among the advantages offered by this Society:—

LOWER RATES of Premium than those of any other Office, which entitle the assured to participate in the profits, and considerably lower than those of any other Mutual Assurance Society.

NO PROPRIETARY participate in the profits, the WHOLE being divisible among the Assured.

The first Bonus, in 1831, averaged 16*l.* per cent. on the Premiums paid.

The second Bonus, in 1839, averaged 31*l.* per cent. since the first division.

The third Bonus, in 1844, averaged 36*l.* per cent. since the second division.

Prospectuses and full particulars may be obtained on application to the Secretary, CAMPBELL JAMES DOWNER.

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, WATCHMAKERS, 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, request the attention of purchasers to their stock of London-made PATENT LEVER WATCHES, which are manufactured by themselves in their own house. In silver cases, with the detached escapement and jewelled, the prices are four guineas and a half, six, and eight guineas each; or in gold cases, 10, 12, 14, and 16 guineas each. The very large stock offered for selection includes every description, enabling customers to select that which is more particularly adapted to their own use.

News of the Week.

AFTER numerous conferences of the leading members of the Whig party, LORD JOHN RUSSELL has at length undertaken to form a Ministry. This decision was only come to on Thursday. In the early part of the week public opinion had been pretty equally divided between the probability of Lord John Russell's acceptance of office, and the return of Sir R. Peel to power as the head of a Cabinet from which the Duke of Wellington, Lord Stanley, and the other dissentients among the late Ministry would be excluded. It was also suggested that Lord John Russell could not hope to obtain a majority in either House without the support of Sir R. Peel, and of a large portion of the party who have hitherto voted with him; and it was hence inferred that the Whig Government would be unable to hold its ground, and that Sir R. Peel would be again in office in the course of two months. These and many other rumours are still current, but in the present state of affairs, our readers will probably be more interested by the following extracts from the two leading organs of public opinion. The Times says:—

"After an amount of hesitation which would have done "credit to the judgment of a much more cautious "statesman, Lord John Russell has at length un-"dertaken to form a Ministry. Nor has it been a mere "pretence of coyness. As late as Wednesday evening, "if we are rightly informed, his Lordship commu-"nicated to Sir Robert Peel that a more deliberate "view of the prospect before him had confirmed the "reluctance he had felt from the first, and that if Sir "Robert would remain in office and carry out the "opinions which had led to his resignation, Lord John "Russell and his friends would render all the assist-"ance in their power. Sir Robert, however, declined to "be Premier by the mercy of the Whigs, and to enter "into engagements which might possibly be the sub-"ject of future dispute. On this refusal, and finding "the responsibility thus thrust upon him, Lord John "Russell at length plucked up the courage to give Her "Majesty, on Thursday evening, a positive answer. "We may expect, therefore, in a very few days to find "the new Ministry fairly under way." The Morning Chronicle, which may be regarded as the official organ of the new Ministry, says, "We are at length enabled "to announce that Lord John Russell has undertaken "the task of forming a Government. After the interview "with his friends on Thursday, Lord John Russell went "down to Windsor to communicate the result to Her "Majesty. Two or three 'lists' of the new Ministry "have been handed about. It is enough for us to "say that the Cabinet has not yet been formed. "There are some of the appointments which may, of "course, be anticipated with sufficient confidence. "There can, we infer, be no doubt that Lord Cotten-"ham will be Chancellor; Sir Thomas Wilde, Attorney-"General; that Mr. Pigott and Mr. Rutherford will "reoccupy their respective positions in Ireland and "Scotland; that Lord Palmerston will be Foreign "Secretary. Rumour assigns the Colonial-office to Earl "Grey, and the Home-office to Lord Morpeth; but "none of the appointments referred to have yet, we be-"lieve, been actually made, while only some of them "can be considered certain." The Morning Chronicle also announces that the principles of the new Government will be those proclaimed with such decisive clearness in the letter of Lord John Russell to the electors of London, the great and immediate object being the total abolition of the Corn-laws. In connection with these announcements we may mention that a rumour has been current during the week that a despatch had been forwarded to Prince Albert offering to his Royal Highness the post of Commander-in Chief. Another rumour, which has been more generally believed, states that the appointment of Lord Palmerston to the Foreign-office had been objected to by the Queen, on the ground of his Lordship's hostility to Louis Philippe and the Coburg family. This rumour is currently believed in Paris, and Lord Clarendon is still mentioned in some circles in London as likely to be the Foreign Secretary. The Morning Post however of Friday, in reference to this point, says that at the Whig conference, on Tuesday last, "a lively "discussion took place on this very subject; that the "Noble Viscount emphatically declared he would rather "lose his right hand than accept any department except "that of Foreign Affairs; and moreover, that if this "were refused to him, he would have nothing to do "with the new Administration. Some people add that "the despatch addressed to an illustrious person to "whose family and connections Lord Palmerston was "supposed to be personally disagreeable, had reference "to this delicate matter, and not to a rumoured ap-"pointment at the Horse Guards."

Home News.

COURT.—The Queen, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, arrived at Windsor Castle on Saturday afternoon, from Osborne House. Prince Albert, after her Majesty and the Royal Family had alighted at the Farnborough station en route to Windsor, proceeded to London by the South Western Railway, inspected the Cattle Show in King-street, Portman-square, and arrived at the Castle in the course of the afternoon. The Prince also came to town on Monday, and transacted business at the office of the Duchy of Cornwall, returning in the afternoon to Windsor. The Queen has taken her usual exercises and walks during the week in the grounds of the Castle. Mr. R. Ormsby Gore has succeeded Captain Meynell as the Groom in Waiting. Major-General Wemyss has succeeded Colonel Buckley as Equerry in Waiting, and the Hon. Miss Napier has succeeded Lady Caroline Somers Cocks as Maid of Honour in Waiting on the Queen.

MINISTERIAL MOVEMENTS.—Several meetings of the Whig party have been held during the week at the residence of Lord J. Russell, and frequent despatches have been forwarded to her Majesty with the results of these conferences. On Saturday, Lord J. Russell had an interview with the Queen at Windsor, accompanied by the Marquis of Lansdowne. Their lordships again left town on Wednesday night for Windsor, to have another audience of her Majesty, and returned to town on Thursday morning, when a numerous meeting of the members of the Grey and Melbourne administrations was held at the residence of Lord John Russell, the Duke of Bedford being the only person present who had not held office under one or other of those governments. The meeting lasted two hours and a half, and the result was that Lord J. Russell decided on undertaking to form a ministry. The Marquis of Lansdowne remained in deliberation with Lord John Russell some time after the other noblemen and gentlemen had dispersed. At half-past three P.M. Lord John Russell again proceeded to Windsor Castle, and after an audience of the Queen, his lordship returned to town. The principal members of the Whig party who have had interviews this week with Lord J. Russell are, the Duke of Bedford, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earls of Clarendon, Grey, and Auckland, Viscounts Palmerston and Morpeth, Lords Cottenham and Monteagle, Sir G. Grey, Sir J. C. Hobhouse, Right Hon. F. Baring, Right Hon. Edward Ellice, Right Hon. H. Labouchere, Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay, Right Hon. E. J. Stanley, Mr. Ricardo, Sir Denis le Marchant, Mr. C. Buller, and Mr. Tuffnell. Lords Ponsonby and Ebrington have arrived in town; and Mr. Charles Wood, the Earl of Minto, Mr. Fox Maule, late Under Secretary for the Home Department, and Mr. A. Rutherfurd, are expected in town immediately. Mr. Cobden had an interview with Earl Grey on Thursday, at the noble earl's mansion in Belgrave-square.—The meetings and "interviews" of the late Administration have scarcely been less frequent. On Saturday, Lord Stanley, the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert, and Earl Delawarr, had interviews with Sir Robert Peel. Earl Delawarr had also an interview with the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Earl of Aberdeen left town on the same day for Brighton. On Monday Lord Stanley left town on a visit to the Marquis of Exeter at Burghley. The Earl of Aberdeen returned to town, and had an interview with Sir R. Peel. The Rt. Hon. Sidney Herbert and the Earl of Lincoln had also interviews with the right hon. baronet. On Wednesday Sir R. Peel had a meeting of the late Administration at his residence in Whitehall-gardens. The meeting took place at the early hour of 10 o'clock, and among those present were the Earl of Aberdeen, the Earl of Lincoln, Sir James Graham, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert. The meeting separated at half-past 11. The Earl of Aberdeen, Sir James Graham, the Earl of Lincoln, and the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert, had another interview with Sir R. Peel on Thursday. Lord Stanley arrived in town, on Thursday afternoon, from Burghley-house, the seat of the Marquis of Exeter. The Earl of Aberdeen left London yesterday for Brighton. Lord Granville Somerset has left town; his lordship has not attended his official duties since the Cabinet tendered their resignation.

Parliamentary Movements.—Lord Alfred Spencer Churchill, second son of the Duke of Marlborough, was on Thursday elected member for Woodstock without opposition, in the room of Lord Loftus, who has succeeded to the peerage as Marquis of Ely.

Death of Lord Wharncliffe.—We regret to announce that Lord Wharncliffe, late Lord President of the Council, expired at his residence in Curzon-street, at half-past 10 yesterday morning. The deceased lord was born in 1776; he represented the county of York for several years, in parliament, and obtained his peerage in 1826. A vacancy is thus created in the representation of the West Riding, the Hon. John Stuart-Wortley being called to the House of Lords.

Death of the Bishop of Jerusalem.—We regret to announce the death of the Bishop of Jerusalem (Dr. Michael Solomon Alexander) which took place on the 23d ult, near Balbeis, on his way across the desert from Syria to Cairo. The disease of which he is represented to have died is either apoplexy or ossification of the heart. The bishop's intention was to have come to England after visiting some of the scenes in Egypt. He was accompanied by his wife and daughter, and his disease seems to have been hastened by the fatigue of travelling. His remains were taken to Alexandria for interment. It is stated that the Rev. Dr. M'Caul, prebendary of St. Paul's, will be the new Bishop of Jerusalem. It will be remembered that, on the foundation of the bishopric, it was offered to Dr. M'Caul; but the rev. gentleman then declined it, on the ground of the superior qualifications of Dr. Alexander, who being a converted Jew, was more intimately acquainted with the manners of the people among whom his episcopal duties would call him. In addition to a prebendal stall in St. Paul's Cathedral, the Bishop elect is Professor of Hebrew Literature in King's College, and rector of St. James's, Duke's-place, Minories.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Paris papers devote a large portion of their space to the English ministerial crisis, and in the absence of definite information they are filled with speculations on its probable results. On Friday, when the first rumour of the dissolution of Sir R. Peel's Cabinet reached Paris, it was accompanied by a rumour that either the Duke of Wellington would be empowered to form a Ministry on purely Tory principles, or that Sir Robert Peel would endeavour to form an administration consisting of such members of his Cabinet as were not averse to a change in the Corn-laws, but without the support and concurrence of the high Tories. Our neighbours looked upon such a state of things as likely to produce disastrous results, by perpetuating a struggle between two great interests, and as not unlikely to lead also to the downfall of the French Cabinet. The consequence was, that during Friday the aspect of the Paris Bourse was almost as gloomy as it was during the panic of the previous week. An alarm took place, under the influence of which the price of the public funds and of all kinds of stock rapidly gave way, and the tendency of the market was towards a further decline. But on Saturday, when the real state of the case became known, the market rapidly recovered, although in some quarters the accession of Lord Palmerston to office as Foreign Minister is said to have caused great uneasiness, from his alleged hostility to France. We quote a few remarks on the present state of affairs from two of the leading journals. The Ministerial Debats says:

"We prognosticate a severe conflict between the two Chambers. The Lords will not give in without offering a determined resistance. In the House of Commons the issue of the debate is more doubtful. It is possible that with the assistance of Sir R. Peel the total abolition of the Corn-laws may be obtained. The attempt is sure to be made. Lord John Russell will retain the present House of Commons, and will not have recourse to a dissolution, unless he meets with insurmountable obstacles. But under any circumstances should the Lords persevere in their resistance, his position is very embarrassing; and that which tends to increase the difficulties of his situation is the fact of the measures to be taken being measures of urgency, and of each moment's delay tending to augment the danger. What was the reason that the Tory Government—that Government so strong some few days since—why was it that it fell so suddenly, and vanished like a ghost, as it were,

if not because it lacked resolution to act with promptitude and determination? It is not with men—it is not with particular parties — that the Ministry will have to struggle; it is with a superior power: it is with the weather, with the sky, with the earth; it is with the Almighty Ruler of the Universe; and man must yield. The new Government comes to power as though raised up by the cry of famine, and it must necessarily forthwith respond to that popular cry. That is its particular mission. It is our earnest desire to see England safely emerge from this great crisis. It is not our place to rejoice at the misfortunes of a country which is our ally. We have no Oregon question upon our hands, which might lead us to anticipate an advantage from the internal embarrassments of England. We will simply here signalise the difference between the present crisis and those which preceded the Emancipation Bill, the Reform Bill, and the Act for the Abolition of Slavery. At those various periods great popular agitation prevailed as at present, but those several measures although ripe for discussion, did not demand that immediate attention which the Corn-laws call for; they might without danger be delayed. Such is not the case at present. The questions which relate to the subsistence of the people do not admit of procrastination. That the reports of a famine have been greatly exaggerated, we are persuaded; yet notwithstanding, there must be some cause for alarm, since they have produced the dissolution of one of the strongest Governments which England has had for many years. In the generality of questions two or three years would not tend visibly to augment the danger, but when it is a question of want—when hunger pleads—who will take upon himself to bid his starving fellow-creatures wait? But who can tell? The very strength of the new Government may probably consist in the impending danger."

The Constitutionnel, the organ of M. Thiers, says—

"The accession of the Whigs to power upon the Corn-law question cannot but be popular. The opinion of the greater portion of the nation upon that all-absorbing question cannot be contested. With regard to the Parliament the case is different. The Ministry is sure to be in the minority in the Upper House, and cannot be absolutely certain of a majority in the Commons. To combat against such difficulties Lord John Russell will have to call into play all his energy and talents, but he is one of the most able statesmen that England possesses, and his firmness is proverbial. Those persons who judge of England by France may suppose that the leader will have recourse to an immediate dissolution of the Commons, and to the creation of a number of peers to secure a majority in the Upper House; but such is not our opinion. The dissolution of the Commons is the inevitable consequence of the coming in of the Whigs, but such dissolution will not be immediate. Although a general election would give the Whigs a few more voices, yet the number would be inconsiderable. Their alliance with the League will aid them, but the crisis has come so suddenly that neither the Whigs nor the League are prepared for an election. An immediate dissolution is, on the contrary, precisely what the ultra Tories most desire. With respect to the other question, the creation of peers, it would require 60 or 80 at least, which would be an extreme measure, unparalleled in the Parliamentary annals of our neighbours. The conduct of Lord John Russell will depend in a great measure upon that of the Ministers who have gone out, and that of Sir R. Peel and the Duke of Wellington. The Duke of Wellington is said to have been the cause of the resignation of the late Ministry; and should he continue to oppose the repeal of the Corn-laws, the inevitable consequence will be a terrible struggle between the two Houses —between the people and the Lords. Sir R. Peel was the first to counsel the Queen to send for Lord John Russell: we, therefore, think it highly probable that the Whigs and the moderate Tories may come to an understanding."

Letters from Algiers of the 6th inst. announce that Marshal Bugeaud had penetrated into the territory of the Flittas, and had made an extensive razzia, taking 500 Arabs prisoners, and capturing an enormous quantity of cattle. Advices from Tangiers of the 30th ult. state that, in reply to a note from the French Government, the Emperor of Morocco has consented to give it a proof of his amicable intentions. He has, in consequence, appointed the present Governor of Tangiers, Sidi Ben Aloo, Governor of the Rif, with instructions to prevent Abd-el-Kader from re-entering Morocco. About 1000 cavalry are to accompany the new Governor to his post, and other troops are to be sent to the frontier, to oppose the return of the Emir's partisans. The Moorish Ambassador, whose departure had been delayed, was to embark in three or four days for France. The Emperor, according to these advices, was still at Rabat, and his provinces all along the frontier of Algeria were in a state of open insurrection. It was even affirmed that the people of those parts, and of the Rif, enthusiastically proclaimed Abd-el-Kader their leader and sovereign.—The subjoined notification has been stuck up for some days past in all the principal churches in Paris:—"At the request of the Roman Catholic Bishops of England, expressed to the Archbishop of Paris by the Bishop of Melipotamus (Dr. Wiseman), prayers will be offered up to God during eight days, reckoning from the present day, on the occasion of the holy immaculate conception of the blessed Virgin Mary, for the entire return of the English nation to the Catholic, Apostolic, and Roman faith." Accordingly, on Monday, the Bishop of Lucon, who, with a large number of French prelates, is now at Paris, opened by a sermon at the Church of Notre-Dame-des-Victoires, the octave of the prayers thus notified.—The Jewish synagogue at Avignon was destroyed by fire on the night of the 24th ult. The conflagration lasted until the next day at noon, and the walls alone were left standing. The fire accidentally originated in a cellar occupied by a vendor of provisions, and the material loss was estimated at 55,000f., namely, 34,000f. for the building and wainscoting, and 21,000f. for the curtain of the ark (made of silk, gold, and silver), the ark itself, the chandeliers or lustres, and the sacred books, some of which were very old. This last loss was more seriously felt by the Israelite community than all the rest. The collection of the Sepherem, or books of the law, was composed of 42 parchment rolls, and considered one of the richest in the world. The synagogue, one of the finest in France, had been rebuilt and enlarged 30 years before the Revolution of 1789.—The visit of the Queen of England to the Court of the Tuileries is still discussed and considered certain by the papers. The Queen, it is said, will take up her residence at the Grand Trianon, and already a crowd of workmen are restoring, embellishing, and preparing for her reception, the palace which was once occupied by Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette.—Ibrahim Pacha left Perpignan on the 8th ult., for Vernet, Hautes Pyrenees. The same royal honours as were paid him on arriving at the former place marked his departure, and the weather being fine, a large crowd followed the Egyptian cortège beyond the town. He remains a couple of months at Vernet to take the mineral waters, and will afterwards, it is said, visit Paris and London.—Railway speculation continues to produce disastrous results among the French, and some severe failures have already occurred. A few days ago considerable sensation was created by the announcement that M Gabriel Isot, a brother of an eminent stockbroker who has just failed, had committed suicide by blowing out his brains, on the previous morning, at his country house at Grenelle. It was also stated at the Bourse that a very large speculator has become insane in consequence of heavy losses.—Napoleon's favourite Mameluke, Roustan, died on Sunday last at Dourdan, where he had been living upon a small income of 5000f. to 6000f., derived chiefly from the sale of the presents from Napoleon and his family.

Germany.—Letters from Berlin of the 7th inst, state that for some days past strange stories have been in circulation of the discovery of a mysterious conspiracy, occasioned by the audience which a private soldier has had of the King, and the revelations which he is said to have made of a secret which was suddenly entrusted to him by a person unknown. The soldier had been obliged to promise on oath to the stranger to communicate the secret to the King alone. The story is said to be founded on facts. The audience took place, and the King is said to have been greatly affected by it. As may be supposed, the most conflicting reports are in circulation respecting the secret disclosed by the soldier; the most likely is, that it is connected with the fermentation in Posen, which spreads more and more, and has given occasion to the arrest of several persons. According to this account, a military plot among the numerous Poles in the Guards in this city was shortly to break out. The stranger is supposed to have been one of the conspirators, whose conscience troubled him, and who desired to ease his mind without directly becoming an informer.—John Ronge has returned to Breslau in good health from his visit to Southern Germany, to the great joy of his friends. He left Dresden on the 1st inst., accompanied by his friends in several carriages. His own carriage was covered with flowers.

Italy.—Accounts from Naples of the 4th state that the Emperor had not yet arrived, having remained at Palermo to celebrate the Empress's birthday. According to these letters "His Majesty was evidently labouring under intense grief at the aspect of the Empress's sufferings and debility." We regret to learn from those letters that no hope of Her Majesty's recovery was entertained. Disease had so far reduced her strength, that she was obliged to be borne from the house to the garden when desirous of air. "It would be to obtrude upon the privacy of those illustrious persons," says a private letter, "or I could detail the affecting tenderness of His Majesty for his consort, and which is not excelled in any rank of life." It is said that the Empress having expressed a wish to plant a tree in the Villa Olivezza, as a souvenir of her stay in Sicily, several persons advised her to select a laurel, when the Emperor exclaimed:—"I'll have no laurels; let others plant them. I am for an Orange-tree!"

United States.—By the mail steamer Britannia we have accounts from New York to the 1st inst. The Britannia sailed from Boston on the 2d, and Halifax on the 4th inst., and brings 70 passengers, among whom are Lord Metcalfe, Governor-General of Canada, who has resigned from ill-health, and the Right Rev. Bishop Hughes, of New York. The news is interesting, although not very important. The usual speculations, in anticipation of the President's message, continued to engross a large share of attention in the United States press, particularly on the Oregon and tariff questions. It was generally believed that the President might renew his former strong expressions regarding Oregon, but that his supporters in Congress would not follow up his declarations by action. It does not appear that the articles which have been published in the Washington Union, claiming the whole of Oregon, had excited much attention. That paper is regarded as an "alarmist," so that its bravadoes are looked upon by intelligent and moderate men as uncalled for. The negotiation respecting Oregon was understood to be going on at Washington, not in London. The President's message was to be delivered on the 1st inst., and Congress would assemble for the despatch of business on that day. This important document will no doubt be brought to Liverpool by the packet-ship Ashburton, which was to sail from New York on the 6th inst., or by the Europe packet-ship of the 1st, which some parties suppose might wait two days for the news. It is expected that Mr. Polk will recommend a reduction of the tariff to a revenue standard. Doubts are, however, entertained whether Congress will submit to his views upon this subject.—Late and important news has been received from Mexico. Its character was quite pacific. A negotiation between that country and the United States for the settlement of all disputes is now going forward. The Mexicans finding their inability to cope with the Americans, and dreading the loss of more territory and some dollars, have quietly resigned themselves to their fate, and are now ready to acknowledge Texas as one of the United States, and to remain in terms of peace and friendship with their sister republic. With regard to the army in Texas, it would appear that the troops are getting tired of their present inactivity. They are therefore desirous of quitting their present quarters. As neither food nor pay was forthcoming, a recall of the army was looked for. The telegraphs on Professor Morse's magnetic principle will be in operation on the 16th January next, from Boston to Washington, a distance of 456 miles.—On the arrival of the Britannia, on the 20th ult., confirming the previous accounts of a short crop of grain and potatoes throughout the United Kingdom, the greatest excitement commenced in the corn-markets of New York, and throughout the interior of New York State to Buffalo. Flour rose to 7 dolls. 25 cents, about 27*s.* 6*d.* per barrel, but has since fallen to 6 dolls. 88 cents, at which holders were firm, waiting advices by the Cambria. The quantity of wheat and flour sent from Buffalo is unprecedented; and the list of vessels and their freights, from New York to Liverpool, from the 24th to 30th November, show that a considerable part of the increase is destined for England. The wheat crop of the United States is about 125 millions of bushels, the largest ever known; the crop of 1842, which was the largest till this year, was 103 millions. The canals from Buffalo to Albany were open on the 29th November, and were expected to remain open perhaps a week longer. In the mean time, the departures of boats from Buffalo for Albany, all laden with flour, averaged 60 a day! There were at the last accounts 250,000 barrels of flour at Albany alone, waiting shipments to New York or Boston.—The Boston Post gives currency to a rumour that Mr. Pakenham, "who, it is understood, has been placed hors de combat in the negotiation about Oregon with Mr. Buchanan, will be recalled, and that a new Minister will be sent out to adjust the differences between the two nations upon more liberal terms than have heretofore been insisted upon by Great Britain." The position of the United States Minister at London seems to be very curious, although Mr. Polk's "official journal" denies that Mr. M'Lane is dissatisfied with his position. The New York Courier and Enquirer now puts to the Union a string of queries, from which we gather, first, that there was some difficulty in inducing Mr. M'Lane to accept the post he occupies, and that he ultimately yielded solely because Mr. Polk desired him to open a preparatory negotiation in London on the Oregon question, out of which instructions might emanate to the British Minister in the United States, which would result in the peaceable termination of that question, and with the understanding that he should return next summer; next that Mr. Polk promised to give Mr. M'Lane such specific powers and instructions as induced Mr. M'Lane to believe there would be no difficulty in settling the dispute; and, thirdly, that since then the President has been induced to change his pacific intentions in relation to Oregon, and, in consequence, had violated his faith to Mr. M'Lane.—The steam-propeller, Massachusetts, which left Liverpool on the 23d October, after a tremendous passage, put into Holmes' Hole, Massachusetts, on the 20th ult., to procure coal. She got round to New York on the 24th. —A meeting of the Montreal town-council, held on the 26th ult, agreed upon and presented to Lord Metcalfe an address, expressing the deep sympathy which, "in common with their fellow-subjects throughout this province, they feel for the cause which has necessitated his lordship's retirement from the government of British America." Lord Metcalfe left the following address to the people of Canada to be published after his departure. The sentiments are those of a loyal subject, and of a Christian, whose virtuous life has deprived death of its terrors. It will be seen from it that his Excellency offered his resignation to the Queen. It is stated from good sources that Her Majesty left the decision entirely to his lordship. "Monklands, Montreal, Nov. 25, 1845. The Governor-General cannot take leave of Canada in the sudden manner which the state of his health renders necessary, without conveying to the inhabitants of the province his fervent wishes for their prosperity and happiness. He does not quit his post in pursuit of a cure for a complaint which is supposed to be incurable, nor for the preservation of a life which could not be better disposed of than in the service of Her Majesty, and in the exercise of honest endeavours to promote the welfare of this splendid province; but solely because the increasing ravages of his disorder deprive him of the power of performing the duties of his office with the requisite efficiency. Under these circumstances, Her Majesty having most graciously signified her acceptance of his resignation, he is under the necessity of proceeding to a port of embarkation, without delay, lest the approaching severity of the season should render his removal unsafe in the present state of his health. Whether the remaining term of his existence be brief or protracted, he can never cease to regard with extreme interest the progress of affairs in this portion of Her Majesty's dominions. In retiring from his station, he has the satisfaction of believing that the prosperity of the province is rapidly rewarding the industry and enterprise of its inhabitants: and that political dissensions and animosities have in a great degree subsided. He trusts that these blessings will continue to increase. In repeating the anxious desire which he will ever retain for the welfare of Canada, he cannot refrain from expressing his grateful sense of the cordial support which he has received from the loyalty and public spirit of its inhabitants, during the period of his administration of the Government. Metcalfe."—Earl Cathcart, commander of the forces in Canada, has been sworn in administrator of the Government until the new Governor-General is appointed.

Parliament

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday.—This being the day appointed for the meeting of Parliament, the Lords Commissioners met and further prorogued it until Tuesday, the 30th inst. The Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Aberdeen, and the Earl of Haddington.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said, that in virtue of the commission, and by Her Majesty's command, the Parliament was further prorogued until the 30th inst.—The Lord Chancellor, who came to town for the purpose, appeared to have suffered very much from his late attack. Lady Lyndhurst and three other ladies sat in the body of the house; and there were several ladies and gentlemen behind the bar, but no member of the House of Commons was present.

City.

Money Market, Friday.—New Three-and-Quarter per Cent. 94⅛ to ⅝; for the Account, 92⅛ to ⅜; Exchequer Bills, 17*s.* to 19*s.* prem.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK.

TUESDAY—BANKRUPTS—W. KEARTON, Lamb street, Spitalfields, Cheesemonger—M. JONES Theobald's-road, Grocer—T. POOL, Prince's road, Notting-hill, Builder—W. GILL, Leadenhall-market, Poulterer—W. HUMPHREYS, Haymarket, Hotel-keeper—F. CORDAROY, Liverpool, Hatter—J. REYNOLDS, Fazakerley, Lancashire, Cow-keeper—J. HEYER, Manchester, Paper-dealer—T. I. HELLAWELL, J. NORCLIFFE, and J. B. HELLAWELL Halifax, Yorkshire, Dyers.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS—A. GRAHAM, Sen., Two Merkland, Dumfriesshire, Cattle-dealer—A. and R. GRAHAM, Two Merkland, Dumfriesshire, Cattle-dealers—A. DONALDSON, Jun., Edinburgh, Tailor—J. BROWN, Auchtergander, Grocer.

FRIDAY—BANKRUPTS—J. JESSOP Princes place, Notting-hill, and W. JOHNSON Queen's-road, Holloway, Builders—G. GRAHAM, T. ADAMS and M. B. MACFARLANE, Cheapside, Calico-printers—G. CRAIG, Hitchin, Hertfordshire, Baker—J. KELSEY, Manchester, Builder—J. LEWIS, Tipton-Staffordshire, Grocer—J. HOWE, West Bromwich, Staffordshire, Linen-draper—J. COLLINS, Lancashire, Common Brewer J. HADFIELDS, Manchester, Merchant—H. CHARGE, Manchester, Commission Agent—T. FISHER, Manchester, Plasterer and Painter.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS—J. BAIN, Glasgow, Merchant—A. DONALDSON, Peebles, Clothier—D. LEARMOUTH and Co., Roughmute, Farmers—J. and W. STEVENSON and Co., Knowe, Renfrewshire, Power-loom Manufacturers.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Free Trade Meetings.—A numerous meeting of the electors of the city of London, in favour of a total repeal of the Corn-laws, was held on Monday, the Lord Mayor in the chair. Speeches in favour of free trade were delivered by Mr. Dillon, Mr. Ricardo, Mr. Cobden, Mr. J. M. Robinson, Mr. W. Hawes, Dr. Bowring, Mr. Perkins, and other gentlemen; and the following resolutions on the subject were unanimously adopted:—

1. That the principle of protection in commerce is unsound—false in theory and in practice, delusive to the classes who seek protection, and injurious to the community at large. That the great practical rule of leaving all commerce unfettered, applies more peculiarly, and on still stronger grounds of justice as well as policy, to the trade in corn, and in all articles whatsoever which form the food of the people, than to any other trade.

2. That the protective law, commonly called the Corn-law, has in this country wholly failed in either benefiting the agriculturists or in providing for the wants and protecting the interests of the community. That it has engendered strife among classes at home, and provoked against us hostility and retaliation abroad. That it has neither secured the promised stability in price, nor regularity in supply. That it has neither made us independent of foreign supply, nor provided against the recurrence of scarcity and famine. That the sliding-scale, particularly, has added the risks of chance and the spirit of gambling to the common irregularities of trade and the uncertainty of the season. That this law, whilst it has altogether failed in realising the advantages promised by its supporters, has brought upon us all, and more than all, the evils predicted by those who were opposed to its introduction.

3. That looking to the present political, commercial, and economical state of this country, it is indispensable (as part of a more liberal and enlightened system of policy) that the present Corn-law, and all laws which levy a tax upon the food of the great mass of the people, should be immediately repealed.

4. That our four representatives be requested and instructed to support such repeal in the Commons House of Parliament.

Among the other numerous free trade meetings in different parts of the country, we may mention the following, which have taken place since our last notice: Glasgow, Birmingham (attended by 8000 persons), Plymouth, Hanley (Staffordshire Potteries), Hull, Rochdale, Bradford, Otley, Kendal, Wakefield, Keighley, Yeadon, Batley, Forfar, Coupar, Porto-bello, Dalkeith, Hereford (town council). Arbroath, Rye, Congleton, Rochester, Gravesend, Wolverhampton, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and St. Pancras, London.

Anti Corn-Law League.—The Morning Chronicle states that "at a private meeting of the influential members of the League, held on Saturday, at Manchester, including Messrs. Cobden, Bright, H. Marsland, and R. Walker, M.Ps., it was resolved, that to put the League in a position to strike a decisive blow in the present emergency, a subscription of a quarter of a million sterling should be raised. We learn that the meeting was one of the most numerous and influential ever held by the League, and that the proposition was agreed to unanimously. It is also said that it was further resolved to recommend to the country, and to originate through the powerful organisation of the League extending over the kingdom, petitions to Parliament in favour of a total and immediate repeal of the Corn-laws."—The meetings of the League in Covent-Garden Theatre were resumed on Wednesday night; and, as might be expected in the present position of affairs, there was an enormous assemblage of people. From an early hour the theatre was filled, and for some time before the hour of meeting, the doors were besieged by an impatient multitude anxious to gain admission, while those inside were squeezed into the closest possible space. The Hon. Mr. Villiers took the chair, and briefly addressed the meeting. Mr. Cobden then said that "He thought some of the protection societies would be very glad of their overflow. Applications had been made at the League office for 30,000 tickets, to attend this meeting: there were thousands outside who could not be accommodated, and there were many more inside than could be comfortably accommodated. When they met Parliament, the first proposition must be an immediate repeal of the Corn-laws. He defied any Ministry to take office without coming down at once, and in the Queen's speech proposing this measure. There was no man now to be found at large out of the House of Commons, who would get up in defence of the Corn-laws. Of course he excluded the members of the Protection Societies, for they were privileged people. He was anxious to meet the protectionists in the House of Commons on this subject; only it would be an odd scene when they assembled, for no man would know where to sit. There would be such greetings in the lobbies, one asking the other, on what side do you mean to sit? And the greatest subject of interest would be to see where Sir Robert Peel would sit. He should not wonder if they had to hand him a chair, and put him in the middle of the floor. They must recollect that the debate would turn upon the exigencies of the present moment. If Lord John Russell took office he would be a bold man if he did—but, if he did, he must either suspend the law by an order in Council or he must call Parliament together, and say, either you must suspend the law at once or I will not hold office for a week. Let them abolish the Corn-law first, and the rest of the system would crumble to dust soon afterwards. Terms had been talked of—the property-tax re-adjustment of taxation. Now he warned the landowners—he warned the aristocracy against forcing upon the attention of the middle and industrious classes the subject of taxation. If they wanted another League at the death of this one, let them force upon the industrious classes of the country the understanding how they have been cheated, robbed, and bamboozled upon the subject of taxation—how the landowners had induced the Crown to give up its claim to their feudal services, while they retained their feudal rights over the inferior copyhold landowners—how they had bargained with the Crown to pay 4*s.* in the pound upon the rental of their land for the giving up of these feudal rights—how they afterwards passed an Act locking their first valuation final, while the value of land had increased tenfold in some parts of Scotland, and fivefold in some parts of England, since the last valuation, 150 years ago. They had exempted themselves also from the probate and legacy duties—they could transmit their estates from sire to son without taxes, while the industrious tradesman was subject at his death to taxes and stamps before his children could inherit his property; they had exempted their tenants' houses from taxation, as well as their horses and dogs, their draining tiles, &c. If they forced upon the people of this country a proper understanding of these things, they would make as useful a bargain for themselves on the subject of taxation, as they had now done on the subject of the Corn-laws. The times that were coming would require from them all the greatest vigilance and activity. There would be a great struggle in the spring. The Duke of Richmond had told them that he trusted to the hereditary legislators. Well, he (Mr. Cobden) would say—"Hereditary bondsmen, know ye not," &c. He would back the hereditary bondsmen against the hereditary legislators. They had always had the best of the aristocracy in their own ranks, and he was glad of it, for he wanted no war of classes. It was bad enough that they had parties; but it would never be the fault of the League if the Corn-laws became a question between classes. This was a question on which for the next three months there ought be no sleep. He was confident of Lord John Russell. If they had his word they had his bond. With Lord Morpeth and Lord Grey they were as safe as with Lord John Russell. He did not know who besides he might have. (Cries of "Yourself," followed by vehement cheering.) Yes, he would act in the character of watchman as long as there were bad characters abroad. But there might be some difficulty in making a Cabinet as willing to stick for Corn-law repeal as himself, and he might not find them as willing to coerce the hereditary legislators as he might wish. The people therefore must back him and show that he had power on his side. He had heard some mean shabby people say, how much freer Lord John Russell would have been if he had not written his letter. Why, Lord John Russell would have been nothing now without that letter. But for that letter Lord John Russell would no more have commanded the public confidence than Sir R. Peel himself. And that was good in the Whig party had already joined them. The Conservative party had been broken to atoms by the disruption in the ranks of their leaders. The League stood erect and aloft on the ruins of all the factions. Let them, then, hold their principles without swerving to the right or to the left, and if they did so for the next six months, they would then be near the time when the League would be dissolved into the primeval elements from whence it sprung.—Mr. BRIGHT said he differed from his friend Mr. Cobden with regard to this being a war of classes. He thought it had already become a war between the industrious classes and the lords and proprietors of the soil. Within the last 50 years the formerly despised manufacturers and traders had assumed a new position, and the aristocracy found that they had others besides themselves to attend to. He thought he had now ground for asserting that the Corn-law made it impossible for any party to govern England. He defended Sir Robert Peel from the attacks of the Essex protectionists. It was neither treachery nor perfidy in Sir Robert Peel to give up the Corn-laws. No man could do impossibilities; and it was impossible for any Government to maintain the Corn-laws. Sir Robert Peel was responsible both to his country and to posterity for the well-being of England; but the squires were responsible for nothing—they were lost in the herd; and as for posterity, no man who wrote the history of this period would write long paragraphs on the Tyrrells and the Braintons. This question was a serious one when they began the agitation seven years ago; it was more serious now, when two millions had been added to the population. The table was here as before, the food was spread in about the same abundance, but two millions of fresh guests had arrived to eat it. He saw them now, "in his mind's eye," some fighting and struggling; some dying, without a struggle, of starvation, which no one marked here, but they might depend upon it the Recording Angel was noting down the guilt of those who caused their death. How, then, was the Corn-law to be repealed? Why, by such meetings as the present, and by preparation for that general election which in all probability was coming upon them. At Manchester a meeting was to be held on Tuesday, of all who were anxious to assist the League, and the council of the League had resolved to raise a fund of £50,000, to be ready for any emergency. That money would be subscribed, and he could promise the country that it would be honestly and judiciously applied to the purposes of the League. If the friends of protection liked to defer the struggle till the warm weather came, they would not trouble their friends to meet within four walls, but they would meet in large towns in such numbers that the aristocracy, with all the hereditary courage, would quail before the demonstration. Two centuries ago the people engaged in a struggle with the Crown, and an ancient monarchy was overturned. If our ancestors refused to be the bondsmen of a king, should their children become the born thralls of an aristocracy? Should they who struck the lion down pay homage to the wolf? They had larger numbers, wealth and intelligence than their fathers, and they were in possession of a weapon infinitely better than that of force. He hoped if the law were repealed in the next six months, and the League dissolved, he implored the people not to forget the 10*l.* franchise, as the small but effective weapon by which the power of the hereditary peerage must at length be laid in the dust.—Mr. Fox then addressed the meeting, and said that the present crisis, in other countries, would be the commencement of a revolution, but here it was only the firm, quiet determination of the people to obtain their rights. And where was the great Conservative party who should have done this for them; where were they who drove the Whigs from power? For ten long years this party had been built up with success, welcoming apostates from every principle, and holders of every principle, holding out its hand to unite Roman Catholic Dissenters on the one hand, and Romanising Puseyites on the other. For four years this party had held power, and all at once, just as the leader was exclaiming, "Is not this great Babylon that I have builded for the glory of my name, and the excellency of my power?" his Babylon fell to pieces in a marvellous confusion of tongues—the magician deserted by his demons was left on the wide waste, to abide the "pelting of the pitiless storm"—a storm more pelting than any other in his recollection. And perhaps it would one day be felt to be too pitiless. If it were true that he had broken up his party for the sake of the people, if not to their confidence, he was at least entitled to their gratitude. Then there was the Whig party, who were not in, though their opponents were out. If they came in, he trusted it would be to carry the repeal of the Corn-laws without qualification whatever. They should confer with Sir Robert Peel for that purpose, if necessary. If a creation of Peers be necessary, the country expected it would be done. Why should they not make Peers? Could they make any worse than some of those who now sat in that House? If a creation be necessary they should create in Parliament; and if necessary let them dissolve it again to get the proper the chance of the next registration as well as the next. If all this would not do, let them throw up office again and take their seats in opposition. He would say to them absolutely, go with the people more than you are accustomed to do. The country demanded that the Commons of England be represented in the Cabinet. He thought they ought also to keep more on a level with the advance of public opinion in this country. If they would be real leaders of the country, let them come and head the power which they wished to back them in office. Let them give their thousands to the quarter of a million, and let them give another quarter of a million from the Whig party. Let them do this, and he could assure them that there was no amount of confidence which the people would not repose in them. He then concluded by a remonstrance to the Duke of Wellington, reminding him that in every respect Napoleon was a greater and more powerful man than his conqueror, and yet, with all his mighty plans, were brought to nought by the decrees of Napoleon. Let the Duke of Wellington take warning—if the Berlin decrees overthrew Napoleon, the Corn-laws would work the downfall of the Duke of Wellington; and he would go to the grave, coupled with him he defeated in this, that they both

"Left a name at which the world grew pale,
To point a moral or adorn a tale."

And that moral was that no power could defeat the laws of nature.

A Slave Crew in the London Docks.—At the Thames Police Court last week Sir George Stephen, the solicitor to the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, who was accompanied by several gentlemen interested in the abolition of slavery, made an application to Mr. Broderip on behalf of a number of men said to be held in a state of bondage on board the ship Ann in the London Docks. Sir George Stephen said the application he was about to make was a very extraordinary one. He solicited the interference of the magistrate on behalf of twenty individuals who were kept in the London Docks in a state of slavery, although ostensibly they formed part of the crew of a vessel. Some time ago a ship called the Caroline came to this port from Zanzebar, a country on the east coast of Africa, and now subject to the Imaum of Muscat, with presents from the Imaum to our Queen. The crew of the Caroline consisted wholly of slaves, who were compelled to navigate the ship to England, and were used with much cruelty during the voyage, and one of them had been murdered at sea, about three days sail from the island of Ascension, and two from St. Helena. The boatswain's mate happened to insult the slave, who retaliated by striking him. The boatswain reported him to the supercargo of the ship, who flogged the slave with a rope's end, and as the slave was obdurate, he set three other slaves upon him, who beat him to death with their knees and elbows as he lay stretched on deck. He was informed that the other slaves had endured great privations, and were now governed by a system of terror, and had no will of their own, that they were in want of warm clothing, and that they were frequently beaten with rattans. It was true they were allowed to go ashore every day, but they were compelled to return at a particular hour. The ship Caroline belonged to the son of the Imaum of Muscat, and was under repair, in consequence of which the slaves were transferred to the Ann. He thought it desirable the magistrates should grant a summons for the master of the ship to show cause why he should not be compelled to liberate the men who were now in a free country and entitled to their liberty. A summons would be the best mode of putting the case in a train of inquiry, and the slaves would be enabled to state their grievances. The charge of murder could not be investigated here, because it was committed on board a foreign ship, out of the magistrate's jurisdiction; but the twenty slaves on whose behalf he sought the interference of the bench were in a British port, and under the protection of our laws.—In consequence of this statement the magistrate sent an inspector of police to investigate the case. On Wednesday the officer reported that he had been on board the Ann, and from the inquiries he had made, it did not appear that any of the men were in a state of slavery, or that any murder had been committed on board the Caroline, as was alleged by Sir G. Stephen. There was no reason to believe that the men had been used with cruelty in general, but one or two of the men had been flogged by the captain's orders for pawning their clothes, and getting drunk with the money. Sir G. Stephen and some other gentlemen connected with the Anti-Slavery Association, had seen the Arabs on board and conversed with them, but only four had taken advantage of the offer made them to be sent back to Zanzebar. The others were content to remain on board the Ann until the repairs of the Caroline were completed, when they would return to their own country. Sir G. Stephen also attended and repeated his statement that 20 of the crew were slaves, &c. Mr. Clarkson, the barrister, subsequently attended with the captain and others, and complained of the erroneous statement of Sir G. Stephen. Mr Clarkson said that the agents for the Imaum of Muscat were Messrs. Newman and Hunt, one of the most respectable firms of the city of London, and the very last persons to have anything to do with slaves or slavery. The crew of the Caroline consisted of 60 persons, and, according to the statement of Sir G. Stephen, he could only induce four of them to abandon their master, and sail in another vessel. He was in a condition to prove that the whole of the crew had received their wages, that they had experienced the most humane treatment, and had been supplied by the agents with money and clothes beyond what they were entitled to by the articles. It was really too bad to make such a serious and unfounded charge. Some persons, with a spirit of knight-errantry, were constantly seeking adventures, and, in their Quixotic expeditions, did great mischief. Sir G. Stephen had conjured up a phantom. Some black men were in this port, and, of course, they must be slaves, and then a story was told about a murder. The learned counsel proceeded at great length to denounce the interference of Sir G. Stephen, which, he said, was quite uncalled for. Mr. Broderip reiterated the statements made by Sir G. Stephen and the inspector of police, and said it was contrary to his practice, and it ought to be contrary to the practice of all justices, to hear ex parte statements in cases over which they had no control; but Sir G. Stephen had made a complaint that men were in this port in a state of slavery, and he should have been wanting in his duty to the public if he had not directed an officer to inform the men of their relative position. Sir G. Stephen still laboured under an idea the men were slaves.—Mr. Clarkson: Slaves, indeed! the captain of a slaver who would bring his slaves into the port of London must be as excited as Sir G. Stephen.—Mr. Broderip said he had heard Mr. Clarkson with much satisfaction, and that he would not after this suffer the court to be made the arena of such discussions any more.—Mr. Clarkson: It is a very serious thing for such a charge to go out, and I hope Sir G. Stephen will be more careful in future.—The parties then left the court, but it seems that the matter will not rest here; for, on Tuesday, Mr. Clarkson applied to the Lord Mayor on the subject of a libellous letter which had been published, he said, by Sir G. Stephen, as an advertisement in the Times. The purport of this letter was to repeat the statement that a seaman called Abdallah had been murdered by the captain and crew near Ascension. Mr. Clarkson said that he had the persons to whom the statement referred, prepared to come forward and declare upon oath that the whole of it was an untruth. He did not mean to attribute a knowledge that it was a false statement to Sir G. Stephen, but he meant to assert that there was not an atom of foundation for the story itself. It was thought right by the agents of the gentleman who represented the Imaum of Muscat to bring forward the crew of the Caroline, who were thus designated slaves and murderers, to make their depositions upon oath before the magistrate in denial of the whole of the circumstance described in Sir G. Stephen's letter, and to proceed under the libel Act, 6 & 7 Vic. Sir G. Stephen, however, had declined to attend before his Lordship, and intimated his intention to apply to the Judges for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the crew before their Lordships, so that the case was necessarily no longer under the jurisdiction of the magistrate. The Lord Mayor said the Judges were certainly the authority to which such a subject must most properly be introduced. His Lordship at the same time admitted there was ground for making a statement in contradiction to the contents of the letter before a magistrate.

Extraordinary High Tide.—The highest tide known for the last 25 years occurred on Friday morning, and the consequent destruction of property on both sides of the river has been very great. The wind was north-west during the whole day, and towards night it increased in violence, and acting upon a spring tide, forced an immense body of water up the river. Unfortunately for the inhabitants of the water-side premises, the tide did not commence flowing until night had set in, and as it continued rising for six hours, those living near the river had retired to rest. No previous precaution having been adopted, the water poured into the basement floors and cellars of houses contiguous to the river, and in many parts extended inland some hundreds of yards. The scene that presented itself from London-Bridge to Hammersmith, when daylight broke, was extraordinary. The publicans in Thames-street, Bank-side, and so on to Westminster and Lambeth, had their cellars filled with water, the butts and puncheons of beer and spirits were floating about, and in many instances had been staved in. The Commercial-road, Lambeth, and the Belvidere-road were all under water. The road to Lambeth church was impassable. The tide rushed under the gates of the Archbishop's palace, filling the gardens and approaches to the houses. At Vauxhall, the tide threw down the wall facing the embankment of the Brunswick-gardens; the goods premises of the South Western Railway were all under water. A large wall inclosing the Ranelagh estate, adjoining the Royal Hospital, was thrown down, and the tide having free ingress, extended many hundred yards inland, and meeting with the Grosvenor Canal overflowed a great part of Pimlico. Battersea-marshes were one immense sheet of water, a circumstance that has not occurred for 25 years. The village of Battersea was completely flooded, and on the Chelsea side the tide covered the grounds of Cremorne House, and reached the King's-road. Sir Edward East's grounds at Battersea were much injured, and a great portion of the fencing torn up. At Wandsworth the tide did great damage. At Putney it was also very destructive, and at Fulham the water rose so high that the Bishop of London's grounds were flooded, and the churchyard was under water. The fires on the ground-floor of the Swan were extinguished, and the water flowed to the King's Arms, a distance of a quarter of a mile. The damage below London Bridge, at Shadwell, Greenwich, Rochester, &c., was equally extensive.

East India House.—A quarterly general court of proprietors of East India stock was held on Wednesday; Sir Henry Willock, the chairman, in the chair. Mr. Thompson proceeded to bring forward certain charges against Lieut.-Col. Ovans, in connection with the case of the Rajah of Sattara. After reading various documents to establish a charge of subornation on the part of Col. Ovans, Mr. Thompson asked if the court would decide upon the charges he preferred seriatim? The Chairman said that the hon. proprietor must take his own course. Mr. Thompson called upon the court to express its opinion upon the subject, but there being no seconder, the Chairman declared that the first charge had fallen to the ground. Mr. Thompson then brought forward the second charge—of opening letters, extortion, and concealment of evidence, upon which he addressed the court at some length. Mr. Wilks seconded the resolution, but declared his intention to vote against it. The motion was then put, and only two hands held up in its favour. Mr. Thompson then postponed the other resolutions, and the Court adjourned.

Royal Academy.—Mr. T. S. Cooper, Mr. W. F. Frith, and Mr. A. Elmore have been elected Associates of the Royal Academy.

Murder of Sir Lawrence Jones, Bart.—The Smyrna papers of the 28th ult. contain an account of the murder of Sir Lawrence Jones by brigands. We subjoin the details as furnished by a Smyrna newspaper called the Impartial:—"On the 6th, at two o'clock in the afternoon, two English gentlemen, viz., Sir Lawrence Jones, Bart., and Captain Twopenny, left Macri for Smyrna; they were accompanied by a Greek dragoman of the name of Nicoli, and also three conductors. On the night of the same day they all slept at Karghi, and the next, at twelve o'clock, they found themselves at the foot of the mountain called Khassils Bel, where they stopped to breakfast; during this repast one of the conductors observed to the dragoman that two or three Zhybecks were at a distance in front; but as he in a short time lost sight of them the voyageurs were undisturbed and their route was continued. But they had not proceeded more than six minutes on their journey, when they were suddenly assailed by a warm fire of musketry from behind one of the rocks of the mountain. Sir Lawrence Jones fell dead as well as the Greek Nicoli by this fatal discharge; Captain Twopenny was also grievously wounded. The robbers, without the least fear of being recognised, approached and began to take possession of everything which they could lay their hands upon. Captain Twopenny miraculously escaped from being dispatched. One of the brigands had already pointed his pistol to the chest of the wounded captain, when a fellow brigand turned the aim of the pistol, and it went off in a different direction. Having remained for about an hour and a half upon the stage of the field of murder, the robbers departed. Captain Twopenny, aided by his conductor, with difficulty remounted his horse. It was not until 12 hours' ride of fatigue that the suffering gentleman arrived at Macri, weltering in his blood, which was running from his numerous wounds. He had done everything in his power to take with him the remains of his departed and unfortunate friend, but could not succeed. He was satisfied in cutting off a lock of his hair, and taking a ring off his finger (which had escaped the rapacity of the robbers), as a sort of souvenir to his afflicted family. On his arrival at Macri, his first care was to look after the body of his companion, which was brought to Macri on the 9th, as well as that of Nicoli. Both of them were buried in the Greek chapel, with all the ceremonies and rites of that faith. This affecting news has produced the most melancholy sensation amongst the English residents at Smyrna."

The late Sir T. F. Buxton.—A subscription has been commenced for the purpose of erecting a monument to the memory of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, in Westminster Abbey; to be placed with those to the memory of Mr. Wilberforce, Mr. Granville Sharp, and Mr. Zachary Macaulay, as recording his labours in the suppression of the slave trade in conjunction with those distinguished individuals.

Lincoln's Inn.—The old avenue leading from Portugal-street into the great square of Lincoln's Inn, has been closed, and the space occupied by it and the shops contained in it, are being converted into chambers.

Steam-boat Collision on the River.—About 5 o'clock on Saturday evening, as the Emerald, Diamond steam-packet, after touching at Greenhithe, was proceeding on her way from London to Gravesend, her Captain observed a large steam-vessel directly ahead of him, coming up the river. As she approached he and his men in the bow of the Emerald sang out, but the steamer kept in the same track. The Captain's order to port the helm had scarcely been obeyed when the Emerald was struck on the larboard quarter by the bow of the other vessel which turned out to be the John Bull, Hamburg packet. The paddle-box and quarter of the Emerald were stove in, and the funnel was thrown down with a tremendous crash, producing a shock throughout the vessel, which flung the passengers from their seats, and tumbled over them the tables and everything thereon. A rush was made to the cabin door, but the passage was stopped by all attempting to force their way up the stairs to the deck. A cry of "Bring up the women, bring up the women" from the deck, added to the alarm and confusion; but at length, owing to the self-possession of some of the gentlemen, and a few of the ladies who made way and held back, the whole of the cabin passengers were on deck in a minute and a half after the collision. The Emerald was then believed to be going down. The John Bull's bow was apparently wedged into the larboard quarter, and the bowsprit of that vessel over the fore deck of the Emerald. This was endeavoured to be reached by several of the Emerald's passengers by means of the rigging. Some succeeded in getting into the John Bull in this way, and more clambered up her bows. At this time both vessels had let off their steam, and drifting down with the tide in their state of entanglement, came athwart the bow of a brig that lay at anchor nearly opposite Grays, but close to the Kentish shore. The collision with the brig increased the danger of the steamers, particularly the Emerald, whose deck cabins were stove in by the brig's bowsprit, which broke off in the collision, and her fore topmast fell forward with all its gear, breaking in its fall the arms of two gentlemen on the deck of the Emerald, both of whom, as it would seem, attempted to get into the brig when the vessels came in contact. The three vessels were now entangled together, and the alarm on board each was, perhaps, equal. At length the John Bull fell off from the Emerald, whose anchor had now been dropped, and the Railway steamer, from Blackwall to Gravesend, came alongside the brig, and the passengers of the Emerald, except those who got on board the John Bull, were taken off by her, and landed at Gravesend. Two men, in the first shock of the collision, were thrown overboard, but were picked up safely. Each party blames the other for the collision. The Emerald was not, it is said, in her proper track with a going-down tide; and on the other hand, it is averred that the John Bull was not only not on the proper side of the river, going up with a down tide, but that she had no lights up.

The Westminster Play.—The "Andria," of Terence, was produced last week, by the Queen's scholars of Westminster School, as their Christmas play. The cast was much stronger than usual, and the play throughout has given great satisfaction to the numerous distinguished visitors who have attended the different performances. The prologue was spoken by Mr. T. A. Goodenough, the captain of the school.

The Case of the Brazilian Pirates.—It is understood that the division of the Judges in this case was, 11 against the conviction and 2 for it. Baron Platt was one of the two, and Baron Alderson the other. Mr. Justice Coleridge and Mr. Justice Cresswell did not sit. The men were sent to London on Saturday, under the care of the Brazilian Consul, who has since placed them on board a vessel bound to the Brazils.

Baths and Washhouses for the Labouring Classes.—On Tuesday evening a public dinner took place at the London Tavern, to celebrate the laying of the foundation-stone, in Wentworth-street, Whitechapel, of the first model establishment intended to supply baths and washhouses for the labouring classes. The Lord Mayor took the chair, and was supported by a very numerous body of gentlemen, animated by the desire to promote by their influence and subscriptions an object so fraught with advantages to the labouring classes. Among the company were Archdeacon Hale, Mr. Cotton, Governor of the Bank of England; Mr. C. H. Turner, Mr. P. Borthwick, M.P.; Mr. G. F. Young, Mr. Osgood Hanbury, Mr. Hankey, Mr. B. Hawes, sen., Mr. W. Hawes, Mr. N. Gould, Mr. Soames, Mr. Justin, Mr. J. S. Buckingham, &c. Speeches in favour of the Baths and Washhouses were delivered by the Lord Mayor, Mr. Cotton, Archdeacon Hale, and other gentlemen, and the subscriptions collected in the course of the evening amounted to about 1000*l.*

Quarantine Regulations.—A plan has been submitted to the Admiralty, by Dr. Sir W. Pym, the medical superintendent of quarantine establishments, suggesting that in future all men-of-war, returning from certain parts of the coast of Africa, shall be placed in quarantine on their arrival in England, to prevent contagious fever from spreading; the motive for doing so being the case of the Eclair. Sir W. Pym's proposal has been submitted to Sir W. Burnett, director-general of the Medical department of the navy, who is desired to give his opinion as to the necessity of the measure. The Admiralty, it is said, are unfavourably disposed to Sir. W. Pym's proposal.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Dec. 13:—West Districts, 130; Northern, 162; Central, 186; Eastern, 215; Southern, 277; Total, 970; males, 517; females, 453. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1359; males, 721; females 638.

Provincial.

Bath.—The annual dinner of the Bath and West of England Agricultural Society took place on Tuesday week, the Marquis of Lansdowne in the chair. After the usual routine toasts, the Noble President, his health having been drank with enthusiasm, said he had felt during the whole of his life, now a pretty long one, the importance of encouraging meetings of all descriptions, in which persons were enabled to interchange their ideas, and to elicit, by collision with each other, those improvements, those ideas, and those hopes by which people were led on and encouraged to exertion. They lived in times in which science was not a luxury nor a pleasure, but one of the necessities of life, and by the cultivation of which could they alone hope to maintain their ground as a nation or as individuals, in that place in society which had been by Providence allotted to them. He hoped that at a period when the most extraordinary discoveries were making by eminent theorists and men of science, and which were no sooner made than they were practically followed up, and applied to the improvement of manufacture, trade, and commerce, it would not be said of agriculture alone, that those employed in it were so remiss as not to engage with zeal, perseverance, and industry, in applying to their art and to their habits those improvements which were not less calculated to confer the benefit of wealth and fortune on them than they were on every other class of the community with which they were connected. At all times, but more especially at a time when it was not known from day to day what would be their situation, pronouncing an opinion on any question now depending, there was enough to excite in all the conviction that they might be called on to struggle; but, at the same time, he hoped he might add, that if they were called on to struggle, they would struggle successfully for their own and for the public good.

Bolton.—On Monday soon after one o'clock, just as the workmen of Messrs. Rothwell and Kitts' cotton-mill, Bolton, were about to resume work after dinner an explosion of one of the boilers took place, and the boiler-house being situated under the mill, which is a building six stories high, the whole of one end was blown up with a tremendous crash, and a number of the work-people buried beneath the ruins. Six have already been taken out dead, and a great number seriously injured, and others were heard beneath the fallen materials for some hours after the accident imploring to be rescued. Every exertion was made to clear away the rubbish, broken machinery, &c., and the calamity has proved less serious than might have been expected. Above the boiler-house there was a warehouse, three mule-spinning-rooms, and at the top a machine shop, the whole of which now lie a mass of ruins. Various are the reports of the cause of the accident, but none of them are at present to be depended upon. The loss sustained by the explosion is estimated at between 1000*l*. and 1500*l*. Amongst those killed are Mr. Rothwell, nephew of the late owner of the mill, and Mr. Greenhalgh the manager.

Cambridge.—The Syndicate have recommended to the Senate that Mr. Cockerell, R.A., be appointed Mr. Basevi's successor, as architect of the new Fitzwilliam Museum, with instructions to adhere as closely as may be to Mr. Basevi's designs in carrying on the work to its completion.

Chelmsford.—A general meeting of the Essex Agricultural Society was held in this town on Friday. The number present amounted to about 800 landowners and farmers, including many of the most influential men of the county. Mr. R. Baker, presided, and said, it had been proposed by the committee, that in consequence of the declaration of some of the members of the late Administration in favour of free trade, a demonstration in opposition to such principles should be made by the farmers of Essex. An event, however, had since occurred which very materially altered the position of affairs, viz., the resignation of Sir Robert Peel. This event had come like a thunderstroke upon them; coming from a Minister who had accepted office on the understanding that he would uphold protection to the British agriculturist. Sir Robert Peel had led them to suppose that his measures with reference to agriculture were to be final. As soon, however, as a clamour was raised by interested parties, the Premier had deserted the agricultural population, and this to them was a matter of surprise and regret. If ever there was a time when it behoved the farmers of England to gather round their leaders, this was the time. They must fully and freely express their opinions. They had been grossly deceived, and their representatives had been also deceived, and induced them to support a Ministry which had proved itself unworthy of confidence. The present was a great crisis, and he therefore called upon all those present to support the proceedings of that day, and prove to the world that they, the yeomen of Essex, were in favour of that protection to the British grower which was requisite to indemnify him from foreign invasion on his rights and privileges.—Mr. R. Copeland said that a short time since he could not have believed that he would so soon have been called upon to attend a meeting like the present. These, however, were no ordinary times, and he believed there were now hanging over the heads of the agriculturists of England the most fearful dangers. Under these circumstances their committee had assembled, and viewing with much anxiety the motions of the Anti Corn-Law League in the north, the exaggerated statements they were circulating, and the failure in the potato crop, with which the emissaries of that body endeavoured to frighten the farmers from their propriety, had feared that these things might induce the ministers to open the ports. Believing this to be quite unnecessary, they had determined to summon a general meeting of the Association, that they might take steps to maintain inviolate the system of protection to agriculture. Since then, however, other circumstances had arisen, and there was now no Government to memorialise, and the only course left for them was to proclaim to the country their intention to continue their opposition to the carrying into practice the crotchets of the Anti Corn-Law League. They cared not for change of Government, but they would take notice of such political tergiversation as had been exhibited by Sir R. Peel. Protection was essential to the interests of the farmer, the landowner, and the labourer, and he would venture to add to the manufacturer also. Why were they met upon that occasion? Not for the purpose of maintaining dear bread, but in order to show that if free trade were allowed, bread would be still dearer than it is now, while a vast portion of the agricultural labourers would be lost by an increase of destitution. He begged to move the following resolution:—"That this meeting, having been convened for the purpose of memorialising the late Ministry upon the subject of the Corn-laws, notwithstanding the event that has occurred, is desirous to record its deliberate opinion, that the maintenance of protection to British industry against foreign competition is essential to the welfare and prosperity of the people, and that the removal of the restrictions upon the importation of foreign corn can only be viewed as preliminary to free trade in every other description of manufacture in which labour is deeply involved, and that it is with the deepest apprehension this meeting contemplates a revolution in prosperity to such a painful extent as to endanger the public safety, and involve the producers of corn and manufactures in inevitable ruin; that this meeting is firmly resolved to oppose the slightest diminution of the duties now levied on foreign agricultural produce, and strenuously urges upon the members of this society and the inhabitants of this country, increased and untiring exertions to carry out successfully that determination."—Mr. Du Cane seconded the resolution.—The Rev. J. Smithers having spoken in support of the motion it was carried unanimously.—Sir J. T. Tyrrell, M.P. for the northern division of the county, said, that having watched for some time the progress of events, he came among them for the purpose of fully declaring his firm opinion of the crisis which had now come upon them. He saw the present state of things with great satisfaction and he considered that it was a source of great gratulation to the middle and labouring classes of the country connected with the agricultural interest, that such an event had occurred as the resignation of Sir Robert Peel. For his own part, he had long been disgusted with the reign of humbug, but he was rejoiced that that reign was now over. The "organised hypocrisy" was no more. Now they had come to the contest. Foot to foot they would have to resist. Protection would be arrayed without mistake against no protection; and so far, happily, there would be no mistake between them. He would say that their present position was unprecedented. The commander had deserted his troops; they were disbanded. The leader, with 100 majority at his back, had left them. What, then, were they to do? Why, they must organise themselves, and do the best they could. It was impossible that they should not find leaders to represent them. He had of late, within the last 48 hours, spent some time at the Carlton Club, and he was delighted with all he had there witnessed. There was not an attendant there who was not loud in his condemnation of Sir Robert Peel. The general remark there was, that Sir Robert had betrayed the interests of the agriculturists of the United Kingdom. They had early indications of such betrayal. The election for the city of London, and the coolness with which their Conservative festival in that town was treated were indications of the supineness of the Premier. But these were "bygones." Let them pause, and let them consider to whom they were indebted for the resignation of Sir Robert. To Field Marshal the Duke of Wellington. It was he who, by confidence in his troops, had won the Battle of Waterloo—and it was he who, with confidence in the British yeomen, had dared to resist free trade. Nor was he alone on their side. He (Sir J. Tyrrell) could tell them that the agriculturists had with them Lords Stanley and Wharncliffe, Lord Granville Somerset, and the Hon. Sidney Herbert. He had had this from the best authority; the question therefore was how they were in their deserted state to act for the best? "Protection to agriculture" must be their watchword. No other must be inscribed upon their banners at the forthcoming election. The power of the agricultural body was unquestionably great, and as their meeting had for years placed him in a situation of confidence amongst them he would impress upon them the necessity of action. It should be remembered that it was the apathy of the agricultural body generally which had placed them in so humiliating a position as they were; but they had only to rally and assert their rights, and they would make themselves heard. He would repeat he was glad that the reign of humbug was at an end. Sir Robert had been playing at the "long range" and the "short range"—he had tried the "narrow gauge" and the "broad gauge"—and what was the result? Why, that nobody had any confidence in him. He would advise the meeting never to put any confidence in Sir R. Peel again. With a majority of 110 at his back Sir R. Peel ought to have been the last man to have left his corps unprotected on the field. (The speaker resumed his seat amidst great cheering).—Mr. T. W. Bramston, M.P. for South Essex, had heard with great pleasure that although Sir R. Peel had deserted their ranks, they had still so many eminent men with them. Never was there an instance of such political tergiversation as that furnished by Sir R. Peel's conduct. He (Mr. Bramston) had reposed the utmost confidence in the right hon. baronet, the ex-Premier, but now the spell was broken, and he regretted to say that he had discovered, too late, that such confidence had been misplaced. An election would take place shortly, it might be 12 months. (A voice—"The sooner the better.") Well, no matter how soon: he hoped they would be prepared, that the Essex farmers would be ready to stand up as men for the protection they now enjoyed, and that they would give the most unqualified opposition to everything like an attempt which might be made to deprive them of it.—Mr. G. Palmer, the other member for South Essex, said he had had the honour for many years, to represent the county. He had always been in favour of protection, and always would be. He would always support the interest of the British agriculturist.—Mr. J. Round, M.P. for Maldon, having delivered a speech advocating the same views as those expressed by the previous speakers—Mr. F. Hobbs moved the following resolution: "That, at the present extraordinary crisis, the sum of 2000*l*. from the funds of the Society be placed in the hands of the committee, to be applied in any way they may deem essential to the interest of this Society, and that this meeting hopes that any friends of protection who may not yet have become members of this Society will now see the necessity of joining it, and that they will immediately forward their names to the secretary."—Mr. J. Low having seconded the resolution, which passed unanimously, thanks were voted to the Chairman, after which three groans were given for Sir Robert Peel.

Coventry.—A man named James Reed was brought before the Coventry magistrates last week, charged with being the murderer of Mr. Tranter, the farmer who resided in a cottage at Berkeswell, about 5 miles from this town. The man was detained at Aylesbury police-station, on Saturday week, on applying to be admitted into the union workhouse in the name of James Reed. His person in several points corresponded with the description given of the party who has absconded, but it was distinctly proved that he was not the individual, and accordingly he was immediately released from custody.

Dorchester.—The dinner of the Dorchester Agricultural Society took place on Wednesday week. John Floyer, Esq., in the chair, supported by about 80 landowners and principal yeomanry of the district. After the usual loyal toasts the Chairman proposed the health of the County Members, and said that Lord Ashley had, within the last week, become a member of this protection society, and subscribed a sovereign a year to it, which showed that he was determined, whatever doubts might have existed, to stand by the cause of protection to agriculture and native British industry. He hoped then, now the glove had been thrown down—and the question was, whether there was to be protection or no protection—that all their friends would rally, as one man, in the cause of protection to the industry of our native country.—Mr. Goadby returned thanks for the toast of the "Agricultural Protection Society of London," and said that, unless the great landlords of the county would come forward and place themselves at their head, the yeomanry must act without them. He should like, at a general election, to find a purely agricultural county, and see the renting farmers return a man of their own, who, knowing practically their state and their capabilities, would devote his time and ability to them and their interests in Parliament—he should just like to see a specimen of that kind. He knew that in many parts of the country the farmers were sick of the lords and the squires—because they thought they had sent gentlemen to Parliament to protect their interest, and found that on their getting there they talked but of little else than themselves. He then referred to the hustings speeches of candidates and their practice in Parliament, the latter being too frequently to be accounted for by the want of situations for sons, brothers, and other relatives, in the army, in the Church, and other public departments; he had been in office himself, and knew something of these secrets. It might be said, if some of the great farmers were sent to the Commons, they would be as bad as the others; he did not know as to that, but certainly they could hardly be worse. He came there to show that he had not changed his sentiments on the question of protection; in these times of such continued defection he thought it right to do so.—Mr. Symonds, of Milborne, proposed the health of the Chairman.—Mr. Floyer, in acknowledging the compliment, replied to Lord J. Russell's statement that protection was the bane of agriculture. He said that agriculture, on the contrary, was improving, and he believed their crops had increased one-third, if not one-half. Their breed of cattle had also improved, as well as the crops they lived on. Was agriculture, then, suffering under any "bane." If such improvement was a bane, long might it continue. As to the Corn-laws being the source of "bitter divisions among classes," what was his lordship's recipe for this? Why, to take away the little the agriculturists had, and give it to other parties. If the noble lord fancied this would heal their divisions he would find himself mistaken. He came now to another charge, in reference to which he would say that the poor of this country were not, in some respects, in the situation he could wish—there was much penury and poverty, and what was the cause? It was easy to attribute it to the Corn-laws, but nothing could be more unfair or unjust. He could tell the noble lord that the great cause of penury and crime was idleness—it was want of employment. This was the cause of penury and crime. But did the noble lord mean to say that the abolition of the Corn-laws would increase labour. He would hardly go that length, it might be supposed, for the result would be quite the contrary. If the Corn-laws were given up there would be much greater want of labour than at present, the result of which would, indeed, be the "cause of penury, fever, mortality, and crime among the people." They were met at a very important period of the question. The intermediate parties had fallen off, and it was come now to a distinct point, whether they were to have protection or not? Let them not be divided by any compromise, or by any idea that taxes would be removed from them, for burthens could not be taken off their shoulders at all equivalent to what they would lose. Let them now be united as one man. Let them stand together, and maintain the sound principle of their society—protection to the same amount as was now afforded to British agriculture.—Mr. John Hayne returned thanks for the Committee, and said, that as to competing with the foreign corn growers, he had been offered a consignment of 1,200 quarters of Wheat for 15*s*. a quarter, which, with the freight, insurance, and other expenses would cost 7*l*. a load! Now he would ask how the English country could compete under a system of free trade with Wheat so low as 7*l*. a load? The port at which he had been offered this consignment was Alexandria. The Leaguers said, "Let us have free trade;" "the farmers pay no more taxes than we do." But this was most erroneous. Now, he farmed 300 acres of land, and he carried on, as many of them knew, extensive trade and manufacture. The poor-rates for three years upon his land had amounted to 280*l*. 2*s*. 10*d*., but upon his manufactory to 17*l*. 6*s*. 0*d*. He asked them, with this difference of taxation, what the cause would be with the landholders, as well as farmers, if they had free trade? Why, the land would change hands. They must, then, have no compromise, they must stick to the present Corn-laws.—Mr. Pope, Mr. James Harmer, Mr. Hodges, Mr. Hoskins, Mr. Puelps, and other gentlemen, subsequently addressed the meeting, and urged the necessity of adhering to their motto "No surrender."—Towards the close of the proceedings, Mr. Gordon remarked that he thought the views of their county member, Lord Ashley, had been somewhat misunderstood. He had acted with that Noble Lord, and knew his character and feelings, and would say that it was an honour for any county to have him for a representative.

Lewes.—The annual dinner of the Sussex Agricultural Protection Society took place on Monday, and was attended by about 120 persons. The Earl of Chichester presided, supported by the Duke of Richmond, Lord Gage, John Ellman, Esq., H. Blackman, Esq., R. W. Blencowe, Esq., J. V. Shelley, Esq., and other landowners of the neighbourhood. The vice-chair was filled by Sir Henry Shiffner, Bart. The usual toasts were disposed of, and nothing of interest occurred till the Earl of Chichester vacated the chair, and with the Duke of Richmond left the room.—Mr. Jonx Ellman was called to the vacated chair, and on taking it, he said:—In the early part of the evening they were supposed to be under particular directions, and of course were not allowed to transgress in the slightest degree the rules laid down in this Society; but he felt that they were now at such a momentous crisis that he should feel himself wanting in his duty, if in a public assembly like this, he should not allude to the situation in which they were. He therefore begged leave to give, in the strongest manner that he could give, as a toast, that in the election which he had no doubt would not be deferred many weeks, perhaps not many days, "May the Sussex farmers be found true to their colours."—Mr. Hallett said the chairman was looked up to as the head of the agricultural interest in this county, and properly. He (Mr. Hallett) supposed that politics were excluded (Not at all). The chairman had called upon the agriculturists to stick to their colours. Now, he wished the Chairman to explain what those colours were, that he might know them when he saw them. Had he told them a week ago that the events which had occurred in that time would occur, they would have been justified in saying that he was a lunatic. In that time a perfect avalanche had been thrown down among them. No one could have imagined such a thing, nor could any one account for what had occurred. Now, what was the late Premier? Why, the pet of agriculturists (no, of free traders). Did not the agriculturists two or three years ago look up to Sir Robert Peel, and was not his banner the banner that they fought under, and but a few days ago Sir R. Peel was in power, and the idol of every man who was looking to agriculture for his subsistence (no, no). He begged that gentleman's pardon (hear, hear, and cheers). The chairman said the agriculturists were to stick to their colours. He wanted to know what those colours were, and where they were to find them. Did they mean to stand by Sir Robert Peel? (no). He was out, because he intended to propose free trade in corn (no no). They might say "no, no," but it was so. He believed there was groundwork for the articles which had appeared in the Times, and which had not been contradicted authentically. The ministry were out upon that subject, but perhaps the repeal of the Corn-laws was only one of a series of measures. Perhaps Sir R. Peel had intended to give the agriculturists a quid pro quo. (A voice: What's a quid pro quo?) It was value for value; but perhaps the person who inquired did not understand that. Mr. Hallett concluded by repeating his question—What were these colours the agriculturists were to stick to?—The Chairman felt much obliged to Mr. Hallett for the opportunity he had given him of thus early expressing his sentiments upon the ministerial crisis. When he proposed the toast that they should still stick to their colours, he considered those colours to be the opinions which they entertained when they placed Sir R. Peel in power, with a majority of a hundred at his back. Sir R. Peel had thought proper, if report spoke true, though he had that majority, to throw up the reins of government. He had placed them in a situation in which this country had never been placed before. What his motive was, whether it was that Lord J. Russell might form a ministry, he knew not. Some supposed that Sir R. Peel, after having given the Whigs an opportunity, hoped to come in again with renewed honours. He could only say that he (Mr. Ellman) had that day, and he now declared Sir R. Peel a renegade and a deserter of their cause. The colours that he alluded to were the colours by which Sir R. Peel obtained his majority of a hundred, when he formed his administration. These were the colours that he wished them to hoist, and if they held to those colours, he defied any one to hold the colours Sir R. Peel had now hoisted. He considered that Sir R. Peel had entirely deserted them. He (Mr. Ellman) was in town last week, and endeavoured to gain information as to the cause of the disruption of the ministry; and he found that Sir Robert Peel was not in a majority in the cabinet, but in a very considerable minority. That being the case, he himself conceived that Sir Robert Peel was prevented from doing mischief. He believed that Lord John Russell would not be able to form an administration, and he believed as sincerely that they would have an administration devoted to the agricultural interest, and, as such, favourable to the interests of the whole country, notwithstanding the League, which he believed was anything but the voice of the people; and if they stood firm to their colours, to those colours which Sir Robert hoisted in 1842, but which he had since thrown on one side, he believed they should go on and conquer.—Mr. Hallett: I beg pardon, but you have not answered my question; what are the colours we are to hoist?—The Chairman: The colours are these, that we will maintain the amount of protection at present existing to agriculture, and will not suffer an iota of that protection to be taken away.—Mr. Rigden (who had been called to the vice-chair) said, if report spoke true, there was one man to whom they were greatly indebted. He gave them the "Health of the Duke of Wellington."—The toast was drunk with three times three.—The Chairman: Since our noble friends have left, and politics are introduced, I will give you the health of one who, I understand, is only second to Sir Robert Peel in the Commons; who is superior to him in honesty, and next to him in eloquence. I will give you the health of one whose firmness enables him to stand. I beg to give you the "Health of Mr. Sidney Herbert."—Mr. Hallett: Mr Chairman, I shall again intrude myself upon your notice. Do I understand this to be a political meeting?—The Chairman should be sorry to see disunion; but there were times when it became the yeomanry of England to come forward and speak out: and knowing as he did, and as he would say without hesitation, that Mr. Sidney Herbert was looked up to as their leader in the House of Commons, in case the Conservative Ministry should come in, he begged leave to give them the health of Mr. Sidney Herbert.—Mr. Valentine remarked that the gentleman at the other end of the room was desirous of knowing what the colours of the agriculturists were, and perhaps what he (Mr. Valentine) might say might explain it. He (Mr. Valentine) was in politics a Whig; but in the case of a general election in this kingdom, he should vote against those candidates who would vote for free trade. He had made up his mind on that question, because he believed that free trade was ruin to tenant-farmers (with loud cries of "you're right"). It was a diminution of wages to the labourer, and to the tradesmen who dealt with farmers it was bills unpaid. It must be so; and with those impressions he had made up his mind, and whatever might be the results, he should at the next election inquire, not whether a man were a Whig or a Tory, but whether he were for or against free trade. With feelings of that sort, he did not know that he could do better than propose "The roast beef of Old England."—Mr. John King would propose an old-fashioned toast, which used to be drunk in olden times, and one to which the farmers always responded—"The Plough, the Loom, and the Sail." He had himself been a farmer, and he knew that farmers desired no advantage over manufacturers. It was the enemies of the country, who were endeavouring to set up one part of the community against another, and who were now going to raise a quarter of a million of money for that purpose, and who would say, "Here we are with a quarter of a million: what can you do against us?" What were they to do? Why, show a bold front; and he believed that if the yeomanry of this country did show a bold front, the protection for this country was not lost by a great deal. A great deal had been said about protection to agriculture. It had been said that this was a landlord's question, but it was not entirely a landlord's question, though the landlord would have to reduce his rents. He begged to say it was a tenant's question—a question of life and death to them. It was a question to them as to invested capital. Their capital might be destroyed, but the landlord's acres would remain. But the public press had ridiculed the farmers when they had had meetings like the present, as if when they showed one beast, which out of ten thousand had been made enormously fat, every beast was to be made the same. This protection to the British farmer was not a protection against the manufacturer, but it was a protection against the farmers of Poland, and of other countries that might bring their produce here, paying nothing for taxes, and competing with the English farmer who had to pay. All they sought was that they should impose upon the foreign farmer the same amount of tax that was imposed upon them: impose a duty equivalent to the amount of taxes that were taken from the British farmer, and they as farmers were ready to meet them. He gave them as an old-fashioned toast "The Plough, the Loom, and the Sail."—Mr. Hallett trusted the chairman would hear him in the same spirit that he had listened to him before, and give what credence to him he liked. It was all very well for gentlemen who did not understand to interrupt. He occupied 300 acres of land, so that he ought not to be considered as prejudiced on this question. Now, his impression was that the agriculturists of this country had nothing to fear from foreign countries, because in this country the energies were greater, the capital was greater, and all the appliances were in favour of this country. Now he would take free-trade in this abstract position:—Did they imagine for a moment that we could not compete with foreign countries in the produce of agriculture? Did they fancy that the farmers of this country were behind the farmers of other countries? His impression was that in this country we could produce for our own consumption as much as we required, except in scarce seasons. He asked the chairman whether he thought we could provide for our necessities.—The Chairman: Upon my word I am sorry to be discourteous but Mr Hallett's speech is such a mass of incongruities, if he will send it I shall be happy to answer it.—Mr. Hallett: It is all very well for you to say you want an end of it. Perhaps you do not like the beginning. How many millions of acres are there in this kingdom in cultivation?—The Chairman did not think that Mr. Hallett could be serious in contending that with all our taxes, with all our tithes, with all our poor-rates and with all our burthens, we could compete with the landowners of Poland, where the serfs were fed on the most miserable diet. If Mr. Hallett could possibly be serious, then he (Mr. Elliman) had no hopes in attempting to convince him to the contrary by anything he could say.—Mr. Hallett; I should be happy to go into it with you.—The Chairman believed in no country in the world were the labourers on the soil so well fed as in England, and if that was the case why should we alter that under which our labourers on whom we depended, and in which the labourers had better support than in any country in the world, why should we alter it? He saw no reason for altering it. It was acknowledged by all who had studied the question thoroughly, and not superficially, that the labourers of this country had greater benefits than any labourers in the world: and, if so, why should you alter it? He therefore pressed them to maintain their present position, don't let them make any alteration under an idea that it would do good; because by so doing they would only be destroying themselves and destroying their labourers. The meeting shortly afterwards broke up.

Maidstone.—A meeting of the West Kent Agricultural Association was held on Thursday in this town. There were present a considerable number of gentlemen connected with the agricultural interest, including Sir Edmund Filmer, Bart., M.P. for West Kent; J. D. S. Douglas, Esq., M.P. for Rochester; Hon. Colonel Stratford; Captain Marsham, R.N.; the Rev. J. Marsham, of Abingdon Castle; C. G. Whitaker, Esq.; and James Selby, Esq., of Malling. Colonel Austen, one of the members for West Kent, on being called to the chair, observed that that meeting had been assembled to take into consideration the peculiar position in which they were placed by the strange conduct of the Prime Minister of England, who had been raised to power on the belief that he would protect the interests of the agricultural population of the country, but who had deserted the principles on which he had taken office. After briefly detailing the circumstances connected with the crisis which was impending over the heads of the farmers, the chairman called on the Hon Colonel Stratford, who moved the first resolution, pledging the meeting to support no measure which should tend to reduce the protection at present afforded to agricultural produce. This resolution having been seconded by Mr. Hatch, was carried unanimously. It was then resolved, on the motion of Mr. Osborne, seconded by Mr. Knowles, a tenant farmer, that a petition founded thereon should be prepared, and presented to both Houses of Parliament. Thanks were then voted to the chairman and the county members, for their adherence to the cause of protection. After which most of the leading men present dined together.

Manchester.—The ceremony of cutting the first turf in the Manchester public parks took place in the Hendham Hall Estate, on Monday week, Mr. Malcolm Ross, one of the honorary secretaries, officiating on the occasion. The work of laying-out, levelling, &c., immediately commenced, and it is at present expected that the parks will be opened to the public early in June next.

Morpeth.—On Saturday evening, a body of policemen apprehended Ralph Joicey, a hind in the employment of the Duke of Portland, at Cockle Hall, near this town, on a charge of causing poison to be administered to his father, from the effects of which he died. The prisoner was immediately conveyed to prison. It is rumoured that he has made important disclosures affecting himself, but they have not yet been made public. The poison was procured at a shop in Morpeth about two months ago.

Oxford.—The Rev. Robert Aston Coffin, M.A., student of Christ Church, and vicar of St. Mary Magdalene Church, in this city, was received into the Roman Catholic Church, at Prior Park, last week. Mr. Coffin is the third student, and the eighth member of Christ Church, who has recently withdrawn from the Established Church.—The Rev. M. Watts Russell, Rector of Benefield, Northamptonshire, and brother of J. Watts Russell, Esq., M.P., has resigned his preferment and on Friday week was received into the Roman Catholic Church by Bishop Wareing at Northampton, with his wife and sister and several others from Elton who belonged to the congregation of the Rev. F. Faber. Bishop Wareing performed high mass on the occasion, at which Mr. Faber assisted.—The Rev. W. Marshall, M.A., was last week received into the Roman Catholic communion at Oscott. Mr. Marshall is the second person of the same name who has lately left the Establishment.—Mr. Stokes, of Cambridge University, and late secretary of the Cambridge Camden Society, was received into the Roman Catholic Church on Sunday last, at St. Chads, Birmingham, in the presence of a very large congregation. The number of recent converts to the Church of Rome now exceeds 70, of whom more than 30 are clergymen of the Establishment.

Plymouth.—The breakwater beacon is now completed, the globe, which is 6 feet in circumference, having been fixed last week on the top of the mast, a height of 27 feet above the masonry. The globe is made of wrought iron, weighs about 13 cwt., and was manufactured in London. The mast is furnished with steps, so as to enable persons in case of wreck to ascend into the globe, in which an aperture has been left for the purpose. The globe has been painted black to show itself with greater distinctness to ships at sea than it would if of any other colour. The beacon is now seen to great advantage, and forms at the eastern end of the breakwater a good contrast with the lighthouse at the western end.

Rugby.—This town and neighbourhood have for some time suffered considerable inconvenience from the non-delivery of letters and newspapers. This evil at length increased to such an extent, notwithstanding the attempts made to trace it to its origin, that recourse was had to the Postmaster-General, who sent down Mr. Peacock, solicitor to the Post-office. That gentleman accordingly arrived here last week, and having gained all the information he could, he came to the conclusion that William Garratt, a young man employed to deliver the letters in Rugby, was the guilty party, and on Saturday evidence was adduced that implicated this man in the robberies, and he was committed by the magistrates for trial. It is supposed that upwards of 300*l.* have been extracted from letters sent through the Rugby post-office since the prisoner was employed there.

Runcorn.—The local papers give some accounts of a stupendous bridge, by which the Grand Junction Extension Railway from Aston-grange to Huyton will cross the Mersey at Runcorn. The bridge, it appears, will have five wet arches of 280 feet span, 100 feet above high water mark at spring tide, and 168 dry arches of 30 feet span, and 51 feet high, making a total of 2480 yards of arching, which will be the greatest work of the kind in Europe; and at the same time be a boon to the counties of Chester, Lancaster, and Stafford, giving the required facility to the Potteries and to the fertile salt mines of Cheshire. The rising port of Runcorn promises to become a great emporium of commerce; Lord Francis Egerton is about to erect docks of great extent on the shore of the Mersey; and will also apply, at the next session of Parliament, for a trunk railway; thus affording the port a ready transit for goods, in addition to the two canals in his lordship's possession.

Windsor.—In September last a resolution was passed unanimously at a vestry meeting of the inhabitants of Windsor, to the effect that His Royal Highness Prince Albert being justly liable to pay all rates and taxes due for Flemish Farm, the collector be instructed to make application to his Royal Highness for all arrears. Mr. Darvill, solicitor, of Windsor, in accordance with instructions from the parish officers, has since been in communication with Mr. G. E. Anson on the subject of this claim. It is understood that Mr. Anson, on the part of the Prince, has consented to pay the arrears (amounting to nearly 200*l.*), and also to contribute annually a certain sum towards the relief of the poor as an equivalent for a poor's rate, but without admitting that the parish has any legal claim upon his Royal Highness for the payment of these rates. The parish officers have demurred to this proposition, under the impression, strengthened by legal opinion, that the property in the occupation of the Prince has been justly rated. The negociation will now be resumed, as the Court has returned to Windsor from the Isle of Wight. Unless the legality of the claim be admitted on behalf of his Royal Highness, the question will be again brought forward at a meeting of the inhabitants, the overseers not wishing to proceed further without the sanction and authority of the parishioners in vestry assembled. It is, however, expected that the payment of the rates will no longer be resisted.

Worcester.—The river Severn, which is subject to alternate floods and droughts, has, during the last two years, been greatly improved by dredging, and by the erection of gigantic weirs and locks. These works are now completed from Bewdley to Worcester, a distance of 17 miles, and from Worcester to Gloucester the river is being deepened by dredging and closer embankment, the Severn Act limiting the erection of weirs within the county of Worcester. By the operation of dredging, long rocky shoals have been entirely removed. The hardest rocks are first blasted under water, and, therefore, easily removed by the dredging machines. Upwards of 200,000 tons of marl, rock, gravel, and soil have already been raised from the bed of the Severn by Messrs. Grissell and Peto's dredging machine, besides what has been removed by another contractor. At Gloucester it has been necessary to remove the entire foundation of one of the piers of the old bridge, and in the course of this operation some curious coins have been discovered.

Railways.

On Tuesday a series of experimental trips took place on the Great Western, under the direction of the government commission on the gauges for the purpose of testing the tractive power, and of ascertaining the maximum speed attainable on the broad gauge, as compared with the narrow. Mr. Bidder, one of the champions of the narrow gauge, had asserted before the commission that the Birmingham engines on the narrow or 4 foot 8½ inch gauge, were capable of accomplishing as much as the engines of the Great Western, running on its great gauge of 7 feet wide. This being disputed by Mr. Brunel and Mr. Gooch, the commissioners determined on this experiment. It being impossible to run on parallel lines simultaneously, or, in other words, to make a railway race, it was resolved that trials of proportionate loads should be made on the respective lines. The route selected by the Great Western was probably on the best appointed portion of their line; namely, from Paddington to Didcot, the departure point for Oxford, a distance of 53 miles, consisting principally of surface line, but characterised by considerable curvatures. The London and Birmingham Company, it is understood, do not intend to select their own line, but some portion of the Manchester and Birmingham. The first experimental train, consisting of eight carriages, six first-class and two second, all six wheels, with 24 passengers, and weighted to a "gross load" with iron to 80 tons, exclusive of the engine and tender which may be taken at 26 tons more, and equal to a train of 342 persons, started from the first mile-post beyond Paddington, at six minutes past 10, containing Sir Frederick Smith, Professor Barlow, Sir John Burgoyne, Gen. Pasley, inspector-general; Capt. O'Brien, secretary of the Board of Trade; Mr. Watson, secretary of the gauge commission; Mr. Brunel, Mr. Gower, Mr. Sanders, Mr. Bidder, C.E.; Mr. Gooch, C.E.; Mr. Wigham Harding, C.E.; Mr. Berkley, Mr. Barlow, and several scientific gentlemen. The engine chosen was the Ixion, with machinery of immense power. It was driven by Mr. Brunel and Mr. Gooch, with Mr. Bidder and Mr. Berkley on the platform. As the engine was working itself into rapid action, a slight obstruction occurred at the junction point with the West London, which crosses the line, a transverse train being in sight. The breaks had to be applied, but the time lost was not more than half a minute ere the steam was up again, and the speed recovered. A perceptible retardation of speed was occasioned by a high wind from the north-west, which of course beat upon the broad base of the engine and the breasts of the after carriages. The speed, however, was remarkably steady. The maximum on the first down trip was 1 mile in 1 minute and 5 seconds; the maximum on the up trip, 2 miles in 2 minutes and 2 seconds, or at the rate of 52 miles in 1 hour 5 minutes and 15 seconds, with the given amount of tonnage. On arriving at Didcot, the party left the train, and corresponding weights were placed in the carriages in order to keep up the fixed tonnage. The return from Didcot was at 8 minutes past 12. At the second mile from the Paddington station the breaks were put on, and the train reached the first mile post at 9 minutes past 1 P.M., completing the 52 miles in 1 hour and 40 seconds, or at the rate of 51 miles an hour. The second trip from Paddington to Didcot, with 70 tons, was accomplished in 60 minutes, and up, with wind in its favour, in 55 minutes.—The general conjecture appears to be that the broad gauge will be confined to the west, and that Rugby will be its boundary to the north, thus restricting it entirely to the geography of the west. The narrow gauge has at present territorial dominion of 1667 miles, the broad of 278. The length of narrow gauge now constructing is 522. The length of narrow gauge obtained last session was 2386, and for broad 455. It has been calculated that the narrow gauge district embraces a population of 11½ millions, and the broad of three millions, exclusive of the metropolis. —The Brighton and Croydon Companies, it appears, have quarrelled with respect to their preliminaries of amalgamation. The Croydon proprietors have held a meeting on the subject, at which the shareholders deprecated the course of conduct pursued by the directors. The Brighton shareholders, on the contrary, have agreed to support their directors in their ultimatum to the Croydon board as proposed on the 5th November. It is generally believed that the Croydon directors will agree to the amalgamation with the Brighton line on these terms.—The London and York Company have refused the terms of absorption offered them by Mr. Hudson, on behalf of the Eastern Counties Company. The letter in which Mr. Astell, M.P., has declined the proposition dwells strongly on the fact that Parliament has already sanctioned the principle of a direct line, and that the London and York line is 10 or 15 miles shorter than the Eastern Counties Extensions scheme, and accommodates a large number of towns which the Eastern Counties would not approach.

PRICES AND TRAFFIC, by permission, from the List of Messrs. HILL, FAWCETT, & HILL, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

NAME OF RAILWAY. Those marked thus * are not yet opened.	GROSS RECEIPTS OF TRAFFIC. Week ending between Dec. 9. & Dec. 16.	GROSS RECEIPTS OF TRAFFIC. Corresponding Week. 1844.	6 Mos Dividend Per Share. † 3 Mos. £	s.	d.	Amount of Shares.	Amount paid up.	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock.
	£	£				£	£	£
Birmingham, Glo'ster		2,067	2	0	0	100	all	121-3
Bristol, Birmingham
Bristol, Exeter			1	8	0	100	70	75 80
Bristol, Glo'ster			1	0	0	50	30	51-3
Chester, Holyhead	*	*		*		50	15	12½-14
Eastern Counties	6,773	4,090	0	8	0†	avr.	14⅝	19½-20
Eastern Union						50	20
Do. Extension						25	1⅛
Edinburgh, Glasgow	2,338	1,835	1	5	0	50	all	68-70
Grand Junction			2	10	0†	100	all
Great North of England		1,526	3	0	0	100	all	202-8
Great Western	16,058	14,845	3	4	0	100	80	146-9
Gt South. & Western (I.)	*	*		*		50	15	18-20
Do. Extension	*	*		*		50	2½	14-16
Hull, Selby						50	all	99-101
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*		*		50	25	41-3
Liverpool, Manchester		4,493	4	10	0	100	all
London, Birmingham	31,412	15,168	5	0	0	s h.	100	210-18
London, Blackwall	682	606	0	3	0	avr.	16⅔	8⅛-9
London, Brighton	4,021	3,542	1	10	0	50	all	61-2
London, Croydon		927	0	8	0	avr.	18½	20-½
London, Greenwich						avr.	12½	9½-10½
London, South-Western	5,097	4,579	2	0	0	avr.	41½	72-4
Manchester, Birmingham	3,538	2,814	1	0	0	40	40	69-71
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	888	803	2	14	0	123	93
Manchester, Leeds, Hull	5,433		2	16	0	100	73	121-6
Midland	10,698	8,319	2	2	6	stk.	100	140 3
Do. Birmingham, Derby						stk.	100	130-14
Newcastle, Carlisle	1,633	1,524	2	10	0	100	all
Newcastle, Darlington	2,201	1,992	4	0	0	25	all	51-3
North British	*	*		*		25	15	21½ 2
Northern, Eastern			1	2	6	50	45	65-5
Norwich, Brandon						20	14	20 2
Preston, Wyre	379	303				50	all
Sheffield, Manchester	956	579	5 p. Cent			100	95
South Devon	*	*		*		50	20	25-7
South-Eastern, Dover	5,131	4,145	0	13	4	avr.	33⅓	35-⅓
Yarmouth, Norwich			0	10	0	20	all	21-0
York, North Midland	4,464	2,045	2	10	0	50	all	100-5
Do. Scarboro' Branch	*	*		*		25	all	49-51
Do. Selby			0	12	8	50	20	67-70
FRENCH RAILWAYS.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*		*		20	8	8 ½
Orleans, Vierzon	*	*		*		20	10	14-16
Orleans, Bordeaux	*	*		*		20	4	9½-10
Paris, Orleans	5,722	4,234	1	0	2½	20	all	44-6
Paris, Rouen	4,559	4,162	0	19	2	20	all	35-7
Rouen, Havre						20	14	16½ 7

Ireland.

Dublin.—The formal resignations of the Lord Lieutenant, and of the chief and under-secretaries, were last week forwarded to her Majesty, and those of the law officers of the Crown will immediately follow.—The visitation of Trinity College, which commenced on Thursday week, as stated in our last, was brought to a close on Friday. The assessor appointed by the two archbishops was not the Master of the Rolls, but Dr. Keatinge, Judge of the Prerogative Court. The question for the court to resolve was simply whether or not Roman Catholics are admissible to scholarships—a position in the corporate body from which they have been hitherto excluded—being deemed ineligible and barred by law. The arguments were of course directed almost exclusively to the law of the case, and at the conclusion the learned assessor, having consulted with the visitors, said that he had been requested by their graces the Lord Primate and the Archbishop of Dublin, to return thanks to the gentlemen of the bar who had addressed them, for the very able arguments they had offered for their consideration during the proceedings; and upon his own behalf he wished also to return his best thanks. Their graces desired him further to say, that when they received his (Judge Keatinge's) decision on the question of law, which was so ably argued, they would communicate with their registrar the decision to which they should arrive; and he presumed that the bar were aware that, in similar cases heard before visitors, it was not the course that the visitors should pronounce judgment, but merely to announce their decision to the parties interested. It was generally supposed in the Hall, that the final decision of the visitors would not be publicly known for a week, or perhaps a fortnight.—The Kilkenny papers announce the sudden death of the Right Rev. Dr. Kinsella, Roman Catholic Bishop of Ossory. It appears that his health had long been infirm, and on Tuesday evening he was seized with a violent attack, similar to those which he had previously experienced, from the effects of which he recovered, but expired on Friday. The Bishop's last public act was joining in the renewed protest of the Irish hierarchy against the Colleges Bill. The Protestants of Cavan, alarmed at the state of insubordination into which that county has been plunged by the rapid spread of the riband system, are desirous of reviving the Orange Confederation; and for this purpose they have appealed to the Hon. Somerset Maxwell to assume the leadership, considering that that gentleman's character, as a landlord and magistrate, "is a sufficient guarantee that the Orangemen of Cavan will be leagued together by no bigoted hatred towards their Roman Catholic brethren." A very numerous meeting of the district masters and deputy masters of lodges of the late Orange Institution in the county, was held in Cavan on the 9th inst., to take into consideration the re-organization of the Orange Institution on strictly legal principles, and the appointment of a county grand master. The Hon. Somerset Maxwell was in the chair, when it was unanimously resolved that the re-organization is indispensably necessary: but, in consequence of "the illegality attached by recent acts of Parliament to the form of the Orange institutions" it is expedient to postpone the measure for the present, "in order to afford sufficient time to every person desirous of resuming the name of Orange, to acquaint himself with the nature and system of the proposed system, as suggested by counsel."—Alderman Hearn, of Clonmel, brewer, committed suicide on Monday week, by throwing himself into a deep vat on his own premises. Railway speculation, it seems, which for some time proved fortunate, induced the deceased to embark still more extensively in this dangerous species of traffic; but the tide having turned, he became involved in inextricable difficulties, under which he completely sank, and in despair terminated his existence. —The man to whose negligence the upset of the canal-boat on the Royal Canal has been attributed, was tried last week on the charge of manslaughter, and acquitted. It was quite manifest that the charge could not be sustained.—The papers are full of fresh cases of outrages and attempted murders in different parts of the country, and which are now become so numerous that it is impossible to find room for the details. Burglaries and attacks for money upon the highway are now also added to the other features of the disturbed districts. A man named Bulby has been lodged in Enniskillen gaol, identified as the person that fired at Mr. Hack in February last, close to the spot where Captain M'Leod was shot. Mr. Barton, who was so grievously wounded by some assassins, is now declared out of all danger, and is fast recovering.—The Vice Principalship of the Northern College has been conferred upon Dr. Thomas Andrews, of Belfast. The situation was tendered to Dr. Thomson, of Glasgow, and refused. Dr. Andrews is at present Professor of Chemistry in the Medical School attached to the Belfast Institution.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association was held on Monday, Alderman O'Brien in the chair. The hall was crowded with persons anxious to hear Mr. O'Connell's views on the late change of Ministry. After handing in some remittances, Mr. O'CONNELL said he had now come to the business of the day. It is Repeal—no compromise—no postponement—no surrender. Come weal, come woe, we'll struggle for Repeal. In this sentiment he had the concurrence of Mr. Smith O'Brien, and he read a letter from him on the subject, dated from Cahermoyle, county Limerick. Yes, Repeal and no compromise should be their motto. Still he must look to the pressure of immediate circumstances. One-third of the potato crop was destroyed, and none could tell how much further the disease would go. Then fever follows scarcity. This is invariably the case. In Waterford, Limerick, Drogheda, and in his own town of Cahirciveen, fever was awfully prevalent. The agricultural labourers were on the verge of starvation. At Mullinavat (county Kilkenny), on his way to Waterford, he inquired the rate of wages of labourers, and found that it was only 1s. 6d. a week, with some miserable diet. That state of things should be changed. The present, or rather the late Government, had been humbugging the Irish people with their promises of relief, and their commissions were issued merely for the purposes of delay. Well, then, the administration was broken up. Was it by the eloquence of their opponents that that matter was achieved? No. What was it, then, that dispersed them? He (Mr. O'Connell) might be considered superstitious—but he did not care what might be thought of the declaration—he was firmly persuaded that the dispersion of the Peel administration was the act of a benevolent Providence, and he bowed his head before his Creator in thanksgiving for the blessing. Yes, he rejoiced at their dispersion; but what should he say of the incoming Ministry? He would say this, let them give the Irish people food; let them abolish the Corn-laws. On that question he would join the people of England—he would make common cause with them—he would insist, with the English people, upon cheap food—he would raise his voice for the opening of the ports, and join in the cry for the abolition of the Corn-laws. He would support the in-coming Ministry with all the zeal and earnestness in his power in that cry, and he did not care whether he should be Whig or Tory the man that fed the people should have his vote. He did not hesitate to say, without abandoning or compromising his opinions on Repeal, that he should be prepared to vote for every motion in support of Cobden and Bright, and on this question to give his steadfast adhesion to Lord John Russell, who had the manliness to proclaim his conviction that the Corn-laws were a calamity which ought not to be allowed to continue longer on the statute-book. Why should they not be for the abolition? It was said, to be sure, that the Corn-laws were good to some classes, and that they had the effect of raising the wages of the labourer. In Ireland, which is exclusively an agricultural country, I ask what has been their effect? have they raised the wages of the labourer? On the contrary, in this most agricultural country in Europe, wages are lower than anywhere else. No reason can therefore be advanced on that head; and he might mention that a nobleman of high rank had become a perfect convert on the subject, being convinced that there never could be a steady rental till the Corn-laws were abolished. What was the effect of those laws? They gave a fictitious value to land; they induced the farmer to offer for land more than it was worth; in two or three years, the capital was all sunk; the absentee landlord got more rent; the tenant pays more than he ought; the landlord squanders his resources in foreign countries, and the tenant starves at home. He asked any Irishman who now might hesitate, how he could go to any Government and ask to have money advanced for labour? How could he pledge the security of railroads if he refused to give his voice for making provisions cheap? He (Mr. O'Connell) would therefore proclaim as a decided enemy to Ireland any man who would not now rally with Cobden and Bright, triumph at the success of the League, glory at putting down the oligarchical administration of England, and rejoice at the utter defeat of the monopolists of food, who would refuse the unfortunate widow the opportunity of getting another slice of bread, and place the famishing artisan in the position of having his children crying to him for bread and not having it in his power to offer them even a stone. It was a cruel and hard-hearted thing that the man who calculated on wealth, station, and luxury for himself, makes that calculation upon the misery of others, and supports and extends these things by a perpetuation of the wretchedness of the poor. As to his supporting the administration on any other measures that would depend on the nature of the measures proposed. He could tell them what he wanted from them. He would require that they should immediately pass an act to hold the railway inquiries upon Irish railroads in Dublin and not in London. He was not in their secrets; but he knew from others that there would be no difficulty on the part of the new administration to have all the committees on Irish railways held in Dublin. That would be a gift at once of half a million to be spent in Ireland, whereas, if the late Government remained in power it would be spent in London. He had other demands on the new administration and if they conceded them, they should have the support of the Irish people. He required that the Roman Catholic magistrates should be restored to their commissions; he made that demand on the part of the dismissed Orange magistrates, as well as on behalf of his friends. It was rumoured that they proposed sending Lord [illegible] to Ireland, but he was entirely opposed to that appointment [illegible] and declared his determination to oppose, at Ireland, by declaring that no person who was friendly to a repeal of the union should be promoted to any place of emolument under the Crown. He did not think the Government would have the hardihood to send that nobleman here. It was of the utmost importance that the people should at once [illegible] and desirable end he would require the Government [illegible] to the different railway [illegible] the [illegible] of capital put as a gift but as a loan [illegible] per cent. for the first three years, and 4 per cent. [illegible] years to be guaranteed for the remainder of the [illegible]. He was aware that such an arrangement would [illegible] and he would require that Ireland should be placed on a perfect equality with England as regarded the franchise and [illegible], and that they should have a just proportion of representation. He would not take less than [illegible]. In conclusion he moved that a committee be appointed to watch over the progress of [illegible] throughout the country. Mr. Power, M.P., Mr. Grattan, M.P., and other gentlemen having addressed the meeting, the rent for the week was announced to be £[illegible] 19s. 11d.

Scotland.

Forfar.—A melancholy accident happened in this town last week, two men called Brown and Macleish having been buried alive in digging a deep well. The men were completely hemmed in, at different distances from the bottom, and were preserved from suffocation by the boxings of the well keeping off the earth from them. Previous to the accident, danger it is said was apprehended, and Macleish was in the act of ascending when the catastrophe took place, so that he was some feet higher up than his companion. The operations for their rescue were superintended by Mr. Leslie, civil engineer, Dundee, who ordered a pit to be sunk about five or six feet from the well, for the purpose of getting as far down as the lowermost man, it being quite impossible to interfere with the well from the top. During the three days which intervened a communication with the men was effected. Gas-pipes were placed so as to convey fluids to them—wine, porter, soup, and tea, were thus occasionally supplied to them, which greatly assisted to keep up their desponding spirits in a situation so horrible and hopeless. The sinking of the new well was carried on with great diligence until Friday morning, when the workmen were lower down than Brown. Having procured some boring instruments from Arbroath, and some boiler-plate boxes from Dundee, and formed a tunnel from the new bore to the old well, a brother of Brown's, who had come from Dundee, boldly dashed down, and about 4 o'clock P.M. extricated and brought him out. On being brought to the brink there was a party waiting, who instantly enveloped him in blankets and carried him into the adjoining house, where medical gentlemen were ready to attend him. He was instantly put into a warm bath, and had restoratives administered, and is now doing well. The other man could not be extricated in the same day, and the efforts of the engineer and workmen were continued without cessation until Monday, when the poor man expired. The body, however, was not extricated on Monday night.

Law.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.—[Sittings in Banco.]—The Baron de Bode v. the Queen.—This was a proceeding by way of petition of right to the Crown, in which the petitioner claimed to be entitled to a very large sum of money, which he alleged must be treated as money had and received by the Crown to his use. The case will be best understood by the following narrative of the facts. Baron de Bode was born in England in 1777. His mother was an Englishwoman, but his father was a subject of one of the lesser German states, and a Colonel of Infantry in the service of the King of France. In 1791 the father being possessed of an estate in Alsace, made a public and formal cession of it to his son, apparently with the view that the son's rights as a British subject might protect the property from the confiscation which was to be apprehended from the revolutionary violence of France. Two years after this both father and son fled from their estate and took refuge in the Austrian army, which was then in their neighbourhood. Confiscation immediately followed; part of the property was sold, and the residue remained in the possession of the French Government until after the restoration of the Bourbons in 1814. By the treaty of peace then made between England and France it was stipulated that commissioners should be appointed to examine the claims of British subjects whose estates had been unduly confiscated by the French authorities. A capital sum, producing an interest of 140,000*l.*, was set apart by the French Government for the purpose of liquidating these claims; and towards the end of 1815 the commissioners were appointed. The Baron then put in his claim for compensation, which after being rejected at first in limine on the ground that his father was a German, was eventually entertained by the commission, but in the end decided against him. This was in 1822 after a protracted struggle of five years. The Baron forthwith applied to the Privy Council, who by the mouth of Lord Stowell confirmed the award of the commissioners and gave judgment against the claim on the ground that the cession by the father to the son in 1791 was not a bonâ fide transaction, nor valid according to the principles of the civil law, and that the property, therefore, remained in the father, who was not a British subject. This decision was petitioned against, but the Privy Council rejected the petition, on the ground that they could not grant a rehearing. The Baron, however, was not satisfied; and in 1839, resolved upon a final effort, He presented a petition of right to Her Majesty, a proceeding which can only be resorted to where the Crown is alleged to have the property of a subject in its possession. He therefore charged that there was a surplus remaining from the original compensation fund, after satisfying all other claimants, which had been paid into the treasury of this country, and which he prayed might be applied to discharge his claim. Upon this petition an inquisition issued in the ordinary course, which was returned in favour of the Baron. The Attorney-General then, for the first time, such being the ordinary course of procedure, pleaded on behalf of the Crown, denying all the facts, and taking two objections purely technical, and having nothing whatever to do with the merits. These objections were,—the commencement of a new reign since the Baron's claim arose, and the Statute of Limitations. The facts thus put in issue were tried by a jury on the 24th June, 1839, who found a verdict for the Baron for 364,266*l.*, with interest from the 1st January, 1819, declaring specially that the transaction between the father and son in 1791 was valid according to the civil law, as explained to them by the foreign witnesses. But with regard to the Attorney-General's technical points, they were, of course, obliged to find for the Crown. In this state of the case the question arose, for whom the judgment should be entered? A rule had been obtained by the applicant to enter the verdict for him, notwithstanding the finding of these issues; and a cross rule had been obtained on the part of the Crown, for judgment to be entered for the Crown, on various grounds, the chief of which were that the applicant was not a British subject; that a petition of right could not be maintained, except in respect of lands, or of a specific chattel claimed by the subject from the Sovereign, and that there was no proof of money had and received by the Crown for the applicant's use. The Court took time to consider the case, and last week Lord Denman delivered the judgment of the Court. His lordship at great length entered into the details of the case, which were full of technicalities, and contained no important fact not mentioned in the above summary. His lordship said that the judgment of the Court was in favour of the Crown. The grounds for this judgment were that the Baron had not shown that his property had been unduly confiscated; the term "emigration," which the petition described as the only act of which the Baron and his father had been guilty, and for which they had lost their estate, being too undefined to be judicially recognised; that the fact of their having fled to the ranks of an invading enemy tended rather to show that the property had been duly confiscated: that the burden of proof, in this matter, rested entirely on the Baron, an English court of justice having no right to presume injustice on the part of a foreign tribunal; that, if the claim had already been investigated by the commissioners and properly rejected, there was no ground for a petition of right; and, if it had not been inquired into, the Baron had no title to receive the money, which according to the effect of the treaties and statutes was only payable after an investigation by the commissioners: and finally, that a possession by the Lords of the Treasury was not a possession by the Queen; and, therefore, the principle of a petition of right being that some personal benefit had accrued to the Crown from the possession of the matter which was the subject of the petition, no such possession or personal benefit appearing, there was no foundation for the petition. On the whole, the Court was of opinion that there was nothing to show that the money had been received by the Sovereign, nor that it had been received to the use of the suppliant. Judgment accordingly for the Crown.

Winter Assizes, Northern Circuit, York.—Manslaughter —Death of the late Mr. Boteler.—Thomas Wheatley, 25 years of age, who had been out on bail to appear to the present charge, and who had been an engine-driver upon the North Midland Railway, was indicted for the crime of manslaughter in having, on the 28th October last, at Roystone, feloniously caused the death of William Fuller Boteler, Esq., by neglecting and unskilfully driving a pilot engine, of which the prisoner then had the management. The circumstances attending the lamentable event will be in the recollection of everybody, from the great interest which was excited at the time of its occurrence. It is sufficient, therefore, to state that the evidence was very nearly in substance what was given before the coroner at the time. Mr. Justice Erle in summing up said that as to the prisoner's responsibility, the jury would have to consider these three points:—First, whether he had employed an improper degree of speed in proceeding with the pilot engine; secondly, whether he had failed to keep a due look out a-head; and, thirdly, whether, when he approached the train, he had failed to use the due means afforded to an engine-driver of stopping his engine? As to the duty of the prisoner in his calling, it was a rule of law that ordinary caution must be used by every person; and his lordship added, that he had no hesitation in saying that, in the case of the prisoner, as the driver of an engine on a railway, the utmost possible caution ought to be observed. If this were the first occasion on which the prisoner had been so employed, that could furnish no argument in his excuse, because, if a person offered or gave his services, and he proved incompetent to that which he undertook to perform, and death ensued from his incompetency, he was just as much answerable in such a case as if the same result were to arise from negligence. The jury retired for half an hour, and on their return said that they found the prisoner Not Guilty. A verdict of acquittal was then entered upon a second indictment, in which the prisoner was charged with the manslaughter of John Stubbs, the police-officer, who died in consequence of injuries received upon the same occasion. This case occupied the whole of the day, from 9 in the morning until half-past 9 at night.

Central Criminal Court.—The Westminster Murder.—Martha Browning was indicted for the wilful murder of Elizabeth Mundell, on the 1st inst. The particulars of this case were given in our last, under Metropolitan News. The evidence at the trial presented no new facts, and the jury after 20 minutes' deliberation, returned a verdict of Guilty. Mr. Justice Patteson passed sentence of death, without holding out the slightest hope of mercy.—The Murder at Nevington.—Samuel Quennell, 22, was charged with the wilful murder of Daniel Fitzgerald, by shooting him with a pistol on the 27th ult., as he was returning from work. The particulars of this case have been already fully noticed in this Paper. The evidence was brief and conclusive, and the defence attempted to be set up was insanity. Lord Chief Justice Tindal summed up, and the jury found the prisoner Guilty. The Chief Justice passed sentence of death, holding out no hope of mercy. The prisoner was perfectly cool and unmoved during the trial, and was removed to Horsemonger-lane Jail, where the sentence will be carried out. —Infanticide.—Eliza Huntsman, 21, was indicted for the wilful murder of her illegitimate child, by casting it into the water, and drowning it, on the 10th inst., at Hackney; but after a short trial was acquitted on the ground of insanity.

Police.—The Case of the Tory.—On Tuesday, Capt. George Jo'ns'one, late master of the Tory, from Hong-Kong, was again brought before Mr. Broderip, at the Thames Police-court, charged with the wilful murder of William Rambert, William Mars, and Thomas Reason, on the high seas. Since the last examination, on the 3d inst., various reports have prevailed relating to the prisoner, and a rumour obtained circulation last week that he was dead. Another report was, that he had become insane, and would not again appear at the police court. All doubts were solved by his re-appearance on Tuesday. He was, however, in a very weak state, and was lifted out of the van, and accommodated with a seat in the dock, when he resumed his old position—resting his head on the edge of the dock, and grasping it with both hands. He occasionally raised his head to listen to the more important portion of the evidence when it affected him. The voluminous evidence relating to the murders of Rambert and Mars, the first and second mates, and Reason, able seaman, has been so fully detailed that it would be needless to recapitulate it. No additional testimony was gone into relating to the deaths of the three men, and the case as far as the alleged murders were concerned, may be regarded as complete. The proceedings of Tuesday related entirely to occurrences which took place in the British Channel, and were of a most appalling nature. The witnesses (with one exception), who appeared to charge the prisoner with wounding, cutting, and maiming, exhibited scars and wounds, and the faces of several were disfigured by repeated discharges of gunpowder. The seaman described as Joseph Morris, who was conveyed on board the Dreadnought hospital ship the day the Tory arrived in the river, was examined for the first time. He is lame and disabled for life. The evidence of the wounded men in some measure implicated another person, named French, who after the death of Rambert, was appointed chief mate, and it also came out that the captain was frequently intoxicated on and after the 23d September, when the disastrous occurrences which afterwards took place commenced. After hearing evidence on these points, the prisoner was again remanded for a week.

Miscellaneous.

Loss of an Emigrant Ship.—The melancholy details of the shipwreck of the Mary, an emigrant ship of London, while on her homeward voyage from Sydney, and the dreadful fate of nearly all the female passengers, have been recently received by the Penyard-park, packet-ship, now in the London Docks. She was bark-rigged, and measured 368 tons. The Mary, which was built at Ipswich in 1811, has for some years been engaged in the conveyance of passengers and emigrants between London and New South Wales. On her departure from Sidney, in addition to her crew, she had on board 43 passengers, and a valuable cargo, comprising wool, tallow, oil, and other merchandise, with a case of bullion. The loss took place six days after leaving Sidney, on a sunken rock off Flinders Island, in Bass's Straits, between 300 and 400 miles from Sydney. So sudden was the catastrophe, which happened in the middle of the night, that seven minutes only elapsed from the period of her striking and breaking up, and seventeen women and children met with a watery grave. The chief mate had the watch at the time, and at about 11 o'clock he called Captain Newby up, saying he thought land was near. The captain, however, was unable to perceive it, and shortly afterwards saw broken water on the lea beam. There was no wind to make the ship answer her helm, she refused stays, and drove broadside on the rocks. The survivors with great difficulty succeeded in landing on the island, about 25 miles from the British settlement there. It was then found that 42 persons had been saved and 17 drowned. They remained two days without food and endured the greatest suffering ere they could be relieved by the settlement. After being on Flinders Island for eight days, they obtained conveyance to Launceston, where the news of the wreck had created the deepest sensation. The passengers, emigrants, and crew, having lost all they possessed, several gentlemen formed themselves into a committee, and in a few days succeeded in raising a sum of money for their temporary aid. Most of them, however, are completely ruined by the calamity. Those who perished were—Mrs. Heather and two daughters, Mrs. Guy, Mrs. Turnbull, Sarah Folkes, the whole of the family of Mrs. Evans (six in number), the three daughters of the commander, Captain Newby, and the Misses Augusta and Katherine Collins, daughters of Captain Collins, late of the 13th Light Dragoons. The ship and all she contained, valued at between 20,000*l.* and 30,000*l.*, were a total loss.

A Slave Steamer.—The following extract from a letter from H. M.'s steamer Penelope, dated St. Helena, Oct. 13, shows that steam machinery of American construction is now adopted by the slave-traders:—"We left on the 19th of September for the Coast, and on the 26th a sail was reported ahead, which was soon made out to be a steamer, and knowing that none of ours were there, supposed to be the French Commodore (as that was the only one we knew of), were getting ready to salute, but as we headed her we could not understand why she did not show her colours. We fired a blank gun, when we saw her hoist a Brazilian ensign, and throw a parcel overboard, and we passed papers floating. We stopped and sent the cutter to board her, and when the boat left the ship we saw another parcel of papers, with a weight attached to it, thrown over the stern, and as soon as the lieutenant boarded he hailed 'No papers, and completely fitted for the slave-trade.' She proved to be called the Cacique, from Campos, in the Brazils, and cruizing off the coast for a cargo of slaves. She had been to the mouth of the Congo, but as she could not get the whole of them she was obliged to leave, and intended to return in a few days, when there was to have been 1500 slaves ready for her, but as we pinned her we saved her the trouble. The Cacique is an American-built vessel, with a high-pressure engine on the upper deck, of 40-horse power; all the crew live on the upper deck also, so that her full length is given to the slave deck. Her crew consisted of 26 men and two stokers (Americans). We sent one lieutenant, two midshipmen, and two engineers, and 28 men to bring her to this place for condemnation; and on the morning of the 30th, at daylight, a sail was reported, which proved a brigantine, called the Lageira, with no papers, with a slave deck laid. We sent her also to this place, as they are both Vice-Admiralty Court cases."

Guano in the Islands of the Red Sea.—The following is an extract from a letter written by Captain Withers, of the Colchester, at Aden, 9th November:—"During our passage down the Red Sea we were more fortunate than in going up, as we discovered three islands with guano on. The quality is more like the South American than that from Ichaboe. The quantity, however, is small, say from 20 to 30 tons on each, and it is scattered on the summits of the islands, which are from 400 to 500 feet high, and, as the trouble of collecting would be so great, we left it. A small schooner was examining these islands. We examined from 200 to 300 islands in all."—Liverpool Albion.

General Tom Thumb.—This celebrated dwarf, who was said to have been mysteriously abducted by the agents of some lady of rank in France, has again come to light, and is now exhibiting in London for the last time. The Paris papers recently announced that the General had the honour to wait on the King and Queen of the French about three weeks since, at the palace of St. Cloud. A large party were assembled, and on the smallest of dwarfs making his appearance in a new court dress, in honour of the occasion, it was unanimously declared that he had decreased in size since his last visit, some months ago, to the Tuileries. Inspired by the presence of so illustrious an auditory, the General went through his various performances with unwonted spirit and success, and received flattering compliments from the royal family for his improvement in French, one of his songs being in that language, expressive of gratitude for his reception, and the honour conferred on him by his royal hosts. On taking leave he was literally loaded with presents from his Majesty, the Queen, the Duchess of Nemours, the Count de Paris, and other members of the royal family. M. Guizot was among the assembly, and was observed to scan this smallest specimen of mankind with a curious eye.

BIRTHS—On the 29th ult., at his residence near Florence, the lady of Morgan Thomas, Esq., of Gatehouse, in the county of Sussex, of a son—25th Sept., at Colombo, Ceylon, the lady of Selby Hutton, Esq., of a daughter—30th ult., at Stade, Hanover, the wife of George Ferdinand Dammers, Esq., of a daughter—5th inst., at 1, Clarence-square, Cheltenham, the wife of William Hill, Esq., of the Leigh, of a son—6th inst., at 10, Pittville-lawn, Cheltenham, the lady of the Rev. C. H. Bromby, of a daughter—6th inst., at the Vicarage, Wickham-market, Suffolk, the wife of the Rev. Weedon Butler, of twin daughters—8th inst., at 12, Gordon-street, Gordon-square, the lady of the Rev. Henry Hughes, of a son—8th inst., at Cheltenham, the lady of Colonel Holbrow, of a daughter—9th inst., at 26, Camden-road-villas, the wife of W. M. Wilkinson, Esq., of a son—9th inst., the wife of Mungo Park, Esq., surgeon, Old-street, of a daughter—11th inst., at Iford, Sussex, the wife of the Rev. William Edward Allfree, rector of Southease, of a daughter MARRIAGES—On the 4th inst., Robert Rodwell, Esq., son of Meadows Rodwell, Esq., of Livermere, to Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Lieutenant-Colonel Kirby, late of the Royal Artillery—4th inst., the Rev. Vaughan Thomas, of Oxford, to Catherine, third daughter of the late Lieutenant-General G. Johnstone, of Norbiton-hall, Surrey—9th inst., George Millar, son of the late George Robinson, Esq., of the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, to Jane, second daughter of James Hakes, Esq., of Duke-street, Manchester-square—9th inst., Sophia, daughter of Henry Blundell, Esq., of Hull and London, to Hans Marcher, Esq., merchant, of the former place—11th inst., the Rev. John Yarker, S.C.L., to Charlotte, daughter of the late Rev. W. Wheeler, D.D., chaplain to the Royal Military College, and rector of Saltfleetby, All Saints, Lincolnshire.

DEATHS—On the 18th Oct., at Seonie, near Kamptee, Bengal, Caroline, wife of Oliver Mauger, Esq., civil assistant-surgeon, H. E. I. C. service—23rd ult., suddenly, within a short distance of Cairo, in Egypt, whither he was proceeding to a visitation of a part of his diocese, the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of the Anglican Church in Jerusalem—17th ult., at Gwambygine, near York, Western Australia, Elizabeth, relict of the late Thomas Wittenoom, Esq., senior proctor of the Vice-Admiralty Court at the Cape of Good Hope and Malta—28th ult., at Rome, Elizabeth, second daughter of the late Sir Joseph Birch, Bart., of the Hazles, Lancashire—21st ult., at Middle Chinnock, Crewkerne, Somersetshire, Frances, wife of the Rev. Francis Plimley Voules, rector of that parish, and second daughter of John Blennerhassett, Esq., of Greenville, county of Dublin—3rd inst., at Torquay, Captain the Hon Charles Leonard Irby, R.N., aged 56—4th inst., at Colne-villa, Twickenham, Barbara, wife of Lieutenant-Colonel Durnford, late of the Grenadier Guards, and only daughter and heiress of the late Hon. William Brabazon, of Tara-house, in the county of Meath—7th inst., at Goodamoor, aged 83, Letitia Anne Treby, widow of the late Paul Treby Treby, Esq., and daughter of Sir William Trelawny, Bart., formerly Governor of the island of Jamaica—8th inst., at Colyton, Devon, Mrs. Kingdon, aged 92, mother of William Page Kingdon, Esq., late Mayor of Exeter, and mother-in-law of Thomas Wilmshurst, Esq., George-street, London, and of Captain Powell, R.N.—12th inst., at Mayfield Lodge, Staffordshire, the Hon. Henry Vernon.

WANTED A GARDENER AND BAILIFF.—A sober, steady, married Man, not under thirty years of age, who not only understands his business as a Gardener, where there is a small Hot and Greenhouse, but also the management of Land and Cattle, and would make himself generally useful. Such an one, with a good character, may hear of a comfortable and permanent situation in a small establishment. —Direct, in own hand-writing, pre-paid, to F. P., Tyndwr, Llangollen.

WANTED.—A Man acquainted with the Business of a SEED WAREHOUSE.
Apply at Hurst & M'Mullen's, 6, Leadenhall-street.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters post-paid.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 40, who has lived 12 years as Head Gardener to the late Dowager Marchioness of Northampton, and has had an extensive practice in Forcing, Laying out Grounds, and all ornamental improvements in gardening.—Direct to J. H., Bexley New-town, Kent.

AS GARDENER.—A single young Man, who thoroughly understands his business in all its branches. Can have a good character from his last situation.—Direct to A. B., 34, Riley-street, King's-road, Chelsea.

AS BAILIFF, FARM MANAGER, OR GARDENER.—An intelligent young Man, just arrived from Scotland, who has a complete knowledge of every kind of Farm Work, and of Practical Gardening; is an expert Carpenter, and understands Land Measuring, and the application of the new Chemical and other Manures; and is fully capable of Keeping the Accounts of a Farming Establishment. A seven years' character, and guarantee for his integrity, will be given by the gentleman whose service he has just left.—Direct to B. Z., care of Messrs. Smith, Elder, and Co., 65, Cornhill, London.

AS WOODMAN AND LAND-DRAINER.—A well experienced Man that can be recommended by his present employer.—Direct, S. Easton, Brockham, near Reigate, Surrey.

The Newspaper.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1845.

SCOTTISH WIDOWS' FUND AND LIFE ASSURANCE.

Capital accumulated and invested upwards of £1,590,000: Annual Revenue upwards of £235,000. The amount of capital sums insured since the commencement of the Society is upwards of £7,000,000 sterling. The next periodical investigation takes place on 31st December, 1845.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Parties are particularly reminded of the important benefits to be secured by entry before the close of this year, both as regards the advantage of a full year's standing with reference to the profits of the current year, as well as that of coming within the present period of investigation.

Forms of Proposals, and every necessary information may be obtained at the head office, 5, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh; or at any of the Society's agencies.

JOHN MACKENZIE, Manager.
WM. GEORGE, Chief Clerk.
LONDON-OFFICE, 7, PALL-MALL. HUGH M'KEAN, Agent.

ECONOMIC LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 6, NEW BRIDGE STREET, BLACKFRIARS, LONDON.
ESTABLISHED 1823.
Empowered by Act of Parliament, 3 William IV.
The Right Hon. Thomas Frankland Lewis, Chairman.
Henry Frederick Stephenson, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

The following are among the advantages offered by this Society:—

LOWER RATES of Premium than those of any other Office, which entitle the assured to participate in the profits, and considerably lower than those of any other Mutual Assurance Society.

No PROPRIETARY participate in the profits, the WHOLE being divisible among the Assured.

The first Bonus, in 1834, averaged 16*l.* per cent. on the Premiums paid.

The second Bonus, in 1839, averaged 31*l.* per cent. since the first division.

The third Bonus, in 1844, averaged 36*l.* per cent. since the second division.

Prospectuses and full particulars may be obtained on application to the Secretary, CAMPBELL JAMES DOWNER.

NUNN'S VEGETABLE OIL, 4*s.* 6*d.* per imperial gallon, gives a clear and brilliant light in every description of lamp, without smell or smoke, does not corrode the lamps, and they confidently recommend it to the public as being the most cleanly as well as the most economical oil now in use. Finest sperm oil 7*s.* 6*d.*, and solar oil 3*s.* 3*d.* per imperial gallon; best yellow soap 54*s.*, best mottled do. 60*s.*, per 112 lb.

NUNN'S VICTORIA COMPOSITE CANDLES, 10*s.*; NUNN'S Victoria Wax Candles, 11*s.* 6*d.*; also their genuine Margarine Wax Lights, 16*s.*; also their patent plaited wick Sperm Candles, 20*s.* per dozen lbs. THOMAS NUNN and SONS (34 years purveyors to the Hon. Society of Lincoln's-inn), 19, Great James-street, Bedford-row.

HORIZONTAL WATCHES, very Flat. — A. B. SAVORY & SONS, WATCHMAKERS, 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank; price, in silver cases, three and a half-guineas each; or in gold cases, six guineas each. These Watches are accurate and durable, the horizontal escapement being peculiarly suited to combine these important requisites. They are jewelled in four holes, and continue going whilst being wound. A twelvemonth's warranty given with each.

News of the Week.

ANOTHER change has taken place within the past week and Sir Robert Peel is once more Prime Minister, supported by all the members of his former Cabinet with the single exception of Lord Stanley. Lord John Russell's resignation was communicated to the Queen on Friday, on the very day that all the papers announced his acceptance of office. It is understood that this step was rendered necessary by an unforeseen difficulty—not, indeed, arising from any difference of opinion on the question of Corn-law Repeal, but from the disagreement among his colleagues respecting the individuals who were to have formed the Cabinet. The Times says that Lord John and his friends "were unanimous for an entire repeal of the Corn-laws, and though many of the party were indisposed to take office, and not very hopeful of success, all had consented, and the business of allotting the places began. For this purpose, it is said, that the species of provisional Cabinet in which the measure and the emergency had been discussed was broken up, and Lord John Russell gave separate interviews to his intended colleagues. Here, in the very first step of his administration the Premier elect broke down. Rumour relates that, beginning with Lord Grey, Lord John Russell offered him the Colonial-office. He accepted, but had the curiosity to ask who was to have the Foreign-office? The answer was Lord Palmerston—an intimation which had the immediate effect of neutralising Lord Grey's love of place and power. He most strongly objected to the appointment, and for his own part positively refused to serve with Lord Palmerston as Foreign Minister. * * * It was in vain that Lord John Russell represented the utter impossibility of passing such a man by; possibility or impossibility, Lord Grey was inexorable, and took his ground on the absolute incompatibility of himself and Lord Palmerston sitting at the same Council-table. The whole of Friday evening is said to have been spent in fruitless endeavours to move the rock. As Lord John Russell considered that he could not dispense with either of their lordships, or at least could not afford to leave them at liberty to follow their own devices in the approaching struggle, he resolved again, for the last time, to return his commission into her Majesty's hands."

On Saturday Sir Robert Peel was sent for by her Majesty, and after some hours' deliberation the right hon. baronet again undertook the duties of Prime Minister. On his return to town he was met by the members of his Cabinet, with whom he remained in deliberation to a late hour, and the result was that all his late colleagues, with the exception of Lord Stanley, agreed to resume the seals of office. On Tuesday, the Queen held a Privy Council at Windsor Castle, at which Lord Stanley delivered to her Majesty his official seals as colonial secretary, and Mr. Gladstone was appointed his successor. The other changes in the constitution of the ministry will, it is said, be very few. Lord Ellenborough is mentioned as likely to succeed the late Lord Wharncliffe as President of the Council, and Lord St. Germans is expected to succeed Lord Lowther as Postmaster-General, with a seat in the Cabinet. The policy of the Ministry in regard to the Corn-laws is at present a matter of speculation, but all doubt will soon be resolved, as it was determined at the Privy Council on Tuesday that Parliament should meet on the 22nd January for the despatch of business.

The PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE, which has been so anxiously expected, has reached town this week. Mr. Polk expresses in very decided terms "the settled conviction that the British pretensions of title could not be maintained to any portion of the Oregon territory upon any principle of public law recognised by nations." He declares that negotiation is at an end, and recommends that notice be given to Great Britain to terminate the convention now existing for the joint occupation of the disputed territory at the expiration of 12 months. In the meantime, he proposes that the laws of the United States be extended over the American settlers in Oregon as the British laws are over the British settlers there; that an Indian agency be instituted beyond the Rocky Mountains; and that a regiment of mounted riflemen be raised, to garrison posts between the settled territory of the United States and the Rocky Mountains. The doctrine of Mr. Monroe, that the North American Continent is not to be considered open to the interference or colonisation of European powers, is broadly reasserted. The Tariff of 1842 is denounced, as operating "for protection merely," and the abolition of the minimum principle, and the general adoption of ad valorem duties are recommended.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal family continue at Windsor Castle, and are quite well. Her Majesty on Tuesday held a Court and Privy Council at the Castle. At the Court, Mr. Sheriff Chaplin and Mr. Sheriff Laurie, the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, accompanied by the City Remembrancer, were presented to the Queen at an audience by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, to receive Her Majesty's commands relative to the Address of the Corporation of the city of London on the subject of the Corn-laws. Her Majesty was pleased to appoint Saturday, 3d Jan., at Windsor Castle, for the reception of the address. On Thursday, being Christmas-day, the Queen and Court attended divine service in the private chapel of the Castle. Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the royal family, will arrive at Buckingham Palace, according to present arrangement, on Tuesday, 20th Jan, two days before the meeting of Parliament, which will be opened by Her Majesty in person. Instructions to this effect have been forwarded to Buckingham Palace, in order that the extensive alterations and embellishments which have been for some time in progress may be completed by that period.—With reference to the rumour which was in circulation last week that an intention existed in the highest quarter of appointing Prince Albert to the command of the army, whenever that important post should become vacant by the resignation of the Duke of Wellington, the Times announces, on what it states to be unquestionable authority, "that no such intention ever existed on the part of Her Majesty, and that the illustrious person whose name has been so freely used has no such false ambition as to desire a post which requires for the due performance of its delicate and important duties very extensive experience in the working of our military system, and the occupation of which has been always hitherto associated in the public mind with long service and brilliant achievements in the field."

Ministerial Movements.—Lord John Russell on Saturday waited upon the Queen, and resigned the task he had accepted to form an Administration. The fact that Lord John Russell intended to wait on her Majesty to inform her of his Lordship's proposed resignation was received by the Queen on Friday evening, a messenger having been despatched to the Castle shortly after the conference at his Lordship's residence, conveying to the Queen the result of their deliberations, and the disunion which prevailed. That conference met on Friday morning, and did not break up till near three o'clock. It was attended by the Marquis of Lansdowne, Earl Grey, Earl of Clarendon, Earl of Auckland, Viscount Palmerston, Sir George Grey, the Right Hon. F. T. Baring, the Right Hon. H. Labouchere, the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay, and the Right Hon. E. Ellice. On Lord John Russell's return from Windsor, another conference was held, after which the principal leaders of the Whig party left town for their country seats. The following is said by the Times to have been the intended allocation of places in the Ministry which the sudden resistance of Lord Grey to the appointment of Lord Palmerston as Minister for Foreign Affairs brought to so premature a close:—First Lord of the Treasury, Lord John Russell; Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Lord Palmerston; Secretary for the Home Department, Sir G. Grey; Secretary for the Colonies, Lord Grey; Lord Chancellor, Lord Cottenham; Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Lord Besborough; Secretary for Ireland, Mr. Labouchere; President of the Board of Control, Sir J. C. Hobhouse; First Lord of the Admiralty, Lord Auckland; First Commissioner of the Woods and Forests, Lord Morpeth; President of the Board of Trade, Lord Clarendon; Lord Privy Seal, Lord Minto; the Times adds, that the Vice-Presidency of the Board of Trade was tendered to Mr. Cobden.—On Saturday the Queen sent for Sir Robert Peel, who went to Windsor on the same afternoon. Previous to his departure, an express was sent to the Duke of Wellington, at Strathfieldsaye, requesting the early presence of the Duke in town; a messenger was despatched to the Earl of Ripon at Roehampton; and another express was sent to Lord Granville Somerset in Norfolk. All the other members of the Cabinet were summoned to assemble at the Treasury at 9 o'clock that evening. Her Majesty, it is said, was engaged nearly three hours with the right hon. baronet, when Sir Robert again took upon himself the duties of office. Sir Robert Peel returned to town at 7, and the conference took place at 9. There were present Sir R. Peel, the Duke of Wellington, the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Earl of Aberdeen, the Earl of Ripon, the Earl of Lincoln, Lord Stanley, Sir J. Graham, Mr. Goulburn, the Earl of Haddington, and Mr. Sidney Herbert. Lord Granville Somerset was absent in the country. The meeting did not separate until 20 minutes after 12 o'clock. The Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Buccleuch, Lord Stanley, the Earl of Haddington, and the Earl of Ripon, retired shortly before 12 o'clock; but the other members remained in consultation some time longer. On Sunday the Earl of Dalhousie had a lengthened interview with Sir Robert Peel at his residence in Whitehall-gardens, and the Earl of Aberdeen, Sir James Graham, and Mr. Goulburn also visited Sir Robert Peel in the course of the afternoon. An express was sent to the Earl of St. Germans, requesting his immediate presence in town. On Monday Sir R. Peel was visited by the Earl of Aberdeen, the Earl of Lincoln, Sir J. Graham, and Mr. Gladstone. On Tuesday the Queen held a Privy Council at Windsor, which was attended by all the Ministers, except the Lord Chancellor. Lord Stanley delivered to Her Majesty his seals of office as Colonial Secretary, and the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone was, by command of the Queen, sworn as his successor. After the Council the Duke of Wellington left for Strathfieldsaye, and the other Ministers left the castle at the same time, and returned to town. Sir Robert Peel, however, remained at the Castle on a visit to Her Majesty, and returned to town on Wednesday. The Earl of Ellenborough arrived in town on the same day from Gloucestershire, and had an interview with Sir R. Peel. The Earl of St. Germans also arrived in town in the course of the day. In the afternoon Sir R. Peel left London for Drayton Manor, after having had an interview with Lord Aberdeen and Lord Dalhousie.

Parliamentary Movements.—The Gazette contains a proclamation convoking Parliament for the 22nd Jan., for the despatch of business.—By the death of Lord Wharncliffe a vacancy is created in the representation of the West Riding of Yorkshire, by the elevation of the Hon. John Stuart Wortley to the House of Lords. Lord Morpeth is mentioned as likely to become a candidate, and it is generally believed that he will be returned without opposition.—A vacancy has occurred in the representation of Buckingham, by the death of Sir John Chetwode, Bart., which took place at Bognor last week, at the age of 82.—Sir Horace Beauchamp Seymour has been elected Member for the county of Antrim without opposition.—The Irish representative prelates for 1846 are the Archbishop of Armagh, the Bishops of Tuam, Derry, and Limerick.

Death of the Earl of Belmore.—This nobleman died last week at his seat, Castlecoole, county of Fermanagh, after a fortnight's illness. He had nearly completed his 44th year. He married, in 1834, the youngest daughter of the late William Shepherd, Esq., of Bradbourne, Kent, by whom he had issue three sons and four daughters. The eldest son, Somerset Richard, Viscount Corry, born 1835, succeeds to the title. The late Lord Belmore was not a member of the House of Peers. His only brother, the Right Hon. Henry Lowry Corry, son-in-law of Lord Shaftesbury, M.P. for Tyrone, is one of the secretaries of the Admiralty.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The change of ministry in this country is still the principal topic discussed in the Paris papers; but as their speculations have lost much of their interest by reason of the more recent changes, a brief notice of the effect produced by the accession and retirement of the Whigs will be sufficient. The Débats says that, in the actual state of parties, Sir R. Peel is the only man who unites all the elements necessary for carrying on the government. La Presse contains a long and impartial view of the crisis, and of the probabilities that it suggested. The National states, though, it appears, without any foundation, that Her Majesty, at the instance of the King of the French, had expressed a desire that Lord Palmerston should have some office other than the Foreign Department. The Siècle contends that the delay in forming the English Ministry had been occasioned by the indisposition of Lord Palmerston to take office under Lord John Russell, and that it had been proposed, in consequence, that Lord Lansdowne should be First Lord of the Treasury. The Siècle further contends for a seat in the Cabinet for Mr. Cobden.—The Débats publishes a variety of despatches from the army in Africa, which, however, are little more than a repetition of what has already appeared. The Flittas began to show symptoms of submission. Marshal Bugeaud had made 15 razzias, without meeting with any serious resistance. General Cavaignac had re-entered Tlemcen, after having revictualled Sebdon, Lalla Maghrnia, and Ghazaouet. The Traras were laying down their arms. The Beni-Amers were anxious to return to their country. Colonel St. Arnaud had surprised a tribe excited to revolt by Bou-Maza, and had severely chastised it. This appears to be the purport of the despatches, which, however, are given at full length by the Paris journals.—The adjudications of the concessions of the Creil and St. Quentin Railways took place at the office of the Minister of Public Works on Saturday. The Rothschild, Hottinguer, and Laffitte Company offered to take it for 21 years, 335 days; Carrette and Minguet for 48 years, 280 days; Colbert and Co., for 36 years, 350 days; Ardouin for 49 years, 2 months, and 15 days. The Cordier Company did not bid. This offer of the Rothschild being the lowest, and within the term fixed by the minister, the Creil and St. Quentin Railway was declared to be adjudicated to the Company Rothschild. On the same day, the adjudication of the concession of the Paris and Lyons Railroad was postponed sine die; the only company bidding for it (Laffitte, Ganneron, Barillon and Baudran), having offered to take it but for 42½ years, and the Government minimum being 41¼ years. M. Laffitte in the name of the company deposited on the same evening with the Minister of Public Works a formal offer to accept the line at the maximum of concession fixed by the Minister himself. The question being an exceedingly difficult one, the Minister declined to act upon his own responsibility, but called together a Council of the Ministers to deliberate upon the subject. The Council met at the Tuileries on Sunday afternoon, and a royal ordinance was issued on Monday accepting the offer. The reason given for this is, that the ministry, for the sake of public convenience, and to prevent the losses which must result from the fact of 200,000,000 francs being tied up during the time the question is pending, were unwilling to refuse the offer.—The formal opening of the session of the French Chambers being fixed for this day, the 27th, when the King will in person deliver the Speech from the throne, all parties are speculating on the plan of the campaign, on the part both of the Ministry and the Opposition; but nothing certain is known except that the Opposition has resolved to bring forward M. Dufaure as its candidate for the Presidency, in opposition to the Government candidate, M. Sauzet.—The King and Royal Family have left the Palace at St. Cloud, and taken up their residence at the Tuileries for the winter. The Moniteur contains a royal ordinance increasing the number of the members of the "Conseil des Travaux de la Marine," in consequence of the attention which the steam fleet requires.—The Seine had risen considerably in Paris. All the provincial journals announce that the rivers had everywhere become swollen by the late heavy rains.—The Ambassador of Morocco landed at Marseilles on the 19th, and was to leave on the 21st for Paris.

Spain.—The Spanish Cortes were opened on the 15th by Queen Isabella in person, with unusual state and ceremony. The young Queen was received with loud cheers both by the people along the line of route, and by the Chambers. She read the speech in a strong, clear, and distinct tone of voice; though Her Majesty's enunciation was somewhat rapid, every sentence, every word, was distinctly heard and understood in the most distant parts of the Chamber. The speech, which was composed by M. Martinez de la Rosa, alluded to the friendly relations with Foreign Powers (not mentioning France or England), to the ratification of the treaties with Morocco and Chili, to the improving state of the navy, to the establishment of organic laws, and to various reforms in the department of public instruction, in the administration of justice, and in various other branches of Government. "At home," it says, "in the Peninsula, order and respect of the laws have been maintained, so that every attempt at treason has been defeated by the vigilance and the firmness of the authorities, as well as by the fidelity of the army, the subordination and discipline of which might serve as a model for the world; and, in fine, by the excellent spirit of the people—tired and worn out by revolt, and anxious to enjoy fully the benefit of peace, under the shade of the Throne, and under the protection of our national institutions." In regard to financial matters, the Speech says that the plan of finance of last session has been carried into effect in most of its provisions. "In the estimates, which will be immediately submitted to you for examination, you will find all the ameliorations and improvements of which they were susceptible. Time and experience will lead us to discover defects which it is indispensable to correct, which it would have been impossible in so short a space of time to have removed, and which ever accompany the establishment of a new system." Various measures are suggested for the consideration of the Chambers, among which is "a project of law with the important object of endowing, in a permanent and solid manner, public worship and the clergy." At the close of the Speech, Gen. Narvaez announced that the session was legally opened, and the Queen retired. The election of President of the Chamber of Deputies then took place, when M. Castro y Orosco, the Government candidate, was elected, by 74 votes to 58 given to M. Pacheco, the Opposition candidate. Three of the four vice-presidents belong to the Ministerial party, the fourth is M. Salamanca, a member of the Opposition.

Germany.—A letter from Osnabruck, in Hanover, of the 9th inst., says:—"Father Mathew, of Ireland, the apostle of temperance, has found an emulator in M. Marc Christian Frederick Seling, a Lutheran minister of our town. This venerable man has just returned from a tour through the province of Bildesheim, in the 50 towns of which he has received pledges from about 20,000 persons, of both sexes and all ages, to abstain entirely from drinking spirituous liquors. During the two years and a half that M. Seling has been engaged in this good work, he has procured for the different temperance societies in Germany, 82,582 members, of whom 25,141 are men, 27,770 women, and 29,741 young persons of both sexes, of from 12 to 16 years of age."—The German journals state that the Bavarian Government was negotiating with the firm of Rothschild a loan of 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 florins, for the construction of railroads.

Italy.—The Emperor of Russia left Palermo on the 5th in a steamer for Naples, accompanied by Counts Nesselrode and Orloff. His Majesty arrived at Naples on the 6th, and proceeded immediately to the king's palace, where every preparation had been made to receive him. After staying there five days, his Majesty proceeded to Rome, where he arrived on the 13th, and took up his residence at the Giustiniani Palace.—It is said that a treaty of commerce was signed at Naples on the 3d inst. between the United States and the Neapolitan Government, by which American cotton will hereafter be subject to an import duty of six ducats, in place of twenty. The wines of Naples and Sicily will be admitted into the United States on paying the same duties as the wines of other nations.—The Augsburg Gazette states that a revolutionary plot has been discovered in the Grand Duchy of Tuscany, whose object was the seduction of a whole battalion of Tuscan troops, in order to invade the Roman states. Twenty men of this battalion have fled.

India.—The Overland Mail from Bombay of the 15th Nov. has arrived this week. The point of most interest is the departure of the Governor General from Agra on the 29th October, and his quick movements (although it was given out that he was proceeding slowly), whereby he was to arrive at Delhi on the 15th of November—that is, many days prior to the time when he was expected there. The affairs in the Punjaub have not lost their interest, although no late atrocity is recorded. The situation is most extraordinary; the troops have murdered all the Prime Ministers or Wuzeers, as well as all the Kings that do not act as they please. The boy-King Dhuleep is represented as being no great favourite with them. His mother has contrived to keep the soldiers at bay since the death of her brother, Jowahir Singh, although she has had no Prime Minister; for Gholab Singh, whom the soldiers wished to promote for his wealth to that most dangerous post, and then to plunder and butcher him, as they did his brothers and his nephew, has contrived to gain his mountain fortress of Jamoo, where he has formally refused their invitation. Tej Singh, the late governor of Peshawur, has also declined the offer. The British army remains collected on the frontiers of the Punjaub, and will speedily be ready to march on Lahore, if necessary. There is nothing positive known of the fate of Peshora Singh, who was, as it now appears, aided in his late attempt to hold Attock by Dost Mahomed and the Affghans, who intended, if Peshora was successful, to seize Peshawur. Prince Waldemar of Prussia, who was at Umballa on the 4th Nov., was about to proceed to Loodiana and Ferozepore; but his return to the former place was expected, as it is said that the invasion of the Punjaub will be begun thence. In Scinde all is tranquil. Sir C. Napier was preparing to move from Kurrachee to Hyderabad on a tour, as it was said, into the province of Cutch-Bhooj; but many imagined that if an invasion of the Punjaub be required, he will lead the vanguard. His name alone at the head of the invading army would, it is said, be considered an omen of victory. His conduct as Governor of Scinde, and the quiet and happiness enjoyed by the people along the Indus under his rule, would also, it is stated, contribute very much to reconcile the inhabitants of the Punjaub to the British yoke. There has been a serious disturbance at Indore, arising from an attempt, which was happily frustrated, to assassinate the minister. A conspiracy against the British is said to have been discovered at Gwalior, but it is at present doubtful whether the presumed plot is not a fabrication, got up with the view of injuring Tara Bace and her party. The Nizam's dominions continue in an unsettled state, and it is supposed that we may now look every day for intelligence of the active interference of the British authorities to restore the country to order, and give a character of stability to the Government. In other parts of India tranquillity appears to prevail. From Burmah the news of the dethronement of Tharawaddie has been confirmed. He had become mad, and had been guilty of the most wanton acts of cruelty; he was therefore deposed, as his brother had been previously, and a regent appointed in the person of his youngest son, Shoadoonge-mendna, under two guardians. The removal from power of Tharawaddie, in whose family madness is said to be hereditary, is hailed with satisfaction by the Burmese. His Danish Majesty's frigate Galatea has arrived for the purpose of taking home the last Danish Governor of Serampoor.—From China no intelligence had reached Bombay subsequent to the 30th of September.

United States.—By the Sea, packet, which arrived at Liverpool on Monday from New York, we have the President's Message, which has been looked for with so much anxiety. The Message was delivered on the 2d inst., the day after the formal opening of Congress. The events of this first meeting of the legislature under the new administration of Mr. Polk, are scarcely less remarkable than his Message. The election of Mr. Davis the Democratic candidate, as Speaker, which was carried by a majority of two-thirds over the other four candidates, shows that the power of the West is predominant; and both Houses are said to be Democratic—the Senate by a majority of six, the Representatives by a majority of nearly two to one. Mr. Polk, therefore, has at command a powerful and energetic party in both Houses; but it is doubtful whether they are equally prepared to run all risks in carrying out his warlike and aggressive policy. The "Message" is of unusual length, but being the first delivered by Mr. Polk, it was considered necessary to explain in detail his views on the general policy of the United States. It begins with the usual congratulations on the prosperity of the country, which it describes as "standing before the world a spectacle of national happiness." It then proceeds to the affairs of Texas, declares that annexation is now an accomplished fact, and that Congress is bound by good faith to effect its full consummation without delay. The accession to the United States territory is extolled as a "bloodless achievement," effected by the voluntary consent of both countries, and as the "deliberate homage of each people to the great principles of our federative union." The "peaceful extension" of the boundary of the States to the Rio Del Norte affords an opportunity for alluding to the late intervention of France and England with the view of preventing annexation. The Message says that "in contemplating the grandeur of this event, it is not to be forgotten that the result was achieved in despite of the diplomatic interference of European monarchies." The alliance of France with England on this occasion is mentioned as a topic of unfeigned regret, and the "almost unanimous voice of the people of Texas" is said to have "given to that interference a peaceful and effective rebuke." The Message says further upon the same point—"From this example, European Governments may learn how vain diplomatic arts and intrigues must ever prove upon this continent, against that system of self-government which seems natural to our soil, and which will ever resist foreign interference." The question of Texas is closed by the expression of a belief "that a liberal and generous spirit will actuate Congress in all that concerns her interests and prosperity, and that she will never have cause to regret that she has united her 'lone star' to our glorious constellation." The relations of the United States with Mexico are discussed at great length, but nothing new is stated beyond the announcement now for the first time made that a Minister Plenipotentiary has been already sent by the President to Mexico, to resume diplomatic intercourse with that country.—The Oregon Question occupies a large space, and is of course the most interesting to English readers. After recapitulating the various negotiations which had taken place previous to his accession to power, Mr. Polk adverts to that opened by Mr. Tyler in August, 1844, at Washington, and thus states his case:—

"The British Plenipotentiary offered to divide the Oregon territory by the 49th parallel of north latitude from the Rocky Mountains to the point of its intersection with the northeasternmost branch of the Columbia river, and thence down that river to the sea, leaving the free navigation of the river to be enjoyed in common by both parties—the country south of this line to belong to the United States, and that north of it to Great Britain. At the same time he proposed in addition to yield to the United States a detached territory, north of the Columbia, extending along the Pacific and the Straits of Fuca, from Bullfinch's Harbour inclusive, to Hood's Canal, and to make free to the United States any port or ports south of latitude 49°, which they might desire, either on the mainland or on Quadra and Vancouver's Island. With the exception of the free ports, this was the same offer which had been made by the British, and rejected by the American Government in the negotiation of 1826. This proposition was properly rejected by the American Plenipotentiary on the day it was submitted. This was the only proposition of compromise offered by the British Plenipotentiary. The proposition on the part of Great Britain having been rejected, the British Plenipotentiary requested that a proposal should be made by the United States for an equitable adjustment of the question.' When I came into office, I found this to be the state of the negotiation. Though entertaining the settled conviction that the British pretensions of title could not be maintained to any portion of the Oregon territory upon any principle of public law recognized by nations, yet, in deference to what had been done by my predecessors, and especially in consideration that propositions of compromise had been thrice made by two preceding Administrations to adjust the question on the parallel of 49°, and in two of them yielding to Great Britain the free navigation of the Columbia, and that the pending negotiation had been commenced on the basis of compromise, I deemed it to be my duty not abruptly to break it off. In consideration, too, that under the conventions of 1818 and 1827, the citizens and subjects of the two Powers held a joint occupancy of the country, I was induced to make another effort to settle this long pending controversy in the spirit of moderation which had given birth to the renewed discussion. A proposition was accordingly made, which was rejected by the British Plenipotentiary, who, without submitting any other proposition, suffered the negotiation on his part to drop, expressing his trust that the United States would offer what he saw fit to call 'some further proposal for the settlement of the Oregon question more consistent with fairness and equity, and with the reasonable expectations of the British Government.' The proposition thus offered and rejected, repeated the offer of the parallel of 49° of north latitude, which had been made by two preceding Administrations, but without proposing to surrender to Great Britain, as they had done, the free navigation of the Columbia river. The right of any foreign Power to the free navigation of any of our rivers, through the heart of our country, was one which I was unwilling to concede. It also embraced a provision to make free to Great Britain any port or ports on the Cape of Quadra and Vancouver's Island, south of this parallel. Had this been a new question, coming under discussion for the first time, this proposition would not have been made. The extraordinary and wholly inadmissible demands of the British Government, and the rejection of the proposition made in deference alone to what had been done by my predecessors, and the implied obligation which their acts seemed to impose, afford satisfactory evidence that no compromise which the United States ought to accept can be effected. With this conviction, the proposition of compromise which had been made and rejected, was, by my direction, subsequently withdrawn, and our title to the whole Oregon territory asserted, and, as is believed, maintained by irrefragable facts and arguments. The civilized world will see in these proceedings a spirit of liberal concession on the part of the United States; and this Government will be relieved from all responsibility which may follow the failure to settle the controversy. All attempts at compromise having failed, it becomes the duty of Congress to consider what measures it may be proper to adopt for the security and protection of our citizens now inhabiting, or who may hereafter inhabit Oregon, and for the maintenance of our just title to that territory. In adopting measures for this purpose, care should be taken that nothing be done to violate the stipulations of the convention of 1827, which is still in force. The faith of treaties, in their letter and spirit, has ever been, and, I trust, will ever be, scrupulously observed by the United States. Under that convention, a year's notice is required to be given by either party to the other, before the joint occupancy shall terminate, and before either can rightfully assert or exercise exclusive jurisdiction over any portion of the territory. This notice it would, in my judgment, be proper to give; and I recommend that provision be made by law for giving it accordingly, and terminating in this manner the convention of the 6th of August, 1827. It will become proper for Congress to determine what legislation they can, in the mean time, adopt, without violating this convention." Mr. Polk then suggests that "the protection of our laws and our jurisdiction, civil and criminal, ought to be immediately extended over our citizens in Oregon," that amicable relations should be cultivated with the Indian tribes by means of agencies, &c., that stockades and block-house forts be erected along the usual route traversed by the Oregon emigrants, that a force of mounted riflemen be raised to guard them, and that an overland mail at least once a month be established. Mr. Polk then proceeds:—"At the end of the year's notice, should Congress think it proper to make provision for giving that notice, we shall have reached a period when the national rights in Oregon must either be abandoned or firmly maintained. That they cannot be abandoned without a sacrifice of both national honour and interest, is too clear to admit of doubt. Oregon is a part of the North American continent, to which it is confidently affirmed the title of the United States is the best now in existence. For the grounds on which that title rests, I refer you to the correspondence of the late and present Secretary of State with the British Plenipotentiary during the negotiation. The British proposition of compromise, which would make the Columbia the line south of 49 degrees, with a trifling addition of detached territory to the United States north of that river, and would leave on the British side two-thirds of the whole Oregon territory, including the free navigation of the Columbia, and all the valuable harbours on the Pacific, can never for a moment be entertained by the United States, without an abandonment of their just and clear territorial rights, their own self respect and the national honour."

The next subject which engages the President's attention is what he calls the "doctrine of the Balance of Power," which has lately, he says, been broached in some of the European states, as the best means of checking the advancement of the United States on the American continent. This doctrine of M. Guizot is vehemently denounced by Mr. Polk, who says that "The United States, sincerely desirous of preserving relations of good understanding with all nations, cannot in silence permit any European interference on the North American continent: and should any such interference be attempted, will be ready to resist it at any and all hazards." * * * "The people of this continent alone have the right to decide their own destiny," and "it is due alike to our safety and our interests, that the efficient protection of our laws should be extended over our whole territorial limits, and that it should be distinctly announced to the world as our settled policy, that no future European colony or dominion shall, with our consent, be planted or established on any part of the North American continent."

The Tariff question is the next and most important domestic topic in the Message. Mr. Polk states that the revenue of the country is in a flourishing condition; the outstanding amount of public debt being only 17,075,445 dollars, which it is proposed to liquidate at the earliest practicable period. To meet the improved state of the national finances, Mr. Polk recommends a revision and reduction of the Tariff, abolishing the minimum principle, and adopting the ad valorem principle as the "fairest and most equitable indirect tax which can be imposed." This system of ad valorem duties, Mr. Polk says, would afford ample advantages to the manufacturers, and "when once firmly established, would be permanent, and not be subject to the constant complaints, agitations, and changes which must ever occur when duties are not laid for revenue, but for the 'protection merely' of a favoured interest." After recommending the establishment of an independent or "Constitutional Treasury," which shall keep the public money without any power to make loans or discounts, or to issue a paper currency, Mr. Polk concludes his Message with an eulogium on General Jackson. Such is a brief summary of this important document, which the New York papers, without exception, consider likely to make a sensation in Europe. The New York Herald says—

"From the important developments at Washington, it is now ascertained that Mr. Polk's policy, from the moment of his inauguration to the present day, has been wise, consistent, and dignified in the highest degree. At the first start he carries immense majorities of his party with him, and breaks down all the different cliques and counter currents which were formed against him. In the senate the two great leaders of the Administration will undoubtedly be Mr. Calhoun, of South Carolina, and Mr. Benton, of Missouri. The very personal antagonism, looking to the future, which exists between these two gentlemen, will give an additional strength and tone to Mr. Polk's administration. They will be the leaders in the senate, and must follow in the wake of the President. In the house the present probability is, that Mr. Charles J. Ingersoll may be the prominent leader. But, as it is a new Congress, new spirits will start up, and great importance will be attached to the first proceedings of that body. On the whole it may be said, that Mr. Polk has rode over all the counter currents of his own party, as well as the aggregate force of his opponents, at the first start, in the course of his administration. He has placed the United States in a new and formidable position before the civilised world, and the great mass of the American people will undoubtedly support his administration with enthusiasm and energy. We shall have bustling times anon."

West Indies.—The arrival of the Forth supplies us with accounts from the West Indies to the 30th ult., from St. Thomas, Haiti, to the 25th, and Jamaica to the 23d. At the latter island the railroad had been opened with some éclat by all the authorities of the island, and no doubt existed of its becoming useful and profitable. Jamaica had been very hot and dry, but some rain had fallen to windward. Copious showers accompanied the steamer from Barbadoes to St Thomas, and the islands throughout anticipated an abundant crop. Some islands are already at work, and others preparing for the coming crop.—The subject of Reform was in strong agitation in British Guiana and Trinidad, and a very powerful but temperate petition to the Queen was in course of signature from the inhabitants of the former, praying for a representative form of Government. A similar petition had been signed by 1540 inhabitants of Trinidad. The desire for a "House of Assembly" is very general.—At Jamaica, the House of Assembly had unanimously passed two resolutions in favour of the importation of 5000 Coolies from India during the ensuing year. The first cargo of emigrants from Sierra Leone have been ordered to Port Maria, to meet the great demand for increased labour on the numerous estates in St. Mary. Mr. Knibb, Baptist minister, who has so many years been connected with the emancipation question, had died of apoplexy.—130 emigrants were brought home from Fayal by the Forth in a wretched condition; they are mostly Irish, and embarked from Liverpool for Quebec in the ship Robert Isaac, intending to proceed to Montreal, but the vessel when within a few leagues of Newfoundland was unable to make port, and the captain was obliged to run to Fayal, a distance of 800 miles, where the vessel was condemned.

South America.—Her Majesty's troop-ship Resistance, Captain Patey, arrived at Plymouth on Saturday, having left Monte Video November 1. The Resistance was bound with the 45th to the Cape of Good Hope, taking in water at Rio; but, on arriving there, she received orders to proceed to Monte Video, and land the troops. The 45th were not actively employed, but placed in barracks. Major Butler died at Rio, and Lieut. Oakley, also of the 45th, at Monte Video. General Oribe still invested that city, and skirmishing along the lines continually occurred between his troops and the forces of the Monte Videans. A great number of merchant vessels were there; but the principal trade was carried on by the Sardinians. Her Majesty's ships Vernon, Eagle, and Melampus, and the steamship Firebrand, were at Monte Video, as well as two French frigates and a steamer, an American corvette, a Sardinian corvette, a Brazilian corvette, and the Spanish frigate which took out the Minister from Madrid. The blockade by the English and French ships was continued at Buenos Ayres. Rosas held out in the expectation that the Governments of those two countries would not sanction the proceedings of their Ministers. The barbarity of Rosas remains unabated; hired assassins are employed to cut the throats of the husbands and fathers of ladies who are sitting at his table while these cruelties are perpetrated. The period for the departure of foreign ships from Buenos Ayres had been completed before the Resistance left Monte Video. It is supposed that all the merchantmen had departed within the time assigned. Sir Thomas Pasley, with despatches from the fleet, has come home by the Resistance.

City.

Money Market, Friday.—New Three-and-Quarter per Cent. 97¼ to ⅜; for the Account, 91 to ⅞; Exchequer Bills, 25*s.* to 23*s.* prem.

GAZETTE OF THE WEEK.

TUESDAY—BANKRUPTS—Thomas Winston, Cuthill-buildings, Merchant—E. and T. Rogers, Shepherd's-court, Upper Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, Builders—F. Hargent, Sherrard-street Golden square, Warehouseman—J. H. Rann, Westminster-bridge-road, Glass dealer—J. Miller, Southampton, Coachmaker—T. Brown, Connaught terrace, Edgeware-road, Bootmaker—S. C. Fay, Margate, Stationer—E. Smith, Southwell Nottingham-shire, Innkeeper—C. Hyde, Loughborough, Apothecary—W. Bueno, Atherstone, Warwickshire, Ironmonger—J. Sell, Cheltenham, Baker—G. Smith, Manchester, Bill broker—J. Chatterton, Pendleton, Lancashire, Licensed Victualler—W. Wimbush, Rotherham, Yorkshire, Common Brewer—J. Collins, Allerton and Bradford, Yorkshire, Worsted Spinner.

FRIDAY—BANKRUPTS—C. W. Toulmin, South Island-place, Clapham-road, Livery-stable-keeper—F. Dixon, Long-lane, Bermondsey, Carder—F. Robinson, Princes-street Chelsea, Cowkeeper—J. Lankshear, Seymour-row, Little Chelsea, Surgeon—G. A. Anaton, Portsea, Southampton, Victualler—C. Williamson, Great Portland-street, Marylebone, Wine merchant—E. Sparkes, Bristol, Builder—W. Wallis, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Grocer—P. Phillips, Birmingham, Steel Pen maker.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS—W. Allan, Glasgow, Oil merchant—S. Davidson, Bairdstone, Lanarkshire—D. M'Gilvray, Queen-street, Edinburgh, Tailor—D. Morrison and Co., Glasgow, Merchants.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Agricultural Protection Meetings.—The meetings of the Protection Associations throughout the country have become so numerous, and their proceedings are reported at such length, that we can only find space for a brief record of the more important in this place, reserving our usual summaries of the dinners of the Agricultural Societies for our Provincial News. On Saturday, the Berkshire Protection Association met at Reading, Mr. Mount in the chair; and after the meeting had been addressed by Mr. J. Terry, Mr. Beauchamp, Mr. Allnatt, Mr. Thoyts, Mr. Deane, Mr. Hicks, Mr. Palmer, M.P., Lord Barrington, M.P., Mr. Shackell, and other gentlemen, resolutions pledging the meeting to maintain protection, and denouncing the League, were unanimously adopted.—On Thursday the Norfolk Protection Association met at North Walsham; Mr. Postle, of Smallborough, in the chair. About 250 tenant farmers were present. The resolutions proposed by the Essex Society were approved of, but Mr. Warnes suggested that so important an avowal of deliberate opinion should be passed at an aggregate meeting of Norfolk farmers held in the open air, and attended by the county members. After some desultory conversation, it was arranged that steps should be immediately taken to summon an aggregate meeting of the landowners, tenant-farmers, and labourers of the county, to express their sentiments with respect to the maintenance of the Corn-laws, and that the county members be requested to attend.—On Thursday week the Buckingham Association met. Mr. Brickwell in the chair. Among those present who took part in the proceedings, were the Duke of Buckingham, the Marquis of Chandos, Dr. Marsham, Captain Dewes, Messrs. Humphreys, R. Paxton, S. Attwood, &c. A resolution was carried to the following effect:—"That the resignation of the cabinet being understood to have arisen from a difference of opinion on the subject of protection to agriculture, this meeting takes the earliest opportunity of recording its unanimous feeling of surprise and indignation that ministers should have forfeited the principle they have so recently advocated." Resolutions were also carried to support and maintain the duties now levied on foreign agricultural produce, and adequate protection to every branch of British industry, and call upon the agriculturists throughout the country and all others interested in their welfare, to come forward and assist in that object, and to urge members for this county and borough to support in Parliament the principle of protection.—On Monday, the Rutlandshire Association met at Oakham. Mr. Robert Smith, tenant-farmer, of Rinley-on-the-Hill, in the chair, supported by G. J. Heathcote, Esq., M.P., Colonel Lowther, M.P., S. J. O'Brien, Esq., M.P., George Finch, Esq., J. M. Wingfield, Esq., &c. The meeting was addressed by Mr. Cheetham, Mr. Finch, Mr. Heathcote, Mr. Baker, Mr. Stafford O'Brien, M.P., and other gentlemen, and resolutions were adopted calling on all the friends of protection to declare themselves, and unanimously to resist further changes; and a memorial was adopted to Her Majesty to call to her councils only such persons as will support the present amount of protection to native industry.

Free Trade Meetings.—The movement in favour of free-trade continues general in the principal towns; among them, the most important that have been reported this week, are those held at Devonport, Portsmouth, Stockton, Bridgeton, Gorbals, Maidstone, Aberdeen, Wigan, and Bradford (Wilts).

Anti Corn-law League.—On Tuesday the League held a meeting at Manchester, for the purpose of commencing the subscription recently decided on by the Council, for raising a fund of a quarter of a million sterling. Mr. R. H. Greg presided, and the meeting was attending by nearly 2000 gentlemen, including all the leading manufacturers. The Chairman opened the business of the day by reading the resolutions of the Council respecting the necessity of raising this new fund, and said that they were met in this extraordinary crisis rather for the purpose of backing the resolutions by their deeds than for discussing them in words; and as they had on former occasions cashed the cheques which the League has drawn upon them for 2000*l.*, 10,000*l.*, 50,000*l.*, and two years ago for 100,000*l.*; so now that they had thought fit to draw upon them another cheque for 250,000*l.*, relying that they would accept their draft, and that it would be paid when at maturity, they would not deny them that confidence they had shown on former occasions. Mr. Wilson, Chairman of the League, then read an abstract of the treasurer's account in connection with the 100,000*l.* fund, showing that there was a balance in hand of 12,033*l.* Alderman Neild then moved "That we, the merchants, manufacturers, traders, and others, inhabitants of Manchester and its vicinity, do hereby repeat our solemn protest against the laws which prohibit the free importation of foreign grain and provisions, believing them to be most oppressive to the great mass of the people, and destructive alike of the true interests of agriculture and commerce; and relying upon the justice of our cause, and upon the intelligence and honesty of our countrymen, we declare most emphatically our determination not to relax in our exertions until those laws be entirely abolished."—Mr. Robert Ashton, Hyde, seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.—Mr. Henry Ashton, Turton, moved "That this meeting hereby expresses its high sense of the invaluable services which the National Anti Corn-law League has rendered to the cause of Free Trade, and in order to enable the Council to make renewed and increased exertions, a subscription in aid of the great fund of 250,000*l.* be now commenced, and that a committee be appointed to canvass for subscriptions in Manchester and the surrounding districts."—Alderman Kershaw seconded the motion, which was carried with loud cheers.—The Chairman said they had now come to the end of the resolutions, and he should now expect them to back their opinions by their deeds. Two years ago, when they met in a little room adjoining that hall, there were not one-sixth of the gentlemen present he now saw; and if they raised, few as they were then, 15,000*l.*, let them now try if they could not put down six times the amount. Perhaps he ought to begin by stating what he intended to do himself. He did not wish to deter any one from giving a larger sum, but his brothers and himself having put down their names on the last occasion for 500*l.*, they would now give 1000*l.* The subscription, thus commenced, was carried on with scarcely a moment's breathing time for upwards of two hours, and the scene was one of intense excitement and unflagging interest throughout. As soon as the list amounted to 50,000*l.*, Mr Cobden addressed the meeting, and said that two years ago, when they held a meeting in the small room adjoining, and when 14,000*l.* was subscribed to the great League fund, the Times designated them, in its own graphic mode, "a great fact." Now, he believed that their subscription already amounted to upwards of 50,000*l.*, and that, he supposed, may be designated a still greater fact. They had a balance in hand, but they wished for an assurance that, however long this business might be prolonged—however obstinate the resistance that might be offered, there was a determination in the country to back the exertions of the League with adequate funds, to whatever extent of time this controversy might be carried. Only 20 per cent. would now be called for. The rest would only be called for when necessary, and the meeting was well able to judge whether it was likely this contest would be prolonged beyond another session. Mr. Bright and several other gentlemen addressed the meeting, and at the close, the chairman announced that the total amount up to that time was 59,165*l.*; but that, with other amounts, which would probably come to hand during the day, they might fairly expect that the amount would be upwards of 60,000*l.* The following were the principal subscriptions :—

Mr. Chadwick, of Eccles	£1000	Pilkington. Brothers, Blackburn - - -	£1000
Mr. Thomasson, Bolton	1000	James Buckley, John Buckley, and Nathaniel Buckley - - -	1500
Alderman Kershaw -	1000	Messrs. Mather's Family	700
Thomas Boyle and Sons	1000	A. and S. Henry and Co.	1000
Mr. John Brookes -	1000	Robert Platt - - -	1000
Robert Ashton - -	1000	A. and F. Reyner - -	1000
Wm. Bailey and Brothers	1000	J. B. Smith - - -	500
R. Lees and Sons, Dukinfield - - - -	1000	John Cheetham - -	500
Jn. Whittaker and Sons	1000	Richard Matton - -	500
Jn. Bright and Brothers	1000	Gardner and Bazley -	500
Saul and James Ashton, Polebank - - -	1000	John Ashton . - -	500
Thomas Ashton and Sons, Hyde - -	1000	Callender, Bickham, & Co.	500
James King and Son, Rochdale - - -	1000	James Heywood - -	500
Messrs. Booth, Hoyle, and Hoyle, Rochdale	1000	John Fenton, Rochdale -	500
Peter Dixon and Co., Carlisle - - -	1000	M'Connell and Co. -	500
Joseph Eccles, Millhill, near Blackburn - -	1000	J. and F. Potter - -	500
Eccles, Shorrocks, and Co., of Darwen - -	1000	H. Bannerman - -	500
H. and E. Ashworth, Turton, near Bolton -	1000	R. Cobden - - -	500
		E. Armitage and Co. -	500
		F. Steiner and Co. -	500
		A Friend - - -	500
		Samuel Fletcher & Son	500
		George Foster, Sabden -	500
		William Ross - -	500

The New Poor Law Asylums.—On Saturday at the Marylebone Vestry, Sir James Graham's answer to the representations of the deputation on the new asylums, was read. It stated that "the Secretary of State has no official power of interference with the arrangement adopted by the commissioners, nor is he rendered by the Act of Parliament responsible for their decision with reference to this subject. The responsibility rests with the poor law commissioners alone. They have acted deliberately, and on a general view of the arrangement best suited to the entire metropolis. If the parish of Marylebone have any objections of detail which they wish further to urge against particular provisions of either of the orders of the commissioners, I have ascertained that the commissioners are ready to receive them and to bestow on them the most attentive consideration. If the objection be to the entire arrangement as well in principle as in detail, the whole subject might be referred to the investigation of a parliamentary committee at the commencement of the session; and the commissioners inform me that they are prepared to justify their plan. The case of Marylebone must be taken in conjunction with the general scheme, and cannot, in justice, be considered separately." It was then resolved that in the opinion of the vestry, the constitution of the New Asylum Board (which had demanded 173*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.* as the contribution of Marylebone towards the Asylum) is illegal, and that their demand ought to be resisted. The opposition to the commissioners is now becoming very formidable, the parishes of St. James's, Westminster, and St. Luke, Chelsea, having determined to co-operate with Marylebone in resisting the introduction of the New Asylums into the Metropolis.

King's College.—The council of this college have lately determined upon founding scholarships for the several departments of this institution, with a view to the encouragement of diligence in the study of divinity, and the various branches of literature and science. Some of these scholarships are confined to the lower classes of the school, whilst others of a higher value are open to the senior students of each department.

The Slave-trading Case.—On Saturday Sir John Bayley and Mr. Clarkson attended at the Judges' Chambers in Serjeant's Inn, on the part of Messrs. Newman, Hunt, and Co., the consignees of the vessel Caroline, on board of which it was alleged by Sir George Stephen, acting for the Anti-Slavery Society, that a number of slaves had been brought to England with presents to Her Majesty from the Imaum of Muscat, and were now on board the Anne, until their own ship was repaired, when they would be conveyed back to Zanzibar as slaves. On the application of Sir G. Stephen a writ of habeas corpus had been granted to bring up the bodies of the alleged slaves, and 15 individuals were brought up in two omnibuses, in obedience to the writ, to Mr. Justice Coleridge's chambers. Mr. Lush, barrister, with Sir G. Stephen, appeared on behalf of the Anti-Slavery Society, at whose instance the proceedings had been taken. Mr. Clarkson informed his lordship of the nature of the application. He said there was not the slightest pretence for the allegation that the men on board the Anne were slaves; they were all sailors. Mr. Justice Coleridge read the writ directed to the captain of the Caroline, and held that a return should have been made, in order that it might be seen whether the men were returned as slaves or as freemen. It was eventually arranged that a return should be made that the men were free persons, and that the case should proceed. Mr. Clarkson said it was alleged that there had been a murder on board during the voyage. This charge was wholly unfounded, as he should prove to his lordship. His lordship had been induced to issue the writ of habeas corpus on two affidavits—one by Sir G. Stephen, and the other by a person named Grant, and he (Mr. Clarkson) should satisfy his lordship that there was not one word of truth in the allegations therein contained. Mr. Lush apprehended that the parties should be brought before his lordship, and that he should examine them. Mr. Justice Coleridge said he would pursue that course. Four of the Indians, and afterwards three more, were then brought in and examined by his lordship through an interpreter. The first Indian called in, being examined by Mr. Justice Coleridge, said :—Knows the difference between a slave and a freeman. Was on board the Caroline in the capacity of a sailor. Had entered into an agreement with the captain for the voyage to England and back, and is paid his wages every month. Should be at liberty, if he chose, to leave the ship on his return to the place whence the vessel sailed. Had been on board the Caroline two years. Not only was not now, but never was a slave. The second Indian examined deposed as follows :—Is not a slave. Saw plenty of slaves in the place he came from. There were no slaves in the ship. Came to England as a "freeman sailor," and is paid wages at the rate of 16 rupees per month. Had been a sailor in the same vessel before her present voyage, and with the same captain too. Is a Mussulman. Had been on board a French ship before he was engaged for the Caroline. Had been six months a slave at Muscat, between the time of leaving his former vessel and coming on board the Caroline. During that time had no master in particular, but one day worked to one master, and another day to another. The third of the party was then called, but only a few questions were put to him, and these few elicited nothing of any importance. The fourth deposed as follows :—Is a freeman. When he gets back to India will be free to go where he pleases. Could remain in England if he wished. No one had died on board the vessel on her voyage to England. No one leaped overboard from fear of punishment, nor from any other cause. All on board reached this country in safety. Mr. Justice Coleridge here desired the interpreter to tell the Indians that if they had come to this country with chains on their legs or hands they would have been instantly taken off, as no one was any longer a slave after he had touched the English soil. A little boy about nine or ten years of age was next examined, but the interpreter could get no intelligible answers to his questions. One young man named Grant, on whose testimony the proceedings had been instituted by the Anti-Slavery Society, was next called, and, on being examined, said he was a believer in God. Once professed to be a believer in Mahomet. Professed the Mussulman faith from necessity. By that he meant that he might be able to get bread. He submitted to be circumcised. Was only a Mussulman for a few days. Rode through the city of Muscat, on a white horse, on his professed conversion to the Mahometan faith. Did this for the sake of money, and obtained a large amount in contributions. The counsel for the Anti-Slavery Society not wishing to call any more witnesses, nor put any further questions to those already called, the learned judge ordered the 15 men to be all called in, when, at the suggestion of Sir G. Stephen, his lordship told them they were all free. They then retired, wishing, in broken English, and in excellent spirits, "Good bye" to his lordship and the gentlemen present. His lordship and the counsel on both sides laughed heartily at the hilarity of manner which the Indians displayed on leaving the room. The return to the writ of habeas corpus was made on Tuesday. The case lasted three hours.

The Case of the Felicidade.—The decision of the Judges in the late murder case arising out of the capture of the slave-ships Felicidade and Echo, has been followed by a protest of the Brazilian Government. It appears, from the decision of the Judges, that although by the first article of the convention of 1826 between Great Britain and Brazil, it was agreed that after the 13th March, 1830, the carrying on of the slave-trade by any subject of His Imperial Majesty should be considered as piracy, nevertheless it was further necessary, in order to make the terms of the convention binding upon Brazilian subjects, that the slave-trade should have been declared piratical by some municipal law of Brazil; and that no such law having been enacted, the first article of the convention was in fact nugatory, and of no avail against the subjects of the Emperor, not being within the dominions of Queen Victoria. The question now raised by the Brazilian Government asserts the Emperor's right to treat the whole convention of 1826, including the first article, as having expired on the 13th March in the present year, according to the provisions of the original treaty between Great Britain and Portugal, which was incorporated into that of 1826.

The Free Hospital.—About a month ago two young girls, labouring under pulmonary disease, in its last stage, came up from Windsor and applied for admission into the Royal Free Hospital in Gray's-inn-lane, which was refused them, as the beds were said to be completely occupied. They then obtained shelter in the Lion public-house, but the elder girl named Erie, aged 22, died the following morning, and the other, who was only 18 years of age, died in the Holborn Union workhouse last Friday week. The case excited general sympathy, especially as the facts have recently been made the subject of severe comment in the Times. On Tuesday Mr. Wakley held an adjourned inquest on the second girl, which was attended by the chairman, chaplain, surgeons, and secretary of the hospital, and by a barrister and attorney on their behalf. Hannah Fisher, nurse in the Holborn workhouse, deposed that deceased was brought into the workhouse on the 20th ult. suffering from weakness and cough. She had wines, broths, and other stimulants. She was sensible the whole time, and was anxious to recover. She died last Friday week. She told witness that she came from Windsor to be admitted into the Free Hospital, and that she and her deceased companion applied for admission the previous morning. They were kept in a cold room, in which there was a sink, and the floor of which was stone, for two hours before a doctor saw them, who told them that there was no room for them. As it was raining they could not go out, and were almost pushed from the gate. They asked the porter for some food, and he got them what he called broth and bread. The broth was nothing but salt and water: the porter informed them that it was against the rules to give them food. While they were standing in the porch at the hospital gate, two other women were brought in and received. They were desired to go to Bartholomew's Hospital, but were unable to do so. They had only 2*s.* 3*d.* when they left Windsor, of which they paid 2*s.* to the waggoner, and paid 3*d.* for coffee. After being refused admission to the hospital, they were humanely afforded food and shelter by the landlady of the Lion, where the other died. Dr. Marsden said that 300 men were daily relieved by the hospital, and that from Finsbury alone they had annually 20,000 patients who got relief. Coroner: If that was proved to the satisfaction of the inhabitants of Finsbury, they would willingly subscribe 20,000*l.* annually towards the hospital. Mr. White, surgeon to the workhouse, proved that deceased died of a pulmonary disease, and condemned the conduct of the medical officers of the hospital towards deceased. Mrs. Tiffen, landlady of the Lion, reiterated the evidence given by her on the inquest on the first girl, and corroborated the evidence of the last witness, adding that when they entered her house, they had "death in their eyes." Mrs. Dymes, landlady of the Calthorpe Arms, adjoining the hospital, stated that after they had left the hospital they came to her house, and that from their appearance she was convinced they were dying. She gave them food and 1*s* 6*d.* to procure a bed. Margaret Triguno, her housemaid, confirmed her testimony. William Evans, assistant relieving officer to the City of London Union, and his son, deposed that three females from the Peckham workhouse were admitted from the workhouse to the hospital on the day the two deceased persons were rejected: the latter were offered to be conveyed thence to Peckham house, of which they refused to avail themselves, stating that they had enough of workhouses, and that it was an hospital, not a workhouse they wanted. Mr. Thwaites, relieving officer of the City of London Union, said that during the year between 40,000 and 50,000 casual poor were relieved by it, and that many were sent to the Free Hospital during the year for medical and surgical assistance. The porter of the hospital, Mr. Cook, assistant surgeon, and the cook of the institution, gave evidence contradicting the statements of deceased. The Rev. Dr. Worthington, chaplain to the hospital, having been sworn, charged the coroner with unvaried hostility against the hospital, and designated him a "partial judge," when the Coroner threatened him with committal if he repeated such language, at the same ordering him to quit the room. With this order the chaplain complied. The jury after a short deliberation returned a verdict of "natural death." Dr. Marsden inquired if they censured the conduct of the officers of the hospital! The foreman replied that the majority of the jury found fault with them for having refused admission to deceased to an hospital professedly established for the benefit of the destitute and houseless. Another juror said that no blame was attributable to the officers. A third juror said that the landlady of the Calthorpe Arms was more adapted to be a surgeon than the medical gentleman of the hospital who refused them admission. The other jurors declared that they concurred in the strictures passed upon the hospital by their foreman.

French Protestant Church.—On Tuesday the ceremony of consecrating the new French Protestant Episcopal Church, in Bloomsbury-street, St. Giles's, was performed by the Bishop of London. This church was originally established by Charles II., in 1661, in the Savoy Palace, and has been reconstructed on its present site by the descendants of French Protestant refugees, the ground being granted for that purpose by the Woods and Forests.

The late Murder in Westminster.—Martha Browning, the young woman who was convicted last week of this murder, has made a full confession of her crime, and acknowledged the justice of her sentence. The execution is to take place on Monday the 15th January.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Dec. 20:—West Districts, 131; Northern, 173; Central, 165; Eastern, 209; Southern, 283; Total, 961; males, 495; females, 466. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1206; males, 616; females 590.

Provincial.

Incendiary Fires.—On Saturday night a fire broke out on the premises of Mr. Cane, a respectable farmer at Poyle, near Colnbrook, who had his homestead, barns, granary, hog-styes, and a large quantity of corn consumed about three weeks ago. Mr. Cane has since received some threatening letters, showing that both fires have been the acts of an incendiary. On the engine arriving at the spot, the chaise-house and sleeping-room over it (the only out-buildings left unscathed by the former fire) were found to be in flames, and the dwelling-house had just caught fire, but fortunately the fire was confined to the chaise-house.—On Monday week an extensive fire took place on the premises of Mr. Handyside, farmer, of Acklam, by which 11 corn and two hay-stacks were completely destroyed. This fire was the act of an incendiary, who has been committed for trial, and has confessed the crime. The reason he assigns is that Mr. Handyside, with whom he lived as servant some time ago, wronged him of 5*s.* wages.—The outbuildings of Mr. Samuel Kilborn, farmer, of Desborough, Northamptonshire, have also been set on fire by some incendiary, and a barley-rick, a pea-stack, a bean-hovel, a quantity of straw, a waggon, and several valuable agricultural implements, entirely destroyed.

Shipwrecks and loss of Life.—The severe gales from the N. W. and N. E. that have prevailed for the last week, have occasioned the most distressing casualties off all parts of the coast; and since the destructive storm that happened in the early part of 1839, a similar visitation has not been experienced. Already we regret to announce that intelligence has been received of the loss of upwards of 30 coasting vessels, with many homeward bound foreign ones, with valuable cargoes. Many lives have also been lost.

Barnstaple.—The annual dinner of the North Devon Agricultural Society took place on Friday, T. W. Harding, Esq., in the Chair, supported by Earl Fortescue, the Mayor of Barnstaple, Sir Bourchier Wrey, Bart., and a large number of the principal landowners and farmers in the district. Edward Weld, Esq., of Tawstock-court, occupied the Vice-chair. After some customary toasts, the CHAIRMAN had next to give the health of a noble individual, whose name, whether in his presence or absence, was always received with the warmest cordiality in every assembly in which he was known, the health of the "Lord Lieutenant of the county—Earl Fortescue."—Earl FORTESCUE was received with loud cheering, and after returning thanks, said that he fully concurred in what had been said of the advantages derived by this county and by other parts of the kingdom from the operation of agricultural associations. No man possessing even the superficial knowledge which he did of agriculture could be otherwise than struck with the good effects produced by such societies in the improvement of farming. Although they had still much to learn, yet no year passed over their heads without exhibiting great and palpable advances in the practical development of agricultural science. The specimens of stock which were shown in the field to-day, as well as the vegetable productions, were such as to reflect the greatest credit upon those who had raised them; and certainly no encouragement was wanting to the farmers in this part of the county to put forth their utmost exertions in keeping up the purity of their unrivalled breed of cattle, when they saw how many prizes they carried off at the recent cattle show at Smithfield. He was sorry however that the North Devon prize bullocks were not in the hands of North Devon men, and he was disappointed in looking over the awards not to meet with the name of Mr. Quartley, of Molland, in its usual place among the successful competitors. He repeated they had still much to learn in the science of agriculture. Those of them who read the newspapers, which at this time were filled with the reports of meetings of various descriptions, all of them bearing more or less upon questions of agricultural interest, could not fail to see how much of application and ingenuity appeared requisite in the present day to make up a perfect and accomplished farmer. He (Earl F.), had also been making experiments—although he could hardly say experiment, for he had acted on the experience of other persons—in the somewhat hackneyed department of draining. He began his operations at an expense of 10*l.* per acre, and from that an improved system reduced the expense to 7*l.*, and afterwards to 5*l.* per acre. But he had now, at some considerable expense certainly, built a tilery, by the aid of which he was told he should be enabled to effect pipe draining at an expense of not above 3*l.* per acre. He had not yet had time to say with confidence that he had achieved this result; but it was manifest if that which in many instances cost from 8*l.* to 9*l.*, and in the lowest that he had heard of 5*l.*, could be thoroughly done for 3*l.*, the improvement which enabled it to be performed at so cheap a rate was entitled to be considered of great advantage to agriculture, especially when they remembered to what extent the process of draining might be beneficially employed in this country. There were circumstances in the aspect of the present times which certainly held out very strong temptation to the introduction of topics on which he was afraid a considerable difference would be found to prevail in this and similar assemblies; and agreeing, as he cordially did, in the maxim that such meetings as the present were not fit occasions for political discussions, he would not attempt to intrude on them at large the views he entertained—not now for the first time, but for several years, after much thought and observation—of the impolicy of protecting duties, as they were called or considered. But it might be within the recollection of many who heard him on a former occasion, when he had the pleasure of meeting them two years ago, that he warned them not to depend for the prosperity of their agricultural operations upon the system of protecting duties. During the interval which had since elapsed, prosperous seasons and abundant harvests had, by making the Corn-laws to a great extent a dead letter, rendered superfluous for the time the advice he then ventured to give them. Now, however, circumstances were widely different. The failure in the potato crop, be it greater or less, had certainly produced a deficiency in the available supply of that article for human food; while the last harvest, whether it may have been much below an average in point of quantity or not, was unquestionably, as it respected a considerable portion of it, very far below the average quality. Under these circumstances, without making any distinct reference to the rumour which had reached them by to-day's post, and which appeared to rest on good authority, he would again emphatically renew the warning he had formerly given them, not to depend for the prosperity of agriculture upon the slippery basis of protective duties. Let them tax their ingenuity and skill to the utmost; let them avail themselves as far as possible of the advantages of the climate and soil, and do the best they could to produce the greatest possible amount of food at the smallest expense; always bearing in mind that without toil and labour, any more than without capital, skill, and ingenuity, neither farming nor any other trade or occupation could be carried on successfully. Let them depend on themselves and on their own exertions; and he had that opinion of the enterprise, industry, and energy of the British farmer, that he for one, deriving as he did his whole income from the produce of the soil, had no fear whatever for the continued prosperity of British agriculture, with which he coupled the prosperity of every other portion of the industry of the country. If all trades and callings had "a fair stage and no favour," he was under no apprehension that the withdrawal of protecting duties would operate injuriously to any department either of agriculture or commerce. He ought, perhaps, to apologise for having thus alluded to a topic which might seem rather to trench upon the rules of the Society's meetings. He had not done so, he was sure, in the spirit of political partisanship; but he thought that, with the events which were passing around them and the reports which were reaching them from day to day, it would almost appear like affectation if he had abstained on this occasion from all reference to what, after all, was of the greatest importance and interest to every one of them. He should conclude his observations by proposing the health of his worthy friend who so well filled the chair; and in doing so he could not refrain from the expression of his regret, in which he was sure no one participated more truly than the Chairman, at the unavoidable absence of the appointed President for the year, and still more at the unfortunate cause of it. In giving therefore the good health of the Chairman (Mr. Harding), he would couple with it their best wishes for the improved health of Mr. Buck.—The CHAIRMAN returned thanks. He had much pleasure in congratulating the members on the prosperous state of the Society, and on the benefits which it had been the instrument of conferring on the neighbourhood. The improvement in the stock was progressive and manifest; indeed, with regard to the breed of sheep and pigs, in which he had himself some little experience, and in which he might claim to be somewhat of a judge, he thought the advance was most striking. As to the breed of North Devon cattle, he considered it as rather indigenous to the soil, and not susceptible of any great improvement. He had been for forty years acquainted with the breed, and a close observer and great admirer of it; but while he did not wish to detract from the merits of the breeders and graziers of more modern times, he yet must say that in his boyhood he remembered to have seen cattle in every respect as fine as any he had seen since. The boast of the North Devon bullock was its beautiful symmetry, and the perfection of its breed was exemplified by its tendency to accumulate beef in the choicest and most profitable parts; and in these respects he questioned if they could meet with greater excellence than had been displayed in the specimens shown in the field to-day, although he was of opinion that he had seen equal (he would not say superior) specimens nearly half a century ago. With these observations he would conclude by giving them a toast, to whose merits they would do justice—"An honest and industrious yeomanry—our country's pride."—The CHAIRMAN said the next toast on his list was the health of the Patron of the Society; and although they had already done honour to his lordship in another capacity, they would not the less cordially drink to his health in the relation in which he stood to this Society, in whose success he had always taken a lively interest.—Earl FORTESCUE briefly acknowledged the toast.—The remainder of the proceedings were chiefly of local interest.

Blandford.—The annual dinner of the Blandford Agricultural Society was held on Saturday, Sir Edward Baker, Bart. in the chair, supported by H. C. Sturt, Esq., M.P.; George Bankes, Esq., M.P.; H. Kerr Seymour, Esq., J. J. Farquharson, Esq., Sir J. Doiley, Bart., Colonel Mitchell, Captain Moneypenny, Colonel Smith, Hon. and Rev. S. G. Osborne, Mr. Penny, the late member for Lyme Regis, with a considerable number of tenant-farmers, amounting altogether to more than 150 persons. After some customary toasts, the Hon. and Rev. S. G. OSBORNE, in returning thanks for the clergy of the diocese, said: It may be asked what had he to do with agriculture, and his reply was, that full one-half of his income depended entirely on the prices of agricultural produce. It gave him much pleasure to see such a body of agriculturists assembled, and it was well worth the attention of any one to look round that room and see the number of landowners and tenantry present, and to estimate the amount of property rented, and the interests which they represented. Only let them look to what agriculture was now, and compare it with that which it was 100 years ago, and mark the great improvements. Surely it was sufficient to induce the belief that the improvements would under all circumstances continue to progress. A lady who in olden times wrote a book, thus defined the character of a farmer—having a red face, his shoes smelled very much of cow-dung, and he never had any chilblains. He mentioned this to show the difference, and he believed that the farmers never occupied a higher position in society than they did at the present day. There was a time when the farmer required no more support than did an intelligent labourer of the present day—when the land was completely beggared out; instead of receiving proper manure it was left for the air to bring it round; but now there was a great field open for chemical research, and great had been the discoveries made. As a proof of this, he would only refer them to their own neighbourhood, which afforded ample illustration; and all that had been accomplished was done by the application of men's minds to discoveries in chemistry, and by taking a leaf out of the book of nature. They were now using every means to supply more food for our increasing population, as a measure of self-preservation. He was fully aware that, however great the crops could be produced, it was not reasonable to expect the tenant farmer to make an outlay till he could have some security for the capital expended, and, on the other hand, it was not likely that any landowner would entrust his land to any one till he had a good security. Justice must be done on both sides, so that if the tenant farmer had the privilege of improving his lands, the landowner should also have the privilege of seeing that the tenant did not impoverish it, and hence he was glad to find that the attention of Mr. Pusey was engaged in drawing an equitable agreement between landlord and tenant. Something required to be done which would increase the demand for labour. He would beg them to look at the increased amount of the poor rates, and which fell almost entirely on the tenant farmer. Having been one of the Poor-law guardians himself, he could state from authority, that to every one labourer who was employed in agriculture, there were at least three who were paid for not working. He would advise them to be prepared to answer for themselves such questions, not merely what they had paid for labour, but for every other thing. It was his earnest wish that they should prepare themselves to meet whatever may befal them. Let the burden rest where it may, he would entreat them to exert themselves to amend the position of the labourers; and as landowners he would beg them to stand between the weak man and the strong, and see justice done by both. He trusted that the day would yet come when the poor man would be well remunerated for his labour; when they may not be considered a burden, but a blessing to them; when the capital and labour of the tenant farmer may meet a good return.—The CHAIRMAN then proposed the health of the two county members, A. C. Sturt, Esq., and G. Bankes, Esq.—Mr. STURT, M.P., said that he was glad to meet them on this their anniversary, and he rejoiced to say that their Society increased in numbers, and had been well supported. Every year brought with it incidents fraught with intense interest to them, and it did not require a prophetic spirit to tell them that the forthcoming year would also be a most important year to them. When he had the honour to address them last they had to lament the unfavourable weather which prevailed to the injury of the spring crops, but that year was a good year for wheat. They then flattered themselves that a moderate price would be given for wheat—say 6*s.* 6*d.* per bushel; but it did not fetch 5*s.* 6*d.*, and now the disease in the potatoes caused alarm. He was of opinion that they were too apt to be influenced by panics, and that there was no agricultural prosperity like that produced by an abundant harvest. It may be, by and bye, that the state of the labourer will become of great interest supposing the potato crop fail, for the labourer maintained his wife and family chiefly on bread and potatoes. He then will want assistance—not curry powder, as recommended by a certain nobleman. This recommendation, no doubt, was kindly meant; but he thought that the noble duke had forgot the leg of mutton trimmings. Beef was a very good thing without mustard, but mustard was not a good thing without beef. He rejoiced to see the labourers with comfortable clothing; and coal-clubs, those excellent institutions, with the allotment system, had been productive of much good, more especially as they had been established by the clergy and the yeomanry of the country, they were indicative of good feeling and great kindness, and he, for one, should be happy to extend their operations. After some observations about the cultivation of turnips, Mr. Sturt said he had now spoken to them as a farmer, and he believed that one of the rules of their Society was not to allow political discussions; but he knew that this rule was not like the law of the Medes and Persians, which alters not. He would, therefore, before he broke this rule, ask them if he should go on [cries of "yes," and loud cheering]. If he did proceed it must be with the understanding that his observations should not have a controversial effect, but the chairman, he doubted not, would keep them all in perfect order. He begged to say, then, that he was not one who kept Sir Robert Peel in office merely for the sake of keeping him there, but he supported his principles, believing they were for the public good. He believed when Sir R. Peel was in the Opposition that when he came into power he would alter the Corn-laws, and he was one who thought that such an alteration was necessary. Well, Sir R. Peel did come into power, and he made those alterations; and when he introduced the new Corn Bill, he (Mr. Sturt) was one who thought it would effect considerable good; and he was of opinion also that the protection which that new Bill gave was sufficient to answer the purpose of the agriculturists. Next came the Tariff, and on this point he (Mr. Sturt) was of the same opinion as Mr. Miles, of Somerset. He knew that meat almost seemed a luxury, as so many did exist without it, and was only consumed by those apparently well off. If he had for one moment imagined that the labourer would have had meat placed within his reach by its introduction, he should have been the first one to say, "let them have it." He should like to see all our colonies put on the same footing as each other, for they were all our own flesh and blood. If any two or three families went to either colonies, why should they not send us their corn, and receive in return our clothing? He was for protecting British industry in every way that it required protection. The secession of Sir R. Peel from office had shaken our Corn-laws to their very foundation. In the debate in the House of Commons, in the month of June or July, from the speeches of Sir R. Peel and Sir J. Graham, it was plain that they contemplated some alteration of the Corn-laws, but really he did not imagine that the change would come so suddenly. He believed there was something like compensation intended by Sir R. Peel's proposition, but if there was any Corn-law introduced injurious to the agriculturist, he would oppose it. He had been returned to Parliament as their representative by a large majority, and it would not be his duty while such to abandon his views. The Parliament was on its last legs, and should a dissolution ensue, it would be his duty to return his trust into their hands; when it would devolve on them to return that individual who was the most able to represent them effectually, and determined to do so honestly. But if they were pleased to re-elect him, then it would be his duty to defend their interests in that way which they should be pleased to interpret them. The hon. gentleman sat down amid great cheering.—GEORGE BANKES, Esq., M.P., said his colleague had on this occasion thought himself justified in departing from the rule of their Society as laid down, and no doubt with the best of motives; however, he did not intend following him but to a short extent. He did not wish to have any line drawn between himself and his honourable colleague, for that he would leave to public discussion and public opinion. He was ready to take the same line of conduct as chalked out by the reverend gentleman who previously addressed them. He had made up his mind not to say anything that would wound the feelings of any one present. But he thought they had a right to hear something of the most interesting proceedings to them of last session—he alluded to their railway bill, but he did not mention this to arrogate to himself any merit by so doing. He forwarded their memorial to the Board of Trade, and was willing and offered to attend himself if his presence was required, but received no command to that effect. Some time after he saw in the Gazette several other lines, but not the one important to them. He then wrote to the Prime Minister on the subject, who informed him that when the report came out he would be better satisfied; but he found that the company, without consulting the interests of the county of Dorset, had made arrangements with other parties, entirely overlooking their interests. Now he thought for any public body to take this much on themselves was going a great deal too far. One of the lines proposed by this party would skirt the coast of Dorset, and the other would keep clear of them altogether. Mr. Bankes concluded by referring to the proposed law of settlement, and afterwards said, the reason he did not make a declaration as to his opinions on the Corn-laws was because he thought it was entirely unnecessary. He wished them to judge of his future conduct by the past; it was because when they elected him they asked him for no pledge, and he gave them none. This he would say, if he should change from that line of conduct which they had a right to expect from him, then he would cheerfully resign the trust which they had reposed in him.—The healths of the Committee and Secretary, and other toasts, were drunk in the course of the evening.

Bury St. Edmunds.—The annual dinner of the West Suffolk Agricultural Society took place last week, and was attended by about 72 landowners and farmers. The chair was filled by P. Bennett, jun., Esq., M.P., who was supported by H. S. Waddington, Esq., M.P., Sir T. G. Cullum, Bart., Colonel Hall, Captain Parker, &c. After the usual toasts the CHAIRMAN proposed the health of the Lord Lieutenant, and adverted to the late harvest, and the rumoured scarcity of corn. He had travelled a great deal in Suffolk lately; and had been through Essex diagonally, and much in Norfolk, and without wishing to dispute on political ground anything that had been said as to the scarcity, he would observe that he had never seen so many stacks standing, and Heaven forbid that they should be destroyed as many had lately been. He never in his life saw so many stacks standing at this time of the year, though perhaps he might have been corrected by able agriculturists present, who would say that there was not the quantity of corn in the stacks which was expected. This might be the case, but that more wheat than usual was grown, and that the barley crop was large, he really believed. He connected these remarks with the proposal of the toast of the Lord Lieutenant, because he might be looked upon as representing the whole county, and the point was one generally affecting the county. He should feel obliged by parties present either contradicting or confirming his remarks, that some conclusion might be arrived at by the public. It was necessary that some information should be given on the subject, because if a scarcity did really exist, it should be known, as it would be a great evil; but if there was not the scarcity alleged, and a report thereof had been circulated for a purpose, it would be a most fearful evil, and the sooner it was contradicted the better. He would give "The health of the Earl of Stradbroke, the Lord-Lieutenant of the County."—The Rev. Sir Thomas Cullum said that such meetings as these, so well calculated to promote the kindliest feelings, and also to encourage good husbandry, most men could attend with advantage, and especially the clergy. He would propose the toast of "The Members for the County,"—Mr. Waddington in returning thanks, said he hoped he should not be considered out of order in making one or two remarks on the comments and rumours he had lately seen in the public papers in reference to the Corn-laws. His own opinion could only be in opposition to that of the Times. It was stated in that journal that the question of the Corn-laws would be immediately brought before Parliament. He could only state his opinion (but he would remind them he was not in the Cabinet, and could have no information from any of its members, for they were on their oaths) that there would not be any alteration in the Corn-laws this year. As to what might happen, it was not possible for him to give any further opinion at the present moment, but he trusted they would always find the members of the western division, and also of the eastern division of Suffolk, support a protecting duty. He thought the farmers could not get on without protection, and as long as he had a seat in Parliament he should always feel it his duty to forward and sustain that protection. He would proceed to remark on what had been also seen in the public papers as to the famine likely to take place. From what he had noticed he would give it as his opinion that the average of the produce of the two last years was a good one; last year there was above an average, but he understood that this year, though the wheat looked well, it had not yielded in the splendid manner it did last year. He hoped the potato crop was not so bad as they were led to expect. He knew that in many counties there was much disease amongst them. But by fostering the crop he had no doubt there would be a sufficiency not only for the sustenance of the poorer classes, but also for seed for the ensuing year. In Ireland, he believed, in many counties there was a deficiency of crop, but in other counties a far greater quantity of land than usual had been planted with them, so that he hoped the deficiency would not be so great as anticipated.—Captain Bennett said that at these meetings politics were altogether proscribed, but this was a very critical moment—a more critical moment perhaps for the truly agricultural counties than any that had ever yet occurred. The agricultural community was maligned and aspersed, held up as the monopolists, and in every way calumniated. It was said that they would starve the country. He believed that there was not a man in the room of that disposition; if there was he thought he had better depart. He considered that the times were most critical. He disbelieved the possibility that the body of county members, of whom he had the honour to be one, was composed of men who would sacrifice every feeling of honour, every gentlemanly feeling that man could be possessed of (after having received the suffrages of the electors, for the express purpose of protecting agriculture) and desert them at this moment. If they did so, they would surely never dare to show their faces again to their constituents. He believed it would be the foulest blot that ever could be placed upon their characters; and the minister who was prepared to relax the proper and just protection to the farmer, would, he thought, wish the record of the transaction blotted out of the page of history, that his children might never read it. He would return his thanks for the reception they had given to the toast, and would express his desire to support their interests to the very life-blood.—The Chairman proposed "Prosperity to the West Suffolk Agricultural Association." It was highly gratifying to find that the association was prospering, and that it might still continue to do so was his sincere wish. It was the first time that he himself had had the honour of addressing them as one of the Vice-Presidents, and he wished that being in that capacity it were in his power to impart some agricultural information to them, but he hoped, as chairman of the meeting, he should be able to call on others, who would supply his deficiency in this respect. It would be of great advantage if practical gentlemen present would offer some suggestions for increasing the produce of their lands, and also for employing a greater number of labourers at good wages, and in a manner which would be remunerative to the employer. To bind together both classes, the employer and the employed, must necessarily be the great object of all; and at these meetings the poor and the rich, the peer and the peasant, did meet together. He believed the best agriculturists at that meeting would not deny that their farms, with a further outlay, might be made to produce a much greater supply, and thus they might be enabled to make this nation independent of other nations, as it ought to be in an emergency. The remainder of the proceedings were only of local interest.

Chippenham.—The annual dinner of the Chippenham Agricultural Association took place on Friday week, and was attended by about 130 gentlemen. Joseph Neeld, Esq., M.P., presided, supported by the High Sheriff, the Hon. F. P. Methuen, Mr. Long, M.P., Mr. Paulett Scrope, M.P., Mr. Sotheron, M.P., Mr. Ludlow Bruges, M.P., Mr. Heneage, M.P., Captain Boldero, M.P., and other gentlemen.—After the routine toasts, the Chairman proposed, amidst loud cheers, "The health of the Members of the Northern Division of the County."—Mr. Long said—I should be deeply wanting in feeling did I not express how deeply I feel the very handsome reception you have been pleased to give us; I have the greater pleasure in meeting you, inasmuch as for the last two years I have been prevented, by illness in my family, from being present. I am glad to find that the interest in your Society has not fallen off; but that it has increased every year. I well recollect the time when we used to compare this Society with others in the county, and to look upon it in the light of a rival to the old Wiltshire Society. But now it has not only surpassed that, but the Old Bath and West of England Society also, and it is even said to bear comparison with the Smithfield Club show. Certainly it stands unrivalled in this county. At many similar meetings to this, lately held in other counties, a variety of nostrums have been proposed to the tenant farmers; they have been recommended to double their produce by improved cultivation, by draining, &c. And I, too, recommend draining, because I am convinced, from my own experience as a practical farmer, that it will pay. But I must say I would rather advise you to look to remunerating prices. I would not induce the farmer to lay out his money unless he could expect an adequate return, but with the prices of the present day he cannot afford to do it. Another point very much insisted upon is the granting of leases. I confess, as far as I am myself concerned as a landlord, that I shall be happy to give a lease to any tenant who may ask me. Only two cases have occurred in which the request has been made; these happened five years ago, but the tenants have never yet asked to have their leases signed. In the present day I cannot recommend any tenant to ask for a lease, for it is impossible he can tell what may happen. You have been good enough to drink my health as one of the representatives of the county. I would not be guilty of so bad taste as to allude to anything of a political character, I would always desire to avoid doing so. But circumstances may excuse my making a brief allusion to the future, I am resolved always to stick by you and the agricultural interest, and to act as I have hitherto done.—Mr. Sotheron said, for many years past I have attended the anniversary of this Society; occasionally I have seen it rather thinly attended, but never better supported than to-day. May I not take this as a proof that you are all resolved to stand by that agriculture which it is the object of this Society to improve and support? I could not but cordially agree with Mr. Bowly (whom I have occasionally had the pleasure of meeting at Cirencester, where our common object was the establishment of the college) when he spoke of confidence between landlord and tenant as the main point to be depended upon. It is not fine speeches, or bold declarations, or strong writing that can conciliate public confidence; but conduct and practice. Never was there a time when confidence arising from a knowledge and approval of character and conduct ought more to be looked to than the present. We have gone through troublous times, and in the course of nature we shall again have to encounter them, and it is to that confidence among ourselves that we must look to carry us through. The course I have taken in public affairs—and it is now some 15 or 16 years since I first had the honour of a seat in Parliament—has ever been guided by principle, and principle will still continue to guide me. The part I have taken with regard to agriculture I will still pursue; my part is taken with those who will still give protection to the cultivators of the English soil. I am sure you will all pardon me for saying these few words, considering circumstances which have recently occurred. I am not going to touch on politics. Our chief concern here is with agriculture, but, if we are not to tell each other at such meetings that our sentiments with regard to it are unchanged, I hardly know for what purpose they are held. Having said thus much I have, I think, gone as far as the license of these meetings permits; beyond I will not go. If we desire to keep our native country to that high state of prosperity to which she has attained, if we desire that she should continue to improve,—we must each of us, in our several spheres, contribute, as far as we can, to the moral and physical improvement of mankind. I trust that no dissensions will arise amongst us, that we shall all hold fast to the principles we have professed, and whatever shall be the result of present and future changes, agriculture can never cease to be the mainstay of the country.—After the health of Mr. Ludlow Bruges and Mr. Heneage had been drank, the Chairman proposed that of Mr. Paulett Scrope.—Mr. Scrope was received with loud cheers. He said, it gives me the greatest pleasure to be here, and to see the unanimity and kind feeling which have prevailed. Some expressions of public sentiments, indeed, there may have been with which I may not agree; but you may not wish me to speak on this subject. (Cries of "Go on, go on") I have no pledges to give, nor will I say that I shall always act in my public capacity as I have before acted, but this I will say, that I will consider the best interests of the public at large. It is not the interests of agriculture, or of manufactures, or of any other class, but the welfare of all that has hitherto guided and will continne to guide my conduct. Of those gentlemen who have spoken I may best agree with the hon. member for Devizes, who thinks it best to say nothing at all (a laugh). I did not say this to create a laugh; it is far too serious a subject to laugh about. Solemn times are now coming upon us; and I do think, considering circumstances which have recently happened, that until we know the result and the pressure they are likely to produce upon the country, it would be the part of a wise and prudent man to abstain from pledging himself to any particular line of conduct. I will only allude to one expression which fell from the honourable member who represents the northern division of this county. Mr. Long said he recommended you not to look so much to draining, &c., as to prices. Now my advice to you is precisely the reverse of this. I recommend you not to look to Act of Parliament prices, but by all the means in your power improve your farms, with a view to your becoming independent of legislative enactments, and to rest entirely on your own exertions (great interruption, with loud and frequent cries of "No, no," intermingled with a few of "hear, hear"). The force of events has even now diminished the amount of "protection" so called; that portion which remains is slipping from under you, and I think it is but the part of a good friend to recommend you to look to increasing your produce by improved cultivation, rather than to a slippery dependence on Acts of Parliament. (Great interruption; cries of "No, no," "Go on," "Order.") Perhaps I have trespassed too far on a subject probably distasteful to many of you, but I should not have touched on it at all had not those gentlemen who preceded me done so. (Cries of "Go on, go on.") No, I will not go on, for although some may agree with me, others differ from me, and I will not throw the bone of contention among you. My only desire is to show you that there is another side of the question, and that a man may feel a strong interest in agriculture, and yet not look to Act of Parliament prices for protection.—Mr. Long rose to explain, and was received with a storm of applause. He said I beg to set my hon. friend right on one point, as he does not seem quite to understand what I intend to convey; at all events I did not mean to put the case in the way which he did. I only said that people were recommending various plans of improvement, &c., in preference to protection; but that I could not recommend the farmer to lay out 500*l.* unless I could feel sure of remunerating prices in return. In other words, I would not wish him to give a new shilling for an old one. I now beg to propose a toast, which I know you will all be but too happy to drink—"The Members for Chippenham," for which Mr. Neeld and Capt. Boldero returned thanks, both declaring their intention to abide by their previous votes in favour of protection.

Dagenham.—During the last two weeks some excitement has prevailed in the western division of Essex, in consequence of a rumour having been very extensively circulated that a respectable tradesman, named Thomas Dunsdon, a potato salesman, residing at Chadwell Heath, had murdered his wife by cutting her throat. The wife died as long since as the 30th October, from the effects of a wound in her throat. A coroner's inquest was held before the county coroner, and a verdict returned that deceased had committed the act whilst labouring under temporary insanity. A few days after the inquest was held, a report was spread by some of the witnesses who were examined before the coroner, that the act was not done by the deceased, but that the husband had cut her throat, and that they were prevented from giving such evidence before the coroner as would have fixed Dunsdon with the commission of the crime of murder. This report reaching the ears of the husband, he threatened to take legal proceedings against the originator of the scandal, a person named Banham. On the 10th inst. an information was made before Mr. Massiter, one of the county magistrates, on the oaths of George Banham and Rachael Summons. The magistrates at once issued a summons against Dunsdon for his attendance before him the following day. After hearing the evidence of George Banham and other witnesses, the accused was remanded to the Ilford sessions, bail being taken for his appearance. On Saturday the accused appeared before the magistrates at Ilford, when the whole of the case with regard to the prosecution was gone into. The evidence was very contradictory. A woman, who acted as servant to the accused, said that on the morning of the 20th October she heard a scream from the room, and on hastening there she met the prisoner on the stairs with a bloody razor in his hand; and on going into the room, his wife was lying on her back in the bed with her throat cut, and she died in a few minutes. Her evidence was confirmed by that of Mr. Banham, who deposed to having heard the prisoner express a wish that his wife was dead, and said they had often quarrelled. Other witnesses said the accused expressed great sorrow at his wife's death, and the surgeon said she had been long ill of a nervous complaint, and that her mind had been so much affected that he had cautioned the attendants about her, as she was likely to commit suicide. The magistrates, who refused to hear evidence for the defence, committed the accused, but agreed to accept bail for his appearance at the next sessions, to consist of two sureties to the amount of 500*l.* each.

Kingsbridge.—The annual dinner of the South Devon Agricultural Society was held last week, and was attended by about 150 persons. The chairman was Stanley Cary, Esq., of Follaton;—supported by Lord Seymour, M.P., Lord Courtenay, M.P., Sir R. W. Newman, Bart., Sir J. B. Y. Buller, M.P., R. Durrant, Esq., of Sharpham, Henry Cartwright, Esq., H. Belfield, Esq., R. P. Hulme, Esq., C. Michelmore, Esq., H. Champernowne, Esq., C. H. Mallock, Esq., W. Roope Ilbert, Esq., Zachary Mudge, Esq., and other landowners of the district, with a considerable number of farmers.—Sir John Buller proposed "The Health of the Chairman," as a gentleman living in unity with his neighbours, doing his best to promote good fellowship, and deserving their respect and love. —The Chairman after returning thanks, said: By the aid of the agricultural reading rooms; by the new publications, and the intelligence and lights they diffuse; by well digested lectures, and the discussions which have arisen upon them, we have had a tolerable glimpse at the unexplored, the unrealised riches of the British soil; and surely the man would be bold who would now assign a limit to the various aspects of these. Already, in reference to the surface of the soil, have we reached a point in practice, which renders its mere natural and primal condition as comparatively of inferior import; but so far has science outrun practice, that assuredly not the fifth portion of its power—and that but indifferently—is at present put to task. But, gentlemen, I should impress on you that this association is established not solely with a view to the farming interests, but with a view to the whole community. The improvement of our stock and the cultivation of our soil is a national subject; not to be treated as it is sometimes treated, as if carried on for the benefit of the landlord; the prosperity of every class of persons depends upon the improvement of our stock, and the extended cultivation of our soil. But, gentlemen, how is this to be best effected? Skill, dexterity, reading, aye, even study—do not smile—are a part of the ingredients. But where is the great ingredient, money? If the soil could speak, it would say, "I want capital to be outlayed on me—I am ready to render cent. per cent., aye, infinitely more, but I must be wooed liberally, and handsomely won." I know there are many landlords, and good ones too, who are willing to make liberal allowances for that purpose; but there are others, who though equally willing, are not quite able to do it. I know also that there is no law at present strictly applicable to the remuneration of the tenant, and to his entire indemnification when he makes a general outlay, by which even the fee-simple of his landlord's estate is increased. Gentlemen, it will be a reproach to any legislature in these improving times, if this deficiency in our laws is not promptly rectified. See with what zeal and ability Lord Devon has sought to remedy this evil in the Irish commission; that point alone, were there no other, would alone secure to them the gratitude of a nation. Gentlemen, never shall we arrive at a just and true knowledge of the ultimate powers of the rich soil of South Devon, until there is a legal and generous protection for the tenant for every outlay of capital, labour, and skill he shall have employed. Gentlemen, I am not afraid of being misunderstood: mark, I lay an emphasis on the word, I am not afraid of being misunderstood, when I state in this intelligent assembly that the most important, because the most effectual means of improvement, will be effected by encouraging in a most liberal way the occupying tenant. I repeat liberal, to invest a part of his capital, his labour, and his skill, in the land. But this capital can only be called forth into practical utility by giving to the tenant security—undeniable security—that for its expenditure and outlay he shall not be removed from his lands on which he has expended it, without a fair and just compensation for all the improvements which he has effected. Gentlemen, this fairly carried out, prosperity will soon be the reward and the boon of this association; and now, gentlemen, permit me to congratulate you that there has not been a word, a thought, a look that has had even a glimpse of politics or party in it here to day.—W. J. Clarke, Esq., was received with hearty applause on rising to give "Prosperity to the Association." He did not advocate high and exorbitant prices, but he claimed for every branch of productive industry a fair remuneration. It was absurd to suppose the farmer should make any outlay to raise a structure on a bed of sand. He did not wish to check the laudable spirit of commercial enterprise, nor to clog the manufacturing wheel, but to warn them against the cherished theories of the day, which were dangerous rocks, that would make shipwreck of the agricultural interest. He doubted the fears which a noble lord had expressed at a late agricultural meeting in the north, that the agriculturists could expect no assistance from the Legislature—that they must apply their energies to supply food for the increasing population, and "consider nothing done while aught remained to do." This seemed plausible and convincing, till tested by everyday experience; but the agriculturists required remunerating prices, and to be relieved from the burdens which bear on the landed interest. These should be the objects of every agricultural society; and he hoped to see the day when they should all be of one mind about it.—Sir R. W. Newman briefly proposed the health of the donors of the premiums. He said it was unnecessary for him to expatiate on the merits of his Grace of Somerset. It was well known what a steady supporter he had always been of the interests of agriculture. Mr. Durant, their neighbour, had also shown an excellent example.—Lord Seymour returned thanks on behalf of his father. He expressed the pleasure he always felt at witnessing the improvement of agriculture, and noticing, as a good sign, the disposition of the practical farmers to try the theories of chemists and geologists, and other men of science, who, if they tried to farm on their own account without practical skill, would probably soon ruin themselves. He believed agriculture was in its infancy, and that no one had any notion of the results possible. He referred to a case of the growth of turnips on a bare flinty down for two successive years, which he had seen, to his surprise, on the estate of Mr. Huxtable, in Dorsetshire; this was the result of his applying practically what he had learned from science. He anticipated great benefits from these societies; he hoped to see this country rise to that pre-eminence which her wealth, intelligence, and population deserve, and to see profitable employment found for all their labourers. —R. Durant, Esq., proposed, "The Committee of Management."—Mr. Locock, of Maridon, rose according to the arrangement, to return thanks, but before he could open his mouth, he was interrupted by loud calls for "Mr. Cornish," and for "Mr. Kivell." Some one came behind that gentleman, and, tapping him on the shoulder, said, "You get up and propose the county members, we'll back you up;" and there seemed to be a very strong party ready to back Mr. Kivell. He rose accordingly, amid much cheering and opposition, and commenced speaking. Mr. Locock, who directly faced him, spoke energetically also, amid loud calls for order, and appeals to the Chairman.—Mr. Locock went on, and having the loudest voice, was best heard; he returned thanks on behalf of working committees; he said certainly he would not have come to Kingsbridge had he known that the Kingsbridge people would have refused to hear him speak; and at length, after some general observations on the business of the committee, he sat down. The tumult was about to be renewed, when The Chairman rose suddenly and said, Gentlemen, after this pleasant day, in which there should be no interruption, it is high time for us to prevent a squall, and I wish you all a good afternoon.—With these words, and without the delay of an instant, the party at the head of the table started hastily from their seats, the Chairman, Lord Courtenay, Sir John Buller, and the other gentlemen, making rapidly for the door, and, before the Chairman had reached the threshold, a storm of hisses and cries of disapprobation was poured from the body of the room, and redoubled when Sir John Buller brought up the rear; as he went out the most dismal hooting followed him, and "three groans for the county members" were called for and given before they got down stairs. The meeting now seemed to be breaking up, a great many persons having quitted the room, when a cry was raised that they should all stay; Mr. Clarke was taken hold of and brought up the room into the chair, and those who remained were compelled to sit down, in numbers about 60 or 70.—Mr. Clarke then said that he had taken the chair at the request of the meeting; but they were not to enter into the subject of his predecessor's (Mr. Carey) conduct in that position, nor could he allow any political subject to be broached, because that was contrary to the rules of both societies.—Mr. Kivell: The South Devon meeting has left for the evening: now we are a distinct meeting. We are now in a position to speak of the county members as we find them; and I should like to ask Sir John Buller and Lord Courtenay what they will do in reference to Lord John Russell's measures? Do they approve the sentiments of Lord John Russell's letter?—Mr. Ford.—We came here to advance the vital interests of agriculture, and we ought to discuss any question connected with it. We wished to hear the opinions of the members as to our present position and their parliamentary conduct for the future; but as to their past conduct that had better be omitted.—Mr. S. Cornish, of Stancombe: We are a few friends sitting down to talk of this matter, which is entirely in our hands; let us discuss it.—Mr. Clarke: Then I will preside, if you make no reflection on the past conduct of the members.—Mr. Cornish: The sooner those members give us their views on this question the better. The sooner they explain to us their views, and tell us what side they will take on this great question, the better for them and for us; we have a right to call on them to come forward at the first public opportunity to let us know whether they are still to be our members. All other meetings talk of their own interest, and what concerns them most—why should not the agriculturists? The Chairman says it is contrary to rules. I say it is necessary, in great and unexpected changes like this, to break through those rules.—Mr. Kivell: Concurring with my hon. friend, I think it is competent to the meeting to say what our members ought to do, and what, if they will not do, we will not support them. Here we sink all minor differences—we are neither Whig, Tory, nor Radical, but united for our dearest interests. I told Sir J. Buller just now, and prepared him for what was coming. I was then promised we should have a patient hearing. They said they would not at all interfere with us, if we did not say anything against the county members. But I wished to ask him and Lord Courtenay, in the present state of affairs, how they meant to act—whether the intention of Lord John Russell was to repeal the Corn-laws; and, if so, whether they would go along with him, or fight for agricultural protection. I have a right to demand a categorical answer, and, humble as I am, if they will not give that answer, I will not vote for them. I shall move, sir, that this meeting do form into a general meeting of agriculturists, for taking into consideration our present position as to the Corn-laws, and that the chairman summon a meeting in this room for that purpose.—Mr. Pitts, of South Allerton, seconded the motion. Carried unanimously.—Mr. Bickford moved that the chairman be instructed to write to the county members, and appoint a day—to say it was desired for many reasons to ascertain their opinion on the state of agriculture and the present crisis.—Mr. John Square seconded the motion.—Mr. Clarke put the resolution, which was carried unanimously, and he then said the business of the present meeting was concluded.

Morpeth.—On Monday, Robert Joicey, the labourer on the Duke of Portland's property near this town, with his mother and sister, were brought before the coroner respecting the alleged murder of his father by poison. The man had made a full confession of his guilt, and there was strong reason to believe that the female prisoners were parties to the parricide. The prisoners, however, at the inquest declined to make any statement. The coroner recapitulated the circumstances of the case, and the jury found Ralph Joicey guilty of wilful murder, but added that there was nothing to implicate the female prisoners. Ralph Joicey was then committed to take his trial at the next assizes, and the women were discharged from custody.

Oxford.—Mr. Hutchinson, of Trinity College, Cambridge, was received into the Roman Catholic Church, at Birmingham, on Sunday last. The Rev. Mr. Oakeley, late fellow of Baliol, has entered as a student in theology at St. Edmund's College, Hertfordshire, under Dr. Griffiths, Vicar Apostolic of the London district. It is said that above 30 of the late parishioners of the Rev. Mr. Marshall, of Swallowcliff, Wilts, have followed the example of their pastor, and conformed to the Church of Rome.

Willenhall.—An explosion of a steam-engine boiler, attended with loss of life, injury to sixteen or seventeen persons, and considerable damage to property, took place at a colliery belonging to Messrs. G. C. Thorneycroft and Co., near Willenhall, last week. The erection of a new engine, for the purpose of draining mines belonging to Messrs. Thorneycroft, had been in progress for some months past, and on Monday, everything being complete, it was decided to set the engine to work. Mr. Thorneycroft and his partner, Mr. Perks, were present to see the working commence, with many workmen, and some persons from the neighbourhood, when the safety valves ceased to act, and the explosion instantly took place. Mr. Thorneycroft, who was standing near the boiler, was very badly scalded and bruised, and Edward Hood, an engineer, who had gone, from curiosity, to witness the starting of the engine, was found dead, being scalded and buried among the bricks from the boiler. Reece, the engineer, had both his legs broken, and was also much scalded. Mr. Perks and Mr. Jeavons, a relation of Mr. Thorneycroft, were also hurt, but not so much as some others, about sixteen persons being more or less injured. From seventy to eighty persons were on the premises, several of whom escaped injury.

Yarmouth.—The late murder of Mrs. Candler still excites attention in this town, and the man Yarham who was admitted evidence for the Crown at the trial has been traced to Gloucestershire, and brought back to Yarmouth to take his trial. This step was taken under the advice of the Attorney-General in consequence of a statement made by a Mrs. Dick, about a month since, who alleged that about three weeks after the trial Yarham made a confidant of her, and told her how the murder was perpetrated; admitting indeed that he was the man who killed Mrs. Candler, by cutting her throat. On being apprehended, he said he was aware of the circumstances of the affair from reading the newspapers, but denied the truth of Dick's statement, that he had confessed his guilt three weeks after his release from custody. He says he left Yarmouth 14 days after his release, and can prove it.

Railways.

An influential meeting was held last week in the City, by gentlemen interested in railway projects, with a view to the equitable arrangement of just demands, and the resistance of claims obviously made under the impression that the dread of ruinous law charges would induce compliance; to ascertain the legal liabilities of committee men, shareholders, and applicants for shares; and further, to elicit the actual circumstances of various railway projects—which are matters far too weighty and important for individual responsibility. It was unanimously resolved that, for the accomplishment of such purposes, a society should be formed, to be called the "Railway Mutual Protection Society," and Mr. D. W. Harvey, who had originated the meeting, was appointed President.—Many of the late railway schemes having proved abortive, the managers are proposing an arrangement of their affairs. The shareholders of the Royal North of Spain Company are to receive back 1*l.* per share, and will be entitled to an equal number of shares in the United Peninsular when it comes into operation, and on such shares 1*l.* will be considered to have been paid up. It was suggested that a committee should be appointed to inquire into past management, but the motion was negatived.—The Great Leeds and London Company return 1*l.* 10*s.* per share on 2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* paid. The expenses of the company have been enormous, and the committee are doing the best they can to reduce them.—The Great Manchester, Rugby, and Southampton attribute their failure to the want of proper management on the part of their engineer. The promoters have not yet arranged in what manner the expenses incurred shall be liquidated.—The Rugby, Derby, and Manchester is in a most embarrassed situation. Large sums have been paid for engineering and law expenses, but the money in hand would allow a return of 1*l.* 10*s.* per share, to those who had paid the deposits.—The Grand Junction and Midland Union scripholders are to receive back 1*l.* 1*s.* per share, allowing the remainder to lie in the custody of the directors by way of deposit till a future period, when the committee will be prepared to state the course they propose to adopt with reference to the prosecution of the undertaking and the balance of the deposits.—The Direct London and Exeter is also in a most unsettled state, and it has been determined to appoint a new committee of management to investigate its affairs. The committee it is understood have the power to issue shares to the extent required for making good the Parliamentary deposit, upon the condition that, if the necessary amount be not subscribed, the whole of the money received on such issue be returned without the least deduction for expenses. The company's accounts are to undergo a thorough investigation, and the statement when prepared is to be forwarded to each scripholder.—It is said that the Tring and Reigate project is to be given up—that the whole deposits are to be returned to the subscribers—and that the provisional committee have each subscribed 100*l.* to defray the preliminary expenses, in consequence of having been deceived by their engineer.—Notice has been sent to the West Midland, Manchester and Southampton, and Swindon and Birmingham Junction shareholders, stating that the failure in the payment of the deposits having rendered it inexpedient to attempt the completion of this project, the directors have resolved upon returning the entire amount of subscriptions.—Mr. Heathcote, of Longtonhall, chairman of the Staffordshire Potteries, and Liverpool and Manchester Direct, in a letter to the promoters, expresses his decided conviction that "our unfortunate scheme ought now to be abandoned, that all just demands upon the company ought to be forthwith discharged, and the surplus fund returned to the subscribers." It is understood that the deposits were only partially paid up, and the engineers have sent in a demand for 10,000*l.*—An agreement to amalgamate at par between the Sheffield, Ashton-under-Lyne, and Manchester; the Huddersfield Canal and Railway, the Sheffield and Lincolnshire Extension, the Great Grimsby and Sheffield Junction, and the Grimsby Dock Companies, has been concluded with satisfaction to the various parties interested.—The proposed experiments by the Gauge Commission, for testing the speed and tractive power of the narrow gauge as compared with the broad, upon the Manchester and Birmingham line, are postponed on account of the unfavourable weather.—On Friday, locomotives traversed the entire distance on the Canterbury, Ramsgate, and Margate branch of the South-Eastern.—On Monday the Sheffield and Manchester line was opened throughout, with the usual ceremonies, by the directors, and on Tuesday was opened to the public. The tunnel through which it passes has cost 200,000*l.*, and has taken seven years to complete it.—The Lords of the Admiralty have announced to Capt. Berkeley, M.P. that they will never sanction the bridge proposed to be erected by the South Wales Company at Hock Cribb, or over any other part of the Severn, which shall be detrimental to its free navigation.—The directors of the Great Western have recently purchased the reservoir and engine-house belonging to the Grand Junction Waterworks at Paddington, for the purpose of erecting a splendid terminus, the present one being found inconvenient. The erection of the building will be commenced shortly after Christmas.—A fatal accident occurred on Wednesday, within a mile from Thetford, on the Norwich Railway, by which the engine-driver and stoker of an up-train were killed. It appears that the engine ran off the line, about 200 yards, when it ran down an embankment and became embedded in the earth. In its progress, the chain, which connected the tender with the carriages, snapped, and to this circumstance chiefly the passengers were indebted for their safety, because the tender, having disconnected itself from the engine, fell right across the rails, and thus formed a barrier against the further progress of the carriages. If this fortunate circumstance had not taken place the carriages must have been dragged in the wake of the engine, and precipitated with it down the embankment. This is the first fatal accident that has occurred on that portion of the line called the Norfolk Railway, since its opening.

Prices and Traffic, by permission, from the List of Messrs. Hill, Fawcett, & Hill, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

Name of Railway. There marked thus * are not yet opened.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Week ending between Dec. 16. & Dec. 23.	Gross Receipts of Traffic. Corresponding Week, 1844.	6 Mon. Divi. Send Per Share. ½ Mon. £ s. d.	Amount of Shares. £	Amount paid up. £	Price, Friday, 4 o'clock. £
Birmingham, Glo'ster		2,302	2 0 0	100	all	125-30
Bristol, Birmingham
Bristol, Exeter			1 8 0	100	70	52-6
Bristol, Glo'ster			1 0 0	50	30	33-5
Chester, Holyhead	*	*		50	15	16-17
Eastern Counties	7,036	4,223	0 3 0†	avr.	14½	21-½
Eastern Union				50	20
Do. Extension				25	1½
Edinburgh, Glasgow	2,201	1,723	1 5 0	50	all	70-5
Grand Junction			2 10 0†	100	all
Great North of England		1,830	3 0 0	100	all	210-15
Great Western	17,335	16,702	3 4 0	100	80	780-5
Gt. South. & Western (I.)	*	*	*	50	15	20-2
Do. Extension	*	*	*	50	2½	17-20
Hull, Selby				50	all	102-4
Lancaster, Carlisle	*	*	*	50	25
Liverpool, Manchester		4 672	4 10 0	100	all
London, Birmingham		17,517	5 0 0	s.k.	100	220-5
London, Blackwall	643	595	0 3 0	avr.	16⅝	9-½
London, Brighton	4,186	3,639	1 10 0	50	all	65-6
London, Croydon	1,672	277	0 8 0	avr.	12½	22-½
London, Greenwich				avr.	13½	9½-10⅝
London, South-Western	5,516	5,671	2 0 0	avr.	41½	75-7
Manchester, Birmingham		3,225	1 0 0	40	40	78-80
Manchester, Bolt., Bury	944	780	2 14 0	122	92
Manchester, Leeds, Hull	4,857		2 16 0	100	72	130-6
Midland	16,231	10,027	2 2 6	stk.	100	153-8
Do. Birmingham, Derby				stk.	100	122-7
Newcastle, Carlisle	1,717	1,571	2 10 0	100	all
Newcastle, Darlington	2,454	1,614	4 0 0	25	all	58-60
North British	*	*	*	25	15	24-6
Northern, Eastern			1 2 6	50	45	64-6
Norwich, Brandon				20	14
Preston, Wyre	430	343		50	all
Sheffield, Manchester	943	561	5 p. Cent	100	95
South Devon	*	*	*	50	20	25-7
South-Eastern, Dover	5,451	4,517	0 13 4	avr.	33½	35-½
Yarmouth, Norwich			0 16 0	20	all	26-6
York, North Midland	4,737	2,355	2 10 0	50	all	103-10
Do. Scarboro' Branch	*	*	*	25	all	38-4
Do. Selby			0 12 8	50	20	72-6
French Railways.
Boulogne, Amiens	*	*	*	20	8	11-½
Orleans, Vierzon	*	*	*	20	10	16½-17
Orleans, Bordeaux	*	*	*	20	4	11½-¾
Paris, Orleans	5,788	4,297	1 6 8½	20	all	47-8
Paris, Rouen	4,626	3,929	0 12 2	50	all	87½-8½
Rouen, Havre				20	14	26½-7

Ireland.

Dublin.—The preparations for vacating the official departments in Dublin Castle, have been suspended in consequence of the late Ministerial changes in London.—Lord Westmeath and many other magistrates of Westmeath recently made an application to Government for a special commission and a coercion act. A Crown solicitor has been sent down to inquire into the state of the calendar, and the result of his investigation is that there is no necessity for a special commission or a coercion act.—Pursuant to requisition to the Mayor and the High Sheriff of the county, a most numerous and highly respectable meeting was held at Limerick last week, consisting of the nobility, gentry, and clergy, Protestant and Roman Catholic, of the city and county, for the purpose, in the words of the requisition, of recommending to Her Majesty's government the immediate adoption of some plan for having the Irish railways adjudicated upon in Dublin. Among those present were Mr. Smith O'Brien, M.P., Earl of Clare, Earl of Dunraven, Lord Gort, Sir Augustus Devere, Bart., Mr. Mansell, Tervoe; Mr. Villiers, high sheriff of the county, &c. The greatest unanimity prevailed, and resolutions in favour of the object of the meeting were carried. The town council of Cork have adopted resolutions to the same effect.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association was held on Monday in Conciliation-hall, Mr. Clements, barrister, in the chair. The Hall was unusually crowded. Mr. O'Connell read a letter from Mr. J. O'Neil, in favour of the Whig Government, and said that he had succeeded in restoring harmony among the Repealers of Waterford, who, as a proof of their devotion to nationality, had that day forwarded the sum of 40*l.* to the funds of the Association. Sir Winston Barron and Mr. Wyse should yield at the next election to the better claims of Sir B. M. Wall and Mr. Meagher, unflinching advocates of domestic legislation. In conclusion he read a letter from Dr. M'Hale, Archbishop of Tuam, warning them against trusting too much to the Whigs, whom he described as "a political party that will resort to their usual arts of seductive patronage to betray the Irish people from the pursuit of that measure which alone is worthy the solicitude of all classes of Irishmen." A letter was also read from the Hon. Pierce Butler, M.P., regretting the recent frequency of assassinations in Kilkenny and other parts of the country. Mr. O'Connell joined in expressing his horror at these atrocities, and brought up a Report from the Election Committee, containing the following resolutions:—"1. That it is the imperative and sacred duty of the constituencies of Ireland to return as representatives none but Repealers, members of this association, at the ensuing elections. 2. That every constituency that shall elect, and every individual voter that shall support, a non-Repealer, where a Repeal candidate may start, shall be deemed guilty of treason to Ireland."—Mr. O'Connell having moved the adoption of the report said he was anxious to address a few words to the meeting on the subject of the crisis at which they had arrived. They were in a strange state of puzzle. Sir Robert Peel was Minister ten days ago—Lord John Russell had become Minister in the interval, and he believed he was correct in saying there was no minister at that moment. That was the state of England. He did not consider that the Tories would be able to form an administration. They could, assuredly have no confidence in Sir Robert Peel—they had declared that fact loudly and bitterly—they could have no reliance on him. It should likewise be remembered that the Irish could have no confidence in him. Last week he was a Leaguer, this week he may be a protectionist, next week he may be for something modified; and he was so much attached to a sliding-scale, that he might get on a sliding-scale himself, and slip through their fingers. They were placed in a curious position. They had no Government, and no person could precisely tell why. They could not tell why the Whigs did not form an administration—they could not tell why the Tories ceased to be a Government. All they knew was that both Whigs and Tories had quarrelled amongst themselves, and that they agreed upon nothing but to differ. There was only one point on which they were perfectly unanimous, and that was to differ among themselves. What was all that to Ireland? that was the real question to consider. The present crisis was most beneficial to Ireland—it raised their expectations—it gave them the certainty of success, if they were true to themselves and to their country. What cared they for Whigs or Tories. Their cause was the cause of Ireland—they were on a majestic march to nationality, and the changes and shiftings of administrations only exhibited the throes and struggles of that species of political tyranny that would debase them, dividing and separating them from each other. The present was the time to rally together; every man should be a Repealer now. On that day week he had expressed his concurrence in the sentiments expressed in the letter of Mr. Smith O'Brien. That patriotic gentlemen called emphatically for a "shout for Repeal, and no compromise." And he (Mr. O'Connell) repeated his words, and added to them "Repeal and no compromise." No matter who was Minister, nothing should ever be able to divert them from the pursuit of their object. Last week he had expressed his intention of supporting Lord John Russell on the subject of the Corn-laws; he had promised to attend constantly during the debates on the Corn question, and that he would use his influence with the Irish members to attend likewise; that he would vote, and that he would induce his friends to vote, in every division with Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright. He had no great liking for Sir Robert Peel; he knew what kind of a trickster he was, but still he would be equally ready to support him if he would undertake to make food plentiful, and give cheap bread to the people. But, while he said that he would not hesitate to do ample justice to Lord John Russell. That noble lord had placed himself in a prominent station of the highest honour. Whatever his conduct as a Whig might have been, it was impossible to contemplate his conduct and mode of acting with regard to the Corn-laws without feeling a veneration for his person, and concurrence in his opinions. Lord John Russell had behaved admirably on that occasion, and he would go with him so far as he behaved himself, and not one inch further. Lord J. Russell had pledged himself to a fixed duty and against a total repeal of the Corn-laws; but he found that famine was approaching in England, that distress was increasing in the agricultural districts: he saw at once that the amount of wages paid in the manufacturing districts would diminish; he beheld great want in England, and he perceived that in Ireland we were approaching to a famine, and consequently pestilence; he did not allow the fear of being taunted with inconsistency to retard him in his career—he abandoned, and manfully threw up his former opinions when he arrived at the conclusion that they were wrong, and adopted opinions favourable to the health and prosperity of the people of both countries.—A Voice: More power to him.—Mr. O'Connell: More power to him. But he wished to be understood that he was not justifying any other act of his. He was not justifying the conduct of the Whigs, or speaking in their praise as a party; but he spoke in honest commendation of their leader. He was vindicating the ancient fame of his family, which had given many martyrs to liberty, and produced many friends to the constitutional freedom of this country. He therefore loudly and distinctly applauded the recent conduct of Lord John Russell, but he would not the less vote with Sir Robert Peel, if Sir Robert declared in favour of the abolition of the Corn-laws. The hon. gentleman, having proceeded at considerable length to point out the means by which he considered the Repeal cause might be advanced, then observed that his plan at present was to get rid of the Corn-laws, and by that means put a stop to the famine and consequent destruction of the Irish people. He would give no preference to Whig over Tory, or Tory over Whig—if ever he had given a party vote he would never do so again, nor would he ever vote for any measure except that which he considered beneficial to his country. In conclusion he gave notice that he would on the next day of meeting call upon the Repeal members to assemble together and determine on what line of conduct they ought to pursue under existing circumstances. In his opinion there would be further changes before an administration would be formed.—Mr. Grattan, M.P., having addressed the meeting, the rent for the week was announced to be 218*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.*

Law.

Winter Assizes, Liverpool.—Revolt on the High Seas.—Thomas Sheazle, John Copplestone, Herman Hinka, Thomas Bayle, Joe M'Cann, and Henry Matthews, were indicted under a statute passed in the reign of William III., for that they being mariners on board of the ship Champlain, on the high seas, did make a revolt in the said ship. This case has been already noticed, the circumstances having caused some attention at the time. The men had revolted, and afterwards bored holes in the vessel's bottom, and refused to pump out the water. The captain behaved very resolutely with the mutineers, and declared, when they refused to pump the vessel, that she should sink with them before he would allow her to be put about. Mr. Justice Williams summed up, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty against all the prisoners. His lordship, after commenting upon the enormity of the offence, sentenced them severally to periods of imprisonment. Bayle to be imprisoned for 12 calendar months, Matthews for nine, and the others for six months each.—York.—Murder of a Wife by Her Husband.—George Watson was charged with having, on the 1st August last, at Selby, committed the crime of wilful murder, by inflicting a mortal wound on the body of Elizabeth Watson, his wife. The facts of the case were clearly established; but a plea of insanity from intemperance was set up for the defence, and the question being left by Baron Platt to the jury, they acquitted the prisoner on the ground that he was insane when he gave the wound.—Murder by Poisoning.—Jane Windsor, aged 28, was charged with the wilful murder of Joseph Windsor, her step-child, at Easingwold, in the North Riding, on the 17th July last, by giving him a quantity of arsenic. The poisoning was variously stated in the indictment, as administered in tea, in treacle, and in bread. The evidence in this case was entirely circumstantial, excepting as to the fact of the child having been poisoned, for arsenic had been found in the stomach by post mortem examination. The conduct of the prisoner towards the child was proved to be generally harsh, but on the other hand the prisoner received the most unequivocal testimonials relative to her kindness of disposition and general character up to the time of the present transaction. The Jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty.

Central Criminal Court.—Railway Frauds.—Edmund Thomas Yeakell, who pleaded guilty some sessions back to the forgery of the Parliamentary deed of a railway company, and upon whom judgment had been respited, was brought up to receive sentence.—Mr. Baron Alderson said that the offence imputed to the prisoner, and to which he had confessed his guilt, was by no means uncommon in these days of gambling speculations, and it was a crime of a very serious nature.—The prisoner, interrupting the Court, said that at the time he executed the deed he was unconscious that he was doing anything that was wrong. He did it on a promise that he should have the written authority of the party whose name he had affixed to the deed.—Mr. Baron Alderson remarked, that this was a defence which, by pleading guilty, the prisoner had abandoned. The judgment had been deferred on a promise that the prisoner should furnish information which would lead to the conviction of more guilty parties, and he understood that the prisoner had communicated all he knew, but that all the information he possessed had proved to be of no use whatever to the interests of public justice. The sentence he (Mr. Baron Alderson) should pass was the lowest term of imprisonment the law imposed for the offence of which the prisoner had been convicted, and that sentence was, that he be imprisoned and kept to hard labour in the House of Correction for the space of two years.

Police.—The Case of the Tory.—On Tuesday, Capt. Johnstone was again brought before the magistrate at the Thames Police Court for final examination; and additional evidence having been given at some length, Mr. Broderip asked the prisoner if he had anything to say. The prisoner, under the direction of his solicitor, was silent. Mr. Broderip: Prisoner at the bar, it is now my duty to send you to take your trial at the next session of the Central Criminal Court, for the wilful murder of Thomas Reason, also for the wilful murder of William Mars, and also for the wilful murder of W. Rambert. I have, moreover, to commit you to take your trial on the charge of feloniously wounding Stephen Cone, Thomas Lee, David Johnson, Thomas Gair, Joseph Ruelan (Morris), Wm. Burton, Robert Thompson, Andrew Nelson, Wm. Beresford, and Peter Curtis. The prisoner was then removed from the bar in a very feeble condition.

Miscellaneous.

A New Planet.—Mr. Hind and the Astronomer Royal have addressed letters to the Times this week, stating that they "have received letters from their correspondents in Germany, stating that Mr. Hencke, of Driessen, had found on the 8th inst., between two stars of the 9th magnitude in Taurus, another also of the 9th magnitude, which he never saw before, and which there is reason to believe is a new planet. Mr. Hind states that he has not been able to find it, and Professor Airy does not state that it has been seen at Greenwich: but Sir J. South, in a letter published in the Times of Wednesday, says, that he observed the new star without difficulty on Friday night, from his observatory at Kensington. Sir J. South gives the following directions for finding it:—"The stars in the head of the constellation Taurus resemble the letter 'V,' and which, when they are on the meridian (as they now are at about 10 o'clock at night), is inclined to the horizon at an angle of about 30 degrees. The lower side of the V is bounded by the magnificent star Aldebaran to the left, and by Gamma Tauri to the right; whilst the upper side is formed of Epsilon Tauri on the left, and Gamma Tauri on the right. Between Aldebaran and Gamma is a group of stars composed of the two Thetas and others, whilst the three Deltas and others are similarly situated in the upper side, each group being nearly in the centre of its respective side—circumstances to be borne in mind, lest one side be taken for the other, as I have frequently seen done when a night-glass has been the telescope in use. Direct then a night glass to the group of stars in the lower side of the V, so that Aldebaran and Gamma Tauri be seen on the lower part of the field on the left, and fix upon a point which shall make with them an equilateral triangle, the apex of which shall point upwards, and that is the spot where Mr. Hencke saw his star. It is moreover rendered remarkable by being just above the base of a small isosceles triangle of stars, the apex of which is turned downwards; and commencing at this apex star, reckoning from right to left, we have A or the apex star of the seventh magnitude, B of the fifth magnitude, and C of the 6th. Hence by reference to this triangle A B C the place which the supposed planet or comet occupied on the 8th may be found, although the field of the night glass employed be not sufficiently large to admit their being in it during any examination extended beyond the place assigned by Mr. Hencke to his star. But if a telescope be used whose field of view does not include some degrees, then as the stars Aldebaran and Gamma Tauri, by those who know where to look for them, are nearly as easily seen with the naked eye as is the planet Jupiter, all that is necessary will be for the observer to fix on a point in the heavens which being below them shall make an equilateral triangle with them, and that will be the place of Mr. Hencke's star. If he then directs his telescope to this place, he will see the triangle A B C, if not in his telescope, certainly in its finder, that is if the latter be good for anything, and may by its means move his telescope so that he may certainly view in it the guide stars to Mr. Hencke's star without difficulty; indeed the stars B and C are visible to the naked eye, if the observer know where to look for them. The diameter of the field of an ordinary night-glass is about six degrees; Aldebaran and Gamma Tauri are nearly four degrees asunder; Aldebaran is of the first magnitude, Gamma Tauri of the third. The apex star A of the triangle A B C is distant from B and C nearly 1 degree; and B is distant from C nearly 1 degree and a half. To find this planet (if it be one) a large telescope is now indispensable: it will be well, however, to have four silver wires in its eye-piece, crossing each other so as to divide the circumference of the field into eight equal arcs, care being taken to insert such wires as from their thickness shall be easily perceptible without artificial illumination when the telescope is directed to the heavens. By bringing then any star to the centre of the field where the wires decussate, there will be no difficulty in laying down an extemporaneous map of all the stars visible in the field of the telescope, and, this being referred to, a change of place of any one of them to any amount will scarcely pass unnoticed. In such manner was it that, with an ordinary night-glass held in the hand out of his library window, Olbers discovered Pallas and Vesta, the former resembling a star of the 7th magnitude, the latter one of the 6th. Whilst with an achromatic of about 2 inches aperture and about 30 inches focus, with which when at Gottingen in 1832 I could see no trace of Jupiter's belts, and which would not show his first and second satellites without difficulty, Harding discovered the planet Juno, although, as he told me, it had at the time the appearance of a star only of the 9th magnitude."

BIRTHS—On the 11th inst., at Holkham, the Countess of Leicester, of a daughter—12th inst., at Riverhead, the lady of C. R. Carter Pettley, Esq., of a daughter—12th inst., at Burlington, Yorkshire, the lady of Thomas Pricket, Esq., of a son—12th inst., Mrs. Madge, of Highbury-grange, of a daughter—12th inst., at the Rye, Peckham, Mrs. Thomas Savory, of a daughter—13th inst., the wife of William Henry Bensey, Esq., of Slough, in the county of Buckingham, of a son—14th inst.

MARRIAGES—On the 11th inst., H. Drummond, Esq., 2d son of H. H. Drummond, of Blair Drummond, M.P. for Perth, to Lady Anne Georgina Douglas, daughter of Charles, late Marquis of Queensberry—11th inst., the Rev. Stenning Johnson, of Merton College, Oxford, B.A., to Emily, third daughter of the Rev. William Marshall, of Chickerell Rectory—13th inst.,

DEATHS—On the 5th of August last, aged 78, John Blaxland, Esq., of Newington, Sydney, New South Wales, for many years a member of the Governor's and Legislative Council of that colony—5th inst., at his residence in Darlington, Captain Thomas Havelock, late Paymaster of the 43d Light Infantry, aged 84—15th inst., at her residence, Regency-square, Brighton, aged 71, Miss Elizabeth Langley Watts, the only daughter and heiress of John Langley Watts, Esq., formerly of Norwich—15th inst., the Rev. John Brown, M.A., vicar of St. Mary's, Leicester—16th inst., at Inverness, George Stockwell, Esq., late of the Bengal Civil Service—17th inst., at his residence in Bognor, Sir John Chetwode, Bart., M.P. for Buckingham, aged 82—17th inst., at her house in Baker-street, Portman-square, Miss Charlotte Osborne, last surviving daughter of the late Robert Osborne, Esq., formerly Recorder of Hull.

NOTT'S PATENT STOVES still maintain their decided superiority over every other. They give out twice the heat with half the fuel, and will burn ten hours without replenishing. Twelve years' experience in churches, chapels, private dwellings, warehouses, and public offices, fully confirms this statement. They cannot possibly explode, or give out offensive gases, as many others do. They are adapted not only for warming the apartment in which they stand, but for the circulation of hot water to conservatories, or any distant parts of the building. Orders addressed to Nott's Stove Warehouse, 80, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, will be attended to.

A liberal allowance to ironmongers, builders, &c.

PHOSPHORIC RAT POISON.—This preparation is offered to the Public with the greatest confidence, being decidedly superior to all those poisons containing arsenic and other minerals. It is most greedily eaten by rats and mice as long as it is offered to them and invariably proves certain destruction. Prepared only by Edward Purser, 46, New Bridge-street, London. Sold in pots, with full directions for use, at 4*s.*, 8*s.*, and 20*s.* each.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters post-paid.

HUGH CROGHAN, Gardener for 15 years to the late Rt. Hon. Lord Bateman, of Shobdon Court, begs leave to inform the Nobility and Gentry he is leaving in consequence of his Lordship's death. He has the management of Pines, Vines, Peaches, Greenhouse Plants, Pleasure-ground, and an extensive Kitchen-garden. He is a married man with a family. Can have an undeniable character.—Direct to Hugh Croghan, Shobdon Court, near Leominster.

TO THE NURSERY AND SEED TRADE.

A Person of middle age, who has a thorough knowledge of his business in all its branches, is desirous of employment in the above line. He has been accustomed both to town and country business, and is well known to most of the trade. He is prepared to give security to a reasonable amount, or to advance a moderate sum as partner in an established concern.—Direct X. Y. Z., care of Mr. Nutting, 46, Cheapside, London.

AS FARM BAILIFF.—A native of Scotland, who is thoroughly acquainted with the best modes of Agriculture, Draining, and Improving of Land, Subsoiling, Breeding and Management of Stock, Buying and Selling, Planting, &c., can produce satisfactory references as to general character and ability.—Direct care of Messrs. J. and C. Whalley, Seedsmen, 12, St. George's-crescent, Liverpool.

LAND AGENCY.

MR. DONALDSON, Professor of Agriculture in the Agricultural College, Hoddesdon, Herts, and author of several Agricultural Works, wishes to be employed in the Management of Landed Property, occasional or permanent. Mr. Donaldson was regularly bred to practical Agriculture with the most eminent farmers and breeders in Britain, and has had a very varied and extensive practice of the art on the estates of Noblemen of the highest rank. Has been much employed in modern Draining and Planting, in the Erection and Repairs of Farm Buildings, in the Letting of Lands and Drawing of Rents, and in the general Management of Landed Property. Mr. Donaldson may be consulted on Agricultural Subjects on easy terms, and permanent services obtained at moderate rate. High references for character and capability can be given if required.—Hoddesdon, Dec. 20.